Two Extremes.

During the dark ages of the present dispensation, when Popery reigned with almost unlimited sway, any departure from the doctrines, or practices of the Catholic church was punished with excommunication, anathema, and death. Toleration has no place in the vocabulary of the Romish Hierarchy; and long after the commencement of the Reformation did the same anti-christian spirit, begotten of Popery, prevail in many of the Protestant churches. Thousands were imprisoned or put to death for non-conformity to rituals or established formulas. This was one extreme.

God designed that upon the American continent, and in this our highly favored land, the spirit of intolerant persecution should be first shorn of its temporal power. Roger Williams and William Penn, were among the first who taught that the entire separation of Church and State, and universal, civil, and religious liberty is the only true condition of a Chrstian country; and now, at length, after a recent manifestation of the power of the Most High, to cause the wrath of man to praise him, our happy land, favored in this above all other countries, enjoys that blessed state. Oh, how our hearts ought to flow out in gratitude to our Heavenly Father, who has thus in mercy remembered us, the posterity of those that were driven by the bloody hand of persecution to these then desert shores! But while gratitude wells up spontaneously from the hearts of the Lord's people, they have a great and responsible duty to perform in defending the "faith once delivered to the saints," by the Son of God, against contamination with error.

The changed condition of things, brought about by the destruction of temporal power to inflict penalties in spiri ual matters, causes danger to arise in the opposite direction. Under the garb and in the name of charity, a laxity of religious belief, has set in. Many of the protestant sects are trying to ignore the differences of faith and practice, which are among them, to effect a union—so called. But a union established upon the basis of an unexpressed dis-unity of sentiment, is a contradiction in terms, and cannot, from the very nature of the case, exist in a Christian point of view. The enemy of the Kingdom of Heaven, at this juncture, when so many are crying union, union! takes the opportunity to sow tares among the wheat, and false doctrines are disseminated on every hand. One Minister maintains the Divinity of Christ; another that he was a very good man, and that any one may be the son of God in the same sense he was, by imitating his holy life. One proclaims that the soul of man is an immortal spirit; another, that it is merely the atmospheric breath of mortal life, and that the only immortality which pertains to man is in the resurrected bodies of the just. One asserts that the new birth, spoken of by Christ to Nicodemus is an entrance into spiritual life—a consequence of faith and repentance—prefigured and consummated by baptism; another, that it means the resurrection of the body from the grave. One holds forth that the immersion of believers alone is valid baptism; another that sprinkling infants will do. Now these adverse propositions are upon vital points of Christianity, and if one upon each point is truth, the other must be error; for God certainly did not give his will to man at such loose ends, that it may be constructed to mean anything, or nothing at all. Although those holding these diversified sentiments, may agree to ignore them in conversation and in their social religious meetings, for the sake of expediency, or to avoid disputes, yet, when ministering to the unconverted, they can not refrain from dwelling upon the subjects named; because they are parts of the very sum and substance of the gospel; hence it requires no great depth of thought to conceive how far such union would extend, or how long it would last, if those who are set for the defence of the word of God perform their duty. A real Christian union can exist alone between those who see eye to eye, and speak the same thing—the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, as it is in Jesus.

Between the two extremes—an intolerant persecuting spirit, willing to force compliance with dogmas by temporal power, on the one hand—and a faith, lukewarm, lax, and yielding for the sake of expediency, on the other, there is a proper mean, sustained by the word of God. It is the duty of the Lord's people to be very patient with those who hold error, in trying to convince and convert them: but, at the same time, they should be unyielding in defense of their faith; never in any manner compromising the truth, for the sake of being "men pleasers." "A man that is a heretic after the first and second admonition reject; knowing that such are subverted." (Titus 3 : 10).

Two passages will now be given to prove that the Lord Jesus Christ forbids his people to permit those to teach among them who are thus subverted; requiring them to be placed outside the pale of his church. It is remarkable that these strong condemnations of false doctrines, false prophecies and unholy practices; and this expelling duty of the Church, were announced through the instrumentality of John, whose almost constant theme, as shown by his Epistles, was brotherly love. This cirsumstance shows, in a very strong light, the line of demarcation between truth and error; and teaches us that Christian fellowship must not go beyond that line.

The first passage to which allusion was made above, is a sharp rebuke of the Church at Pergamus; because she retained within her fold. those that practised a species of idolatry, and those who held false doctrine. It is in the following words: "I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Baalam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitaines, which thing I hate. Repent, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth." (Rev. 2 : 14-16.)

The other passage is a severe rebuke of the Church at Thyatira, as follows; "I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols." (Rev. 2: 20.)

The sword of the Lord's mouth is the word of eternal truth. This weapon, we are taught by these passages, (and not the carnal sword,) must be unsparingly used for the suppression of all spiritual apostacy. We also infer from these scriptures, that any church which does not use the sword of the spirit, and the power of expulsion against those who may attempt to promulgate error in her midst, will have that sword brought to bare against herself, by some instrumentality, which the Lord will institute: her candlestick may possible be removed out of its place.

God's Promises.

"For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen, unto the glory of God by us." 2 Cor. 1 : 20.

God made a will or testament in behalf of his people. It cannot be altered—nothing can denude us of our patrimony. The bequest is his own exceeding "great and precious promises." What a heritage!—All that the sinner requires—all that the sinner's God can give. In this testamentary deed there are no contingencies, no peradventures. The Testator commences it with a sure guarantee for its every jot and title being fulfilled; "Verily, verily I say unto you." He endorses every promise and every page with a "yea and Amen." "God, willing more abundantly to show to the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath." But who provided such a rich promised Treasury?

What is the source, where the fountain head, from which these streams of mercy flow to the church? In him. Believer, from Jesus every promise centres: pardon, peace, adoption, consolation, eternal life,—all in Him. In him you are chosen, called, justified, sanctified, glorified. You have in possession all the blessings of present grace; you have in reservation allthe happiness of coming glory; and he is faithful that promised. Your friend may deceive you—the world has deceived you—He never will. Oh, he is too kind a friend to deceive us. Brethren, let us rely on his promises; for he is indeed a faithful Creator. Myriads in glory are there to tell how that not one thing hath failed of all that the Lord their God hath spoken. Rely on this faithfulness. He gave his Son for you, "that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." And where do these promises beam most brightly? Like the stars, it is in the night of trouble—in the midnight of trial—when the sun of earthly prosperity has set—when deep is calling to deep, and wave to wave; when tempted, bereaved, beaten down with a great fight of afflictions: then it is that the promises are the brightest and clearest.

Oh! who could bear life's stormy wave,
Did not thy word of love
Come brightly bearing through the gloom,
A palm branch from above?

Then sorrow touched by thee, grows bright,
With more than rapture's ray;
As darkness shows us worlds of light,
We never saw by day.

But the night of sorrow cannot, in itself, give us the comfort of the divine promises. It is only in him these promises can be discerned in their lustre. Reader, if out of Christ, these precious promises shine in vain to thee, they have to the carnal eye no beauty or brightness. But to the believers, they are a lamp to their feet. Unless they come to this blessed Master and do his will, they cannot obtain these promises. And again I say, without these commandments of Christ they cannot have the holy Spirit, and if they have not the Holy Spirit, they have no promise. Our adorable Redeemer—the great High Priest—was himself anointed with the Holy Spirit. That anointing oil, poured upon the church's living head, runs down to the skirts of his garments, anointing, as it flows, all his members; and those that are lowest and humblest—nearest the skirts—receive the most. Oh! let this be our position, at the feet of Jesus. Reader, if unconverted, at the feet of Jesus you can learn the way to heaven, if you are willing to learn of him. But if you are proud, heady, high-minded, you cannot learn of him; because he does not teach such. But let those who have confessed Christ, have on the whole armor of God, and fight manfully, that we may obtain that promise—eternal life. Blessed thought, of living with Jesus forever! O! brethren, let us pray for one another more, that we may keep on the rock, and that we do not slip aside; for I believe we are in the last times, and perhaps he might come when we are not watching, and we might not obtain the promise, of being where he is.

Ministerial Labor.

Let no true minister of the Gospel be discouraged when he has but small congregations before him. Most of the prosperous in this world have had as mall beginning, without which they would ever be unqualified to estimate the just value of that which is greater. Remember what a small class God had to instruct in the garden of Eden; and how he failed to manifest the least sign of disappointment, but exhibited a perfect delight in teaching the happy pair.

Christ was often contented with a small number, and improved every moment by instructing others at all times; nor did he fail to impart the most sublime thoughts simply because he had a small number of hearers. The most sublime thoughts and beautiful ideas were often freely exhibited to small numbers, much to their edification.

He who desires to prosper in his ministerial labors, must be energetic in small, as well as great things. Labor with zeal and energy before a few, and then you will be the better prepared to accomplish greater. To be faithful and successful in great things, you must first learn the art of disposing of them, by taking care of those that are smaller. Make it a rule, that whatever you find to do, must be done with energy and perseverance upon your part, and you will not fail to find similar manifestations upon the part of others. Be truly in earnest about everything you do, whether great or small, and perhaps you will accomplish enough of small things to make one great one.

J. H. MOORE.

Urbana, Ill.

To blame is easy enough; with some, it is all of a piece with the hardness of their temperaments; but to do this delicately, how shall we learn that? I answer, Love, and then say what you will. Men will bear any thing if love be there.

The Family Circle.

Haemweh.

By H. Harbaugh, D. D.

The following beautiful poem was written by the late H. Harbaugh. He has written a number of poems in the Pennsylvania Dutch, and Das schtarb Hatz an der Krick, and Die alta Leera-heemet have gained great celebrity for their author. These two poems were extensively published and commented on in Germany, and, on account of the novelty of the dialect, were lectured upon at some of the great universities of that country.

It is customary to ridicule the Pennsylvania Dutch, but I submit it to the candor of any man whether this poem does not exhibit its capacity to express the most delicate shades of thought, and the deepest pathos? I have heard Haemweh several times read in the presence of some of our Pennsylvania Dutch, and it invariably moved them to tears:

Ich wees net was die Ursach is'—
Wees net warum Ich's thu':
Un jedes Yohr mach ich der weg
Der alta Haemath zu.
Hab wenig nix zu suche' dort,
Ke Erbschaft un ke Geld;
Un' doch treibt mich das Haem-gefiel
So stark wie alle Welt:
Nord starr Ich ewe ab, un geh'
Wie Owa schon gemelt.

Wie nacher das Ich komm zum Zeil
Wie sterker will Ich geh,' Vor Eppes in meim Hertz werd letz
Un' thut mir kreislich weh,
Der letschte Hivel spring Ich nuf,
Un' ep Ich drowa bin
Streck Ich mich uf so hoch Ich kan
Un' guk mit luschta hin,
Ich seh's alt Stehaus durch die Baem,
Un' wos Ich wer schon drin.

Guk wie der Kutcha Shansta schmok't
Wie oft hab Ich sel k'seh!
Wann Ich draus in de Felder war.
A Buwele young un' kle.
O sensicht die Fenschter scheine dort?
Sie gucke roth wie Blut;
Hab oft considert,—doch net g'wist.
Das sell die Sonn so thut:
Ya, manches wes en kind noch net,
Wos alter, wers al net gut!

Wie gleich Ich seile Bubbla Baem
Sie stonn wie Brieder dart:
Un' wie en Gipple—gwis ich leb!
Hocht allaweil en Starr!
S'Gipple baigt sich guk wie's gaunsht,
Er hebt sich aber fescht.
Ich seh sei rothe Fluigel plain
Wan er sei fettere wescht:
Will wette das sie Freile hot
Uf seinem Baem a Nescht.

O, es gedenkt mir noch ganz gut.
Wo selle verry Baeme
Net groesser als en welshkorn-stock,
Gebrocht sen warre Haem.
Die Mamme war ans Grandats g'west,
Dort ware Baem wie die;
Drei Wiplein hot sie mit gebrocht
Un' g'sat: "Dort plantz sie hie."
Mir hens gethu, un' glaubscht das now
Dort selie Baem sin sie!

Guk! werklich ich bin schier am Haus!
Wie schnell get doch die Zeit!
Wann mer so in Gedanke geht
So wees mer net wie weit
Dort is der Shop, die Welshkorn Crib,
Die Cider press dort draus;
Dort is die Scheur, un dort die Spring,
Frish quilt das Wasser raus;
Un' guk! die same alt klapboard Fens
Un's Taerly vor em Haus.

Alles is still!—sie wissa net
Das Epper Fremdes kommt,
Ich denk der alte Watch is Tod,
Schonst wer er raus gejumpt;
For er hot als erschrecklich bruillt
Wan er hot's Taerle g'hoert;
Es war da Travlers greislich bang
Sie werra gans verzehrt,
Ke g'fohr—er hot paar mol gegautzt,
Nord is er um gekert.

Alles is still!—die Tare is zu!
Ich steh—besinne mich!
Es rappelt doch e wenig now,
Dort hinne in der Kuich.
Ich geh net nei—Ich kan noch net
Mei hertz fuilt schwer un krank;
Ich geh e wenigh uf die Borch
Un hok mich uf die Bank—
Es sent mich niemand wan Ich heul,
Hinter der Trauwarank!

Zwe Bletz sin do uf derra Borch,
Die halt Ich hoch in acht,
Bis meines Leben's Sonn versinkt
In stiller Todes Nacht!
Wo Ich vom alte Vater haus
S'erscht mol bin ganga fort,
Stand mei Mamme weinend da
An sellem Riegel dort!
Un nix is mir so heilig now
Als grada seller Ort!

Ich kan sie Heit noch schma steh
Ihr Schnuptuch in der hand!
Die Bacha roth—die Auga, nass—
O wie sie doch do stand!
Dort gab Ich ihr my Ferrewell,
Un' weinte als Ich's gab,
S'war's letzte mol in derre Welt,
Das Ich's ihr gewa hab!
Before Ich widder komma bin
War sie in ihrem Grab!

The Old Couple.

The old house, so mossy and brown with gray sloping roof and cumbrous chimney—the lawn with its carpet of cowslips and dasies—the tall trees, a century old, with branches covered with foliage so dense that the wild birds sang in concert amid its shade—there, side by side, on the old oaken bench, beside the open door, at the sunset hour, sit the happy old pair bowed with age, yet young in heart, for time, with its many cares and changes, has not had power to dim the lustre of their true affections.

A smile lights up her aged face, as she bows her head to catch the tones of his well-known voice, that brings back the happy dreams of girlhood—that voice that won by gentle love her early affection and smoothed her cares and sorrows through life. The twilight shadows deepen, yet they heed them not; but, seated more closely to each other,s side, they have left the present and gone far, far back into the past. Sweet remembrance recalls their youthful hours, and in the bright recollections of the past they are again lovers—young, happy and free. A new world is before them, and life is a path of golden sunshine. He sees her a bride dressed in dazzling white—her bright eyes full of trusting love—her soft hair falling in sunny folds on her snow-white shoulder—and, with her trembling hand within his own, he feels again the life blood quicken in his heart, and, gushing from that pure fountain, goes bounding through his veins. O, what a thrill of pleasure enlivens and animates that aged frame, as he recalls the happy pride that filled his heart, when he brought her home to dwell beneath this roof to cheer and grace his home; and, as time sped on, the rosy little prattlers gathered around to bless their love. These were the happiest moments of their peaceful and tranquil life; but, like a blissful dream to bright too last, those little cherubs passed away to a bright land, and left their sad impression of sorrow in furrowed brows as now they sat silently alone. Yea alone they sit in their old age, awaiting the summons that will call and unite them above with their buds of innocence now blooming in glory, and waiting there to welcome them to enjoy eternal youth in Heaven.

For the COMPANION.

O Death, Thou Cruel Reaper!

[Written relative to the death of my sister S. C. V. S.]

What! O Death, hast thou chosen another shining mark in that family? Would not one loved one from that happy circle suffice thee? Nay, nay, the mail brings me the sad intelligence that thou hast taken another, and she an opening flower—just emerging into womanhood—nearly "sweet sixteen." "A devoted child," writes the father, "one whom I set a very high estimation upon, but now she is gone to return no more forever, so farewell, my daughter" O, death, truly thou art no respecter of persons. Once more thou hast plunged the dagger of sorrow into the bosom of that family, so as to make the father say, "My heart is almost broken, and much that gave a pleasing countenance to my family, to greet me on my return, is gone." The mother that can sorrow as mother's can, must endure the stroke, and dear sisters and brothers must deeply feel the loss of a dear sister. Truly, Death, thou may'st sing:

"Ye call me a cruel reaper,
And say that I love to mow,
The fairest and sweetest blossoms
And lay their young beauty low."

Another warning, my young and blooming readers, to consider the uncertainty of life. Little did I think, when, a few months ago, I took the parting hand of dear cousin Sarah, so buoyant in health, that ere the close of the year those sparkling eyes should be closed in death, and that throbbing bosom should be still in death's close embrace. But it is so; and O God! should we murmur at the dispensation of thy providences? For wise purposes thou hast called this, another from that home; perchance she was too lovely to be left here amid the influences of a sinful world. And death again may sing:

"Ah, yes! I'm a fighting angel of light,
On a mission of mercy sent,
And whenever I see a smile too bright,
And a heart too innocent,
Too tender and warm for your world of ice,
I wrap them away into Paradise."

Farewell! thou art gone forever!

Like the funeral knell, these words break in deep solemnity upon our mind, when spoken relative to those we so dearly loved. Oh! what shall alleviate our sorrow, or what heal the deep wounds made by the ruthless hand of death. In all the wide world or fathomless depths of the universe where shall we turn for comfort?—Ah! peering through the dark clouds of sorrow, I see the star of HOPE surrounded by a bright halo of glory. If those that have been taken from us in the faith, or are among those of whom the Savior said "of such is the kingdom of Heaven," we need not hope in vain. If we know Jesus in the pardon of our sins, in heaven we shall meet them; and O, how can we go on in the ways of sin and bear the thought that at the great day of the Lord, as we turn by the irresistible power of God's wrath to go down to the chambers of woe, have to say farewell to all eternity, to those that go up through the everlasting gates of glory.

Reader, soon, and very soon, it may be said of you, and, you, by your friends, farewell forever, oh, then be ready. J. S. FLORY.

Luther on Baptism.

TO P. S. NEWCOMER.

In Companion page 216, Vol. 6, you stated that Luther says: "I could wish that such as are to be baptized, should be completely immersed into water," &c., not because he thinks it necessay, &c. Now I would like for you to let me know where to find the record, or in what work it is contained.

The reason I ask is this: I am well acquainted with a Lutheran minister, and I asked him one day if he knew Luther's idea of baptism. He said, "O, yes." Then I showed him the paper, and he read it, and said it was a falsehood, that Luther never made that expression. He said he had the life of Luther, and that he would show me some day what his meaning was, and lately he told me he would come to my place and talk with me on baptism, and convince me that any way is right Yours in love,

NOAH B BLOUGH

"I Wish I had a Capital."

So we heard a great, strapping young man exclaim the other day. You want capital, do you? And now suppose you had what you call capital, what would you do with it? You want capital! Well, haven't you hands and feet, and muscle, and bone, and brains, and don't you call them capital? What more capital did God give any body?

"Oh, but they are not money," say you. But they are more than money, and no one can take them from you. Don't know how to use them? If you dont it is time you were learning. Take hold of the first plow or hoe, or jack, or plane, or broad-axe you can find, and go to work. Your capital will soon yield you a large interest. Ah, but there's the rub! You don't want to work? You want money on credit, that you may play gentleman and speculate, and end by paying the vagabond. Or you want a plantation, with plenty of hirelings upon it to do the work, while you run over the country and dissipate; or you want to marry some rich girl who may be foolish enough to take you for your good looks, that she may support you.

Shame on you, young man. Go to work with the capital you have, and you will soon make interest enough upon it to give you as much money as you want and make you feel like a man. If you can't make money on the capital you have, you could not make it if you had a million dollars in money. If you don't know how to use bone and muscle and brains, you would not know how to use gold. If you let what capital you have, lie idle, and waste and rust out, it would be the same thing with you if you had gold; you would only know how to waste.

Then don't stand about idle, a great helpless child, waiting for somebody to come and feed you, but go to work. Take the first work you can find, no matter what it is, so long as you can do it well. Always do your best. If you can manage the capital you have, you will soon have plenty more to manage; but if you can't or wont manage the capital God has given you, you will never have any other to manage.

"Judge not," saith the Lord: the justness of which is obvious in a world where there are no innocent to judge the guilty

Facts Versus dogma.

BY PHILIP SCHAFF.

The presence of Peter in Rome cannot be proven from the New Testament. The only passage which may be quoted in its favor is that in which Peter, like John in the Revelation, ominously calls Rome Babylon.

There is no trace either in the Bible or in Church history that Peter ever conferred his prerogative upon the Bible of Rome, or of any other city.

The peculiar nature of Peter's prerogative admits of transfer as little as that of Paul or John. It was his mission to lay, under Christ the Architect, the foundation of the Christian Church, on the day of Pentecost, for all time to come. That work cannot and need not be repeated; that rock stands immovable forever.

The first Christian Council was presided over, not by Peter, but by James, and adopted the compromise offered, not by Peter, but by James.

Paul never was dependent on Peter in any sense, but he once publicly reproved him for inconsistency of conduct before the congregation at Antioch, and Peter, instead of claiming infallibility, humbly submitted to the rebuke of a junior colleague. (Gal. ii; 2nd Pet. iii).

John, writing to the seven Churches at the close of the apostolic age, ignores the Church of Rome, and recognizes no other primary and centre of unity but Him who holds in his hand the seven stars, and walks in the midst of the seven candle sticks (Rev. ii. and iii).

Clement of Rome, the first Roman bishop of whom we have any authentic account, wrote a letter to the Church at Corinth,—not in his name, but in the name of the Roman congregation; not with an air of superior authority, but as a brother to brethren,— barely mentioning Peter, but highly eulogizing Paul, and with a clear consciousness of the great difference between an apostle and a bishop or elder.

Ignatius of Antioch, who suffered martyrdom in Rome, under Trajan, highly as he extols episcopacy and Church unity in his seven epistles, one of which is addressed to the Roman Christians, makes no distinction of rank among bishops, but treats them as equals.

Irenæus of Lyons, the champion of the Catholic faith against the Gnostic heresy, at the close of the second century, sharply reproved Victor of Rome when he ventured to excommunicate the Asiatic Christians for their different mode of celebrating Easter, and told him it was contrary to apostolic doctrine and practice to judge brethren on account of eating and drinking, feasts and new moons.

Hippolytus, a martyr and a saint in the Roman calendar, in the ninth book of his newly discovered "Philosophumena," or refutation of all heretics, boldly charges two Popes at the beginning of the second century,—Zephyrinus(201 to 219) and Calistus(219 to 223)—witholding the Patripassian heresy, which identifies the Father and Son and subverts the trinity. Callistus taught, "that the Word is the Son and is also the Father, being called by different names, but being one indivisible spirit; that the Father and the Son are one and the same; that the Father, having become incarnate, defiled human flesh; that the Father suffered with the Son." Hippolypus reveals some curious facts previously unknown of this Callistus, who was first a slave, then a banker, a bankrupt, a prisoner, curator of the cemetery, and last, a Pope.

Cyprian, likewise a saint and a martyr, and the greatest champion of the episcopal system in the middle of the third century, in his zeal for visible Church union first brought out the doctrine of the Roman See as the chair of Peter and the centre of Catholic unity: yet he always addressed the Roman bishop as his "brother" and "colleague," and opposed Pope Stephen's views on the validity of heretical baptism, charging him with error, obstinacy and presumption. He never yielded to Rome, and the African bishops, at a third Council of Carthage (256), emphatically restrained his opposition. Firmilian, Bishop of Cæsarea, and Dionysius, Bishop of Alexandria, likewise bitterly condemned the doctrine and conduct of Stephen.

During the Arian controversies, Pope Liberius, in 358, subscribed the Arian formularies in succession for the purpose of regaining his episcopate. During the same period another Pope, Felix, was a decided Arian, but there is some dispute about his claims.

In the Pelagian controversy, Pope Zosimus defended the Pelagians and Cœlestins as sound and orthodox, although his predecessor, Innocent I., had fully agreed with the African bishops in condemning them as dangerous heretics. The Africans, under the lead of St. Augustine, the greatest and best of the fathers, adhered to their decision (417 and 418), and accused Rosimus, who finally yielded and condemned Pelagianism in his Epistola Tractoria.

The ancient Ecumenical Councils were called, not by the Pope, but by the Greek emperor, and in the first two, that of Nice (325), and that of Constantinople (381), the Pope was not represented, and had no influence at all. The Nicene creed, which issued from these two Councils, and is the most universally received of all creeds, teaches "one holy Catholic Apostolic Church, without a word on Rome and the Pope. The second Ecumenical Council, in the third canon, put the Patriarch of Constantinople on a par with the Bishop of Rome, and the fourth Ecumenical Council, at Chalcedon (451), confirmed this canon in spite of the energetic protest of Pope Leo the Great.

Gregory Great, one of the best of Popes, who ruled at the close of the sixth and the beginning of the seventh century, stoutly protested against the assumtion of the title of ecumenical or universal bishop on the part of the patriarchs of Constantinople and Alexandria, and denounced this whole title and claim as anti-Christian and devilish, since Christ alone was the Head and Bishop of the Church universal, while Peter, Paul, Andrew, and John, were members of the same Head, and heads only of single portions of the whole. Gregory would rather call himself the servant of the servants of God.

The sixth Ecumenical Council, summoned by the Emperor Constantine Pogonatus, in 680, pronounced the anathema on the Monothelites and on Honorius, "the former Pope of Old Rome," for teaching that Christ had not two wills, a divine and a human, but only one. This anathema was several times repeated and sanctioned even by a Pope, Leo II. who, in a letter to the emperor, said: "We anathemize even Honorius, who dared to subvert this apostolic Church (of Rome) by a profane doctrine." The following Popes subscribed, at their accession, a confession of faith in which the authors of this heretical dogma, including Honorius (una com Honoris), were condemned by name. This fact is so utterly subversive of the Papal claim of infallibility, that Baronius and Bel armine could not help themselves in any other way but by boldly and impudently denying it; but it is as well estab ished as any fact in Church history, and has been admitted by all honest Roman Catholic as well as Protestant historians to this time. Now, however, Roman Catholics must either believe a lie, or they must renounce the Pope and the last Ecumenical Council.—N. Y. Observer.

TEARS AND LAUGHTER.—Providence has made both tears and laughter, and both for kind purposes; for as laughter enables mirth and surprise to breathe freely, so tears enable sorrow to vent itself patiently. Tears hinder sorrow fro.n becoming despair and madness; and laughter is one of the privileges of reason, being confined to the human species.

Funerals and weddings are regarded in this country as special vehicles of family vanity, pride and ostentation.

No man is in a bad way, but he that has a hard heart, and cannot pray.—Dodd.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper.

INTRODUCTION.

We now enter upon a duty which to us is both unpleasant and agreeable: unpleasant, because, in a faithful performance of it we must necessarily oppose the theories of many profound thinkers and excellent writers; but agreeable, because truth—the cause which we willingly and gladly serve—demands it. Much has been written on the subjects which we purpose to treat; but nothing satisfactory has yet come under our notice. Many authors have favored us with their views; but while they have advanced much that is really valuable, it is a fact to be regretted, that their theories are so various and contradictory as to almost hopelessly embarrass the mind of many honest inquirers after the truth. A certain minister, who is noted for his extensive biblical knowledge, once, in answer to the question. Did Christ eat the Jewish Passover with his disciples on the night of his betrayal? said to us: "I do not pretend to understand it." This answer was both unexpected and unsatisfactory, as we were seeking light upon the subject; but it threw us upon our own resources, and in this way did us more good than the labored pages—the fruitless attempts of authors.

That those who are seeking light upon this, as well as upon the other subjects which we intend to discuss, may be prepared to follow us in our course of reasoning, and enabled to see how little dependence can be placed in works upon these subjects, because of their multitudinous contradictions, we will here give a few quotations from different works that are extensively read. These quotations refer particularly to the legal time for killing and eating the Passover. The reader will also observe that on some points there is a general agreement.

"As to the time of the celebration of the passover, it is expressly appointed between the evenings, or as it is elsewhere expressed, at even, at the going down of the sun (Deut. 16: 6.) This is supposed to denote the commencement of the fourteenth day of Nisan, or at the moment when the thirteenth closed, and the fourteenth began. The twenty-four hours, reckoned from this point of time to the same period of the next day, or fourteenth, was the day of the passover. At sunset of the fourteenth day, the fifteenth began; and with it the feast of unleavened bread. The lamb was to be selected on the tenth day, by each individual or family, and kept up till the fourteenth day, in the evening of which day it was to be killed. (Ex. 12: 3—6.) Then followed the feast of unleaved bread, occupying seven days; the first and last of which were peculiarly holy, like the Sabbath. (Ex. 12: 15, 16.) * * * *

The facts of chief importance in reconciling all the evangelists are, that the word passover is applied sometimes strictly to the fourteenth day, and at other times to the whole festival of unleavened bread; that the passover, or paschal supper strictly speaking, was celebrated at the begining of the fourteenth day of the month, or immediately after sunset of the thirteenth; and that the fourteenth, or Friday of passion week, happened to be the day of preparation for the feast of unleavened bread, and also for the Sabbath." UNION BIBLE DICTIONARY, under the head of PASSOVER.

In the foregoing it is assumed that the Passover was to be killed "at the moment when the thirteenth day closed and the fourteenth began;" and that the "paschal supper, strictly speaking, was celebrated at the beginning of the fourteenth day of the month, or immediately after sunset of the thirteenth."

"The victims were to be selected on the 10th day of the month and slain on the evening of the 14th, a short time before the 15th began to be reckoned, with the commencement of which, at night, the passover suppers were made ready and eaten." —NEVIN'S BIBLICAL ANTIQUITIES, pp 373, 374

Nevin asserts that the victims were slain "on the evening of the 14th, a short time before the 15th began to be reckoned; and that with the commencement of the fifteenth, "at night, the passover suppers were made ready and eaten."

According to the Union Bible Dictionary the victims were slain at sunset the close of the thirteenth day, and immediately served and eaten at the beginning of the fourteenth; but, according to Newton's Biblical Antiquities, the victims were slain just before sunset, the close of the fourteenth day, and made ready and eaten with the commencement of the fifteenth. Here are conflicting theories indeed. But it is worthy of special notice that both these works are published, recomended, and circulated by the AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION. We will now call your attention to the following notice published by the Union:—

"No Books are published by the AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION without the sanction of the Committee of Publication, consisting of fourteen members, from the following denominations of Christians, viz: Baptist, Methodist, Congregationalist, Episcopal, Presbyterian, and Reformed Dutch. Not more than three of the members can be of the same denomination, and no book can be published to which any member of the Committee shall object."

With these facts before us we observe that these conflicting views are published with the cordial consent of every member of the Committee of Publication. Strange, indeed! Is this the way in which the American Sunday-school Union expects to teach the rising generation and succeeding ages a knowledge of God's word? Mystery, mystery! Did the Committee of fourteen members from six different denominations, not know which of the theories is right? If so, why unite in also publishing the wrong? And if ignorant as to which is right, why publish any? "Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation, and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand."

But this is not an isolated case. Commentators and teachers are divided in the same manner, some assuming the one position and others the other; and some virtually contradict their own theories, as we may yet have occasion to show. This controversy about the legal time for the celebration of the Passover must be satisfactorily settled; and this can not be done by the speculations of authors: it must be done by the Scriptures of divine truth. The truth does not lie between those two theories: one is true, and the other is erroneous, and it is ours to decide by reference to God's word which is true.

We next quote from Wm. Smith's Bible Dictionary, under the head of PASSOVER, in reference to the last supper of our Lord, eaten with his apostles on the night of his agony and betrayal:—

"Whether or not the meal at which our Lord instituted the sacrament of the Eucharist was the paschal supper according to the law, is a question of great difficulty. No point in the gospel history has been more disputed."

In the same article in referring to the apparent discrepancy between the evangelists he says: "It is not surprising that some modern critics should have given up as hopeless the task of reconciling this difficulty. The reconciliations which have been attempted fall under three principal heads:—1. Those which regard the supper at which our Lord washed the feet of his disciples (John 13.) as having been a distinct meal eaten one or more days before the regular Passover, of which our Lord partook in due course according to the synoptical narratives. 2. Those in which it is endeavored to establish that the meal was eaten on the 13th, and that the Lord was crucified on the evening of the true paschal supper. 3 Those in which the most obvious view of the first three narratives is defended, and in which it is attempted to explain the apparent contradictions of St John, and the difficulties in reference to the law."

Having now shown that authors conflict with each other as to the legal time for sacrificing and eating the Passover; and that there is no general agreement among them as to whether the meal which our Saviour ate with his disciples on the night of His apprehension, was, or was not, the Jewish Passover, it now remains for us to define our position, and to indicate the course to be pursued in the discussion of these topics.

In the statement of our position we assume:

1. That the legal time for sacrificing the Passover, was on the fourteenth day of the month Abib, or Nisan, from the ninth hour until sunset, the close of the day.

2. That the legal time for eating the Passover, was, in the evening of the fifteenth day of the same month.

3. That our Lord ate the supper at which He washed his disciples' feet and instituted the Communion, on the evening of the fourteenth day—one day earlier than the legal time for eating the Passover.

4. That "Christ our Passover." expired upon the cross on the fourteenth day of the month, at the legal time for the sacrificing of the Passover.

5. That "the Passover, a feast of the Jews," was typical of "Christ our Passover."

6. That the Lord's supper is a full meal, eaten in the evening.

7. That these subjects are so interwoven with the divisions and application of time, as used in the sacred Scriptures, that it is absolutely necessary to be acquainted with that method of computing time, in order to understand these, as well, as many other things recorded in the Bible. Being fully persuaded of the correctness of this position, we shall, first in order, dwell at some length upon Time, its Division and Application; and then, our readers will be prepared to go forward with us, to an intelligent and impartial investigation of the subjects to which we have already referred in this our introduction.

Introductory.

In the name of truth and right, and for the sake of peace and love, we send forth our introductory greeting, to you, kind reader, in the first number of the seventh volume of our paper. Seventh, is that right? Yes, reader, six years we have been publishing the Companion, and for six years many of you have been reading it, and paying for it. For six years we have been brought together once a week through this medium. We have rejoiced together, and we have wept with each other, sometimes on account of the misfortunes of others, and again over our own errors and follies. And so we may be required to do again, though we wish our meetings could all be pleasant and joyful —and at the same time profitable, which, however we can hardly hope for.

Indeed, reader, whatever opinion you may have formed, regarding our combativeness we do most heartily desire that all our deliberations and conversations, during the present volume, might be peaceful and pleasant. But here again we fear that the plans of the great Designer forbid us to hope. The time for perfect peace is not yet come. The Savior declares: "I came not to send peace but a sword." His religion requires self denial. His doctrine is a sword against the lusts of the flesh, lust of the eye, pride of life, self-will, and every other evil found among men, and wherever his doctrine is declared, and his word defended, there the sword will be unsheathed, and it is sad to know that among those who will resist it, are those of our own household. "Whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?" But if there must be "fighting without," let us endeavor to have "the peace of God rule in our hearts." — We do not wish to be among those prophets who "bite with their teeth and cry peace." Micah. 3: 5. It is this kind of a peace policy that destroys the many. (Dan. 8: 25. But we shall endeavor to "follow after the things which MAKE FOR peace," and wherewith we may edify one another, whether they be pleasant or grievous.

This is our brief, yet kindly greeting. Hope our readers will receive it, as we think it is given: in the spirit of love and candor.

Almanacs.

The second and positively the last edition of the Brethern's Almanac's is now ready for orders, and nearly half of them are sold. Please order them promptly. First come, first served, is our rule in business.

Please mind the price is 12 cents, not ten.

Ten copies for a dollar. At 10 cts. for a single copy by mail we would not be getting cost for the last edition.

The Pious Youth.

The Pious Youth for January is progressing finely, and looks all the neater in its new form. We have printed a number of extra copies of the January Number (unles the number of subscribers shall much exceed our expectation) so that those who wish to examine it may secure a copy, by remitting ten cents, which it will be worth to any one.

WE regret that a number of obituary and marriage notices, with other secular matter, has been crowded out. The title pages have taken up much of our space. Next week we expect to catch up with ourselves.

Companion and Visitor.

Although we did not succeed in consolidating the Visitor and C. F. C. we have made arrangements by which we can offer them together at a reduced price. For instance, we will send the C. F. C. and Vis. V. for $2.50, or any of our subscribers may order the Visitor from us at $1; or if you are taking the Visitor you may order the C. F. C. from its publishers at $1, 25. We will send the 'Visitor' and the 'Pious Youth' for $2.

Our Prospects.

In our next we hope to be able to give our friends some idea of how we shall succeed. At present we can give no estimate. Subscribers are arriving about as rapidly as we can accommodate them, but how long they will continue we cannot tell.

Answers to Correspondents.

REBECCA WAMPLER: You are entitled to your choice of "Man in Genises and Geology," or a copy of the Pious Youth.

E. HORN: To whom shall we send the C. F. C. at White Cottage, Muskingum Co., Ohio?

TUNE BOOK: Not ready yet, and will not be for six months at least.

REUBEN MUSSER: Seventy-five cts. will pay for this volume in full.

MICHAEL BESHOAR: The checks for $11,70 and $7,86 are credited to you. Please pardon the oversight. We do not know how it occurred, but feel sure it was not done intentionally.

THOMAS GRAY. All right. Thank you.

H. Keller. You have paid for Vol. 7.

"More About That War."

I wish to define my position a little more fully on the Tobacco question, because as I notice some brethren intimate that it is I that has declared "that war." I said the Brethern had declared war against the "Monarch Tobacco," which the readers of the Companion know is true. I hope the brethern will not lay that "honor" to me to bear alone. "Give honor to whom honor is due." I am only one among many that are fighting the intemperate use of tobacco. And to the brethern in general and brother Steel in particular, let me say, that I did not wish to convey to the reader the idea that the language of the Apostle, "Touch not, taste not, handle not was spoken relative to tobacco, or to the intemperate use of meats or drinks I use that quotation as a motto that we might influence the rising generation to adopt, as touching those unnecessary and injurious practices, that arise through the "lust of the flesh." Though we may not have "thus saith the Lord" against using Tobacco, in so many words, we most certainly have a positive "thus saith the Lord" against the causes that induce thousands to use it otherwise than as a needed medicine. Pride is one of the first causes that induces many to use it. Morbid desires the next cause, and thus pleasure in the gratifying of the lust of the flesh, leads the victim on to the delusion that it is a blessing of God!

A natural appetite for meats and drinks follows the laws of nature, and as a general thing develops the body, and gives health and strength, just as God intended they should. A morbid or cultivated appetite for such things as are neither for health or strength, and do not tend to the development of the body, surely cannot meet the approbation of Him who said: the "Lust of the flesh" is not of the Father.

If there is any truth in the experience, judgment, and observation of the most learned physicians of the day, there is such a thing as transmitting a morbid appetite from the parent to the child, to a more or less degree. Then is it any wonder we are a degenerating people, and that dram drinking, tobacco chewing, smoking, snuff and opium eating, is so alarmingly on the increase, and the young men and women of the present day hardly equal in physical endurance to the old men and women of the age of fifty or sixty. What will be the condition of the human race fifty years from now if we continue to run into exceses in habits of living? And the Church, where will she be? Not many years ago a brother that used tobacco could not hold office in the church, at least in the ministry, according to the order of the old Brethern. To day how is it? Elders, ministers, deacons, lay members, brethern and sisters of all ages are lovers of tobacco, and many that acknowledge they only use it for pleasure's sake. Brethern, pardon my disapprobation of the weed. I have seen the habit indulged to such an extent by some that it seemed the rocks and hills would cry out against the evil, did I not raise my voice with others to try to stay its march. I have seen the young brother the moment he would cease preaching take his accustomed chew and most woefully defile the space behind the sacred desk where the brethren kneel to worship God; and the sanctuary of the Lord with floors reeking in tobacco juice and as it would evaporate and mingle with the air, as a consequence it would be inhaled into the lungs of the breathing audience. Thus not only were those that use the narcotic defiled, nor did the defilement cease on the floor, but the very air that God gives us fresh and pure must be defiled before it is breathed. And I have seen the child on its mother's lap crying for the tobacco pipe because it had learned to love it, and I have seen the sister chewing tobacco! Ah! sisters well might you blush to think such is the case; it is true. And why not? Have they not the right to chew as well as the brethern? In the face of all this (and the half is not told) is it any wonder I do not love the brethern's tobacco. The brethern themselvs I love, and in love I have penned these lines. A true friend will always warn us of our dangers, and if we are truly brethern let us reason together, as we pass along and not fall out on the way.

And, brethern, don't let us, while fighting tobacco, forget to fight other enemies that are lurking around, but let us fight all hand to hand, hilt to hilt, until everything that is an abomination in the sight of God surrenders to the demands of our Commander, Jesus; and just so soon as His terms of peace or reconciliation are subscribed to, peace and pardon must, as a natural consequence follow. An unconditional surrender is what Jesus wants; we must not make compromises that will bring God's word into disrepute.

Tobacco.

Brother Holsinger:—I am heartily glad to see you take so decided a stand against the tyrant, Tobacco; and trust that your efforts may effect much good in inducing the brethren to put away the evil from among us. For myself I can speak from experience of the evils attending tobacco chewing; having been a slave for twelve years to the filthy, health-destroying habit. And whilst I am writing to-night, my heart is full of joy and gladness, that I am free—free from one of the worst habits I ever contracted. For nearly four years I have been a free man, not having tasted the vile weed during that time. While using it I was constantly suffering from indigestion; and although severely afflicted, never felt willing to admit that it was caused by using tobacco. And why? Because I had tried many times to free myself, but lacking self-denial, I failed, and men generally excuse, if they cannot justify, what they do. Very often, too, my mental powers were so much disturbed by smoking, that I could only with great difficulty concentrate my mind upon any subject. I found, too, that I had created an appetite that I could never satisfy; always craving for more—an indefinable longing, that would not be allayed. Soon after I quit using tobacco I found my health improving, and within one year I was actually well, and that, too, without the use of any medicinal remedies, and now I have as good digestive powers as could be desired, and enjoy life a hundred-fold more than I did while using tobacco. And as I know that tobacco was the cause of these ills, I am as fully persuaded that, had I persisted in the use of it, I should, long before this, have been a confirmed dyspeptic.

This may not be the experience of every tobacco chewer, but I know it is the experience of thousands, who, like myself, have the nervous temperament predominant. I number among my personal friends a young man, who is suffering just as I suffered years ago. He believes that tobacco is the cause of all his physical trouble, and yet he has not been, thus far, able to free himself from its use. I have often been asked this question: "How did you quit it?" My answer is this: "I firmly resolved by the help of God to overcome the habit, and then I let it alone." By pursuing this course, no one will ever fail, and in a year or two at the most, when you shall be free from every desire to use, you will feel like myself, to thank God that you are free from this hard master. I have never as yet had the experience of any confirmed tobacco chewer, who had not at some time tried in vain to quit its use; neither have I ever heard one say that he was not sorry that he ever commenced using it. This being the case, I am surprised that any one should defend its use. I do not believe that there is one tobacco chewer among us who would advise his children to use it. And yet, when I remember the terrible ordeal through which I passed before I was wholly free—a fight that lasted not only for a few days, but for many months—I feel to bear with those who defend its use, for, I believe, were you to ask each one this question, "Have you ever tried to quit it?" the answer would be, "Yea, verily, but in vain."

Teach all Nations.

"Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Math. 28: 19, 20.

This is a command directly from our Savior's lips, to his apostles, shortly before his ascension to the right hand of God. And this holy command is as applicable unto us as it was to his followers eighteen centuries ago. Now, since, the brethren claim to be the true followers of our "heavenly Master," the query presents itself to my mind, are we doing our duty to God and our fellow creatures? are we teaching "all nations?" We get many sketches of travels, &c. from numerous brethren, through the "Christian Family Companion," but in a general way are traveling through the various and large congregations, where their labors are not needed to such an extent, or even appreciated as in the romotest parts or outskirts of the brotherhood. The command is: "Go ye into all the world, and preach my gospel." We have frequently seen from four to a half a score of ministers sit on the same bench, while one was addressing the audience, and the rest were hearers only; while we are inclined to believe that thousands of our fellow-mortals, that are as good by nature as we are, are starving for the true bread of life. Since we reside in this part of God's moral vineyard, and in the isolated part of the Brethern Church we are made to feel sensibly the duties that are enjoined upon God's people, more than when residing in the heart of the brotherhood; hence, we feel the necessity of spreading the gospel truth, in its primitive purity, to a dying world. Why is it, brethren, that we are not more earnestly engaged in the good cause, since the reward is so great to the faithful steward; he shall receive in this world a hundred-fold, and in the world to come everlasting life. Brethren, is this not worth striving for? Yes, if we could persuade one soul to flee the wrath to come we would be well rewarded, since one soul is worth more than all the world.

May God lead and guide us by His unerring Spirit into all truth, and may Zion be enlarged, is the desire of your unworthy brother. J. G. WINEY

Campbell, Mich.

Dear Companion:—I this day seat myself to pen a few lines for your columns. I often read the Companion, and with much pleasure, and love to hear from those I love so well. I often think of the dear sisters I saw in the far west. Dear sisters, I have not forgotten you, nor has my love grown cold towards you. I never will forget the love manifested towards me. I often wonder whether we shall all meet in heaven, there to praise God forever. Dear sisters, I write this to let you know that I am alive, and trying to serve God, and I trust it is the same with you. I am left alone a great deal this winter, and my chamber is so quiet that there cannot a pin fall to the floor unobserved by me. I said I am left alone; no, not left alone, for my God is with me. I can converse with him during the day, and at night give myself and little family into his care, and ask him to keep us all safe through the night. What a great God we have. I can have him here, and you can have him there. Then let us love him while in this world of sorrow, that we may praise him "above where all is love."

Now sisters, let me see a piece in the Companion from some one of you in the Far West. Is my God with you there? Grant me your prayers, that I may become strong in the faith of Jesus. I have a strong interest in heaven, for therein dwell six of my children, my father and mother, and many of my friends. And there is my Savior. O, if I can but have a seat at my Savior's feet, I shall be very happy. I feel, sometimes, that my stay on earth is but short. Oh, what when death comes! We must die. What next? Go to God, to give an account for all we have said or done. Can we stand the great account? I think we will tremble: I think we will almost faint when we shall see our account there. "God, be merciful to me a sinner."

I do not think that I can benefit any one much. "Of them to whom much is given, much will be required. But I want my sisters to know that I still remember them. I think there is a crown for us to wear I know there is a cross to bear.

Shall Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No, there is a cross for every one,
And there's a cross for me.

"The consecrated cross I'll bear,
'Till death shall set me free,
And then go home, a crown to wear,
For there's a crown for me."

Now may God bless and save us all is my prayer. Farewell.

NANCY WISE

Brother Henry:—I am at present afflicted with Rheumatism; so much so, that I can scarcely get about. I am suffering very much pain. I had in contemplation a visit to Perry co., Pa., on the 16th. I intended to leave home in company with brother J. H. Raffensparger for the neighborhood of Bloomfield and continue one week; but I am disabled. I have prevailed on brother S. P. Lerew to take my place, so that the appointments will be filled if the Lord permits. May the brethren's prayers go forth in their behalf: may the Lord's blessings go with them. Since we had the district meeting with us, as it was agreed upon that the church should establish home mission preaching, we as a church have tried to put it into practice; and since then have been employing nearly all my time outside of our regular appointments. In May last the people in Dover, York county, Pa. called for an appointment in the United Brethren church. I consented and they made an appointment. I have given them two meetings, and still intend holding meetings at their request. There is not a brother or sister in the town, but many warm friends. I think good can be done in that place. Many of the citizens had never heard the Brethren's doctrine preached.

Now to the ministering brethren. Let us try and put the home mission to its full extent; as much can be done in that way, for the cause of our Master. Let every bishop that has not already introduced it do it at once. And all that can go away from home to the far west, do so. We have many brethren who can travel who have the means at hand. Consider brethren whether you are doing your duty for the Master?

ADDAM HOLLINGER.

Brother Henry:—Inasmuch as I promised some of the brethren to give a report through the Companion of a visit to Fayette, Westmoreland and Somerset counties, Pa., I will now, after some delay, and by your permission, try to do so.

On the 14th of September, in company with brother Samuel Murray, I started on a mission of love to the above named counties, and on the evening of the 16th we arrived at brother Frederick Wimer's. On the 17th brother Wimer accompanied us to brother Weaver's, near Mt. Pleasant. Preached the same night at the Brush Run schoolhouse. On the 18th we started for Indian Creek, and arrived there in the evening, and stopped with brother Daniel Myers, and preached to a small but attentive congregation.—On the evening of the 12th we filled an appointment at the County Line meeting-house, after which we went home with brother Jeremiah Foust. On the morning of the 20th we started over the mountain to Somerset county, and stopped with brother Josiah Berkley, where we stayed till the morning of the 21st; then went to brother Jesse Wagley's, where we remained till the next day; thence to brother Tobias Myers. On the same night, (22d) we preached at the Pleasant Hill meeting house.—The next evening we returned to brother Wagleys and preached at Rhodes' school-house. On Sunday, the 24th, we went to the Union meeting-house and preached at 10 and 2½ o'clock. Then returned to Rhode's school-house and preached in the evening. On Monday evening filled an appointment at Middle Creek, and stayed at brother Jacob Miller's till the next day.—Thence to brother Jacob D. Miller's, near Somerset, where we stayed two nights.

On Tuesday evening we preached at the Grove meeting house, and at Fairview on Wednesday evening, and on Thursday we returned to Indian Creek and preached in Davistown that evening; lodged with friend Jacob Cristner; found him to be an intelligent man, well read in the Bible and contending for the faith as a brother, and we hope it will not be long until he shall become a brother indeed.

On Friday we spent the time very pleasantly at brother Burger's: on the same evening we preached at Felger's school-house, and went home with brother Henry Kelger.—Saturday was the time for the Lovefeast at the County Line House, where we met with many of the brethren. The meeting was well attended; at 2 P M. we were addressed by brother J. Hetrick.—The evening services were conducted by brother Jacob Thomas. Here we can truly say that we enjoyed a feast of love indeed, and I think this was a time long to be remembered. At this place we saw two men led into the water and buried beneath its yielding waves in baptism, one of whom I understand has since been buried in the cold, damp grave, there to rest until the angel Gabriel shall with the loud trumpet call the saints to meet their blessed Lord.

On Monday we came in company with brothers Thomas and Hook to the Fayette meeting-house, and filled an appointment, and on Tuesday, the 4th of October, was the time for the Lovefeast, which was attended with the best of order. On Wednesday we filled an appointment at the same place; after which we returned home and found all well.

CHRISTIAN SHOWALTER.

Brother Henry:—Some months ago I asked the following questions, and no answer has yet appeared: "What do the Brethren understand by worshipping God in Spirit and in Truth? How do we worship in Spirit, and how in Truth?" I want an answer to this, as I think it important to know what the true spiritual worship of God is. It may seem of small weight to many of your readers who understand it, but to myself it is not, and it is so to others also. Let some brother reply soon, and more than one will do no harm.

Another question I gave was, "Why do we hear of no Brethren east of Pennsylvania or Maryland? Are there none in Kentucky?"

LANDON WEST.

Dear Brother:—I was conversing with a lady who has read all of the Companions I have, and it seems that she is well pleased, though she never heard a sermon by the Brethren. She said that she was glad to see that there was some others who believed as she did. In the time of her first husband she was a Baptist, and her last husband is a Methodist, and she went to them, though she never knew yet what she was, but she says she believes what the Companion says. There is great talk here about the elect—God's elect, who they are, and what they are.—There has been much said on this, and I wish to have an explanation from you through the Companion, for my own satisfaction.

I see in my letter concerning my sister having fits, I stated that she had from four to five every day. Instead of every day, it is about ten days at the full moon, during that time she has four or five a day. Then not so often as that. Please correct it and excuse me. My letter was published in No. 48 of past year, page 760. E. A. BOUKD.

KANSAS CITY. Mo.,
Dec. 11th 1870.

Dear Brother.—I have the melancholy task of informing you of the death of our beloved brother Jeremiah Myers, of Asthma, on the morning of the 9th inst.,—The circumstances attending the decease of our dear Brother are extremly painful: being in the full vigor of manhood, with a wife and six children, the youngest of whom is but two months old.

He had an attack of billious fever some two months since, and on Sunday last seemed convalescent, as in company with father I visited him. —On Tuesday he assisted in butchering, took cold, and Friday morning at 6 o'clock was a corpse.—His death occurred without (if it is possible) a struggle. He seemed to fall asleep in Jesus.—In contemplating his death, I could exclaim with Num. 23: 7, 10. Balaam said "let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his."—

We telegraphed Elder D. D. Sell to come, but from some cause he failed. The occasion was improved by Mrs. Chase, a sister of the Society of Friends, she spoke from part of the 119h Psalm. Amore beautiful sermon I have seldom heard—filled with instruction and encouragement to the bereaved widow and family, as well as friends. One thought was so beautifully expressed that I must give it, although I fear I cannot do her justice.—In speaking of death, she looked upon the corpse and exclaimed "'Oh! Death, where is thy sting! Oh! Grave where is thy victory!' and death is swallowed up in life." Another old lady on hearing of his peaceful death, exclaimed, Psalms 37: 37, "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright! for the end of that man is peace."—Brother Myers was formerly from Huntingdon Co., Pa.,—and married to a daughter of Daniel Holsinger, of Bedford Co.,—His death will cause regret in a large circle of the brotherhood.—

We are still unorganized as yet, although Elder D. D. Sell has promised soon to attend to our wants.—We number some 13 members now, but hope for several acquisitions in the spring.—The prayers of the brotherhood are asked for the building up of the church here. As we frequently hear of brethern visiting the West, who pass through Kansas City, I would say to such that brother Geo. R. Holsinger (my father) lives at No. 1606, Hockbenny St., and desires all such to tarry with him during there sojourn in the City. I will write again upon our organization. May God's guidance direct us and bless all the efforts put forth for devising good.—Affectionately yours in the bonds of the Gospel.

FRANK HOLSINGER.

DIED.

At the residence of her son-in-law, Peter Keller, in Logan county, Ohio, on the 25th day of Sept. 1870, MAGDALENE SHORTZ; age about 82 years, and 6 months. She was a faithful member of the Omish Church. Funeral services by David Plank, Omish minister, in the German, and J. L. Frantz in the English. From second Timothy, 4: 6,—8.

Also in the Logan branch, Logan county, Ohio, on the 21st day of Oct. 1870. WILLIAM S. Infant son of brother John and sister Martha VANMETER; age 2 years, 1 month, and 3 days. Funeral services by J. L. Frantz, from Mark 10: 15, 16.

In the Middle River congregation, Augusta Co. Va., July 31st, 1870, sister HANNAH MYERS; aged 81 years, 10 month, and 4 days. She was consort of brother John Myers, deceased, and survived her husband, nearly 21 years. Her maiden name was Spitler, disease, cancer in the face. Her afflictions were great, yet she bore them with patience and chrisrian courage; with a mind and will fully resigned to the will of the Lord; but she greatly longer for the day to come in which she would make her exit out of this troublesome world; looking forward, with an eye of faith, for that rest, that remaineth to the people of God. She left 6 children, and a large number of grand, and great grandchildren to mourn their loss.—But, truly, their loss is her eternal gain. Funeral services by brother Martin Garber and the writer, from Rev. 13: 14.

Written by request.

LEVI GARBER.

In the West Nimisilla congregation, Stark county Ohio, ABRAHAM WITWER, Nov. 20th, 1870; aged 73 years, and 24 days. He was father of 14 children, of whom 11 are living; grand-father of 93, and great grandfather of 18, as far as is known. He was a faithful brother for a number of years. The occasion was improved by brethren Henry Province and David Young and the writer.—From Philip. 1: 21, 23.

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

VOLUME VII. TYRONE, PA. TUESDAY, JAN. 9, 1871. NUMBER 2.

For the COMPANION.

"Owe no Man any Thing but to Love one Another." Rom. 13: 8.

Whereas the apostle Paul, in 1 Cor. 14: 37, writes: "If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord," and whereas the said apostle is acknowledged, by all professors of Christianity, to have been an inspired embassador of Christ; consequently we must acknowledge that the above test is one of the Lord's commandments, and that it is binding on all who profess to be his disciples; and that by neglecting to obey the same, we forfeit our right to the tree of life, and to admittance into the city, (see Rev. 22: 14.), and expose ourselves to the curse pronounced upon the disobedient. But it may be objected, as though the Lord had commanded us that which we could not obey. But I think we can obey it as well as all other commandments, if we are willing to deny ourselves of the luxuries which we cannot afford, and be careful not to run recklessly into debt, and to make rash promises, which it is likely we will not be able to perform.

One obligation, according to the text, we cannot cancel, that is: to love one another; this we continue to owe one another; but all our other debts we should pay at the time stipulated in the agreement. But, it may be said, what if we have not wherewith to pay? To such I would say, with all the sympathy and charity their case demands or deserves: do the best you can, make every possible effort to pay, and if you cannot, ask your creditor to have patience with you, or forgive you, as the case may demand.

And those who are yet free I would advise, and earnestly admonish, not to contract a debt and make a promise to pay, if you are not pretty certain that you can fulfil your promise, or have something to fall back upon if you fail; and if you cannot fulfil your promise, make a new contract with your creditor, if possible, and obtain his consent to wait longer; and thus you will not transgress the commandment in the text; as we do not owe a man until the time that we promised to pay him.

"The times are hard," and "money is scarce," are complaints which continually greet our ears, but what is the cause of all this? People live too fast, they indulge in luxuries, have costly furniture, build splendid houses, dress in costly raiment, and some chew and smoke tobacco and drink whiskey. No wonder the times are hard and money is scarce with such. Thus did not our fathers, they stretched themselves according to their cover. Brethren and sisters should not imitate those who live above their income, but rather deny themselves of such luxuries, and be engaged in some honest business and attend to the same regularly and diligently, and not forget to pray and attend public worship as regularly as circumstances will permit, and I venture to predict that very few will be unable to "owe no man any thing." I do not mean those who are unable, through sickness or bodily infirmities, to labor. The church owes to such the assistance they need. In my young days the brethren, generally had the reputation of being punctual and as good as their word; let us not, then, forfeit this reputation and become a stumbling-block to our neighbors, but let our light so shine before men, that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven.

DANIEL SNOWBERGER.

New Enterprise, Pa.

For the [illegible]

"The Church of the Brethren."

The propriety of the above as being the title or name by which the true church should be known, seems to be called in question, and the reformers think the expression is equivalent to "The Brethren's Church," and therefore object. Being of the opinion that a critical examination of the subject, according to to the genius of our language, will show the objection unfounded and believing that it is important that the jection should be fairly met, I beg the indulgence of the editor and the kind patrons of the Companion, while I offer the following criticisms:

That there is a principle in the English Language which recognizes, the propriety under certain circumstances to change the Possessive to to the Preposition "of" with the possessive noun for its regimen, does not admit of doubt. The primary signification of that Preposition is possession, as may be inferred from its origen, being derived from the verb have.—The principle is recognized by all good philologists, but it is by no means without exceptions.—While the primary significance is retainad in many cases, the secondary is no less general. Look at the following examples: Primary: "The son of David."

"David's son."

"The name of the Father."

"The Father's name."

Secondary: "The city of Pittsburg."

"A cup of water."

Sometimes the ideas expressed are different:

My father's picture may not be a picture of my father.

S. W. Clark says: "When the object of the Prepositional phrase constitutes the Agent of an action, state, or feeling, etc., implied in the substantive limited, the Phrase and the corresponding Possessive are equivalent, and therefore interchangeable. Example.: "The people's will." The people are the agent or cause of the will; but in the phrase "The Church of the Brethren," the Brethren are not the agent or cause of the church, but the Lord is; he called them brethren, "ye are brethren," and he gives the reason: "he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven,"&c., But there are many organization which call themselves brethren, hence the true brethren are distinguished by the definitive THE.

He said, "on this stone will I build my church," but there are many so called churches, even as there are Lords many:—hence the distinction "the Church" And bringing all together we have "The Church of the Brethren." But it is the Lord's church because he hath established it, and they keep the commandments.

Selected for the Companion.

The Sisters Work.

That the Sisters of the Church of Christ have an important part to act in the present reformation cannot be denied. Vice and immorality are prevalent in our land; and all lovers of truth and holiness should use their utmost exertions to raise the standard of Virtue and Religion in the Church. The great need of reformation, both in the church and in the world, calls aloud to every christian to act. And while we see so many of our noble brethren responding to the call—going forth and using every means in their power to put down evil and spread the glad tidings of salvation to the world, do we not see that there is a great necessity for the sisters, also to engage in the word? Shall they remain silent? Shall they stand by, as idle spectators, and see their fellow creatures floating down the dark stream of dissipation, and not even hold up to them the "beacon light," (God's Holy Word,) that they may be able to see the vast whirlpool of destruction that lies before them, and into which their frail bark will soon sink, if they do not turn their course? Shall they remain silent and inactive, and see Zion languishing, when, by their influence and exertions, many lukewarm souls, who have been overtaken by the evil one, and dragged back "into the weak and beggarly elements of the world," might be induced to return to the fold of Christ where they would receive strength to enable them to resist the enemy; and where they could again partake of the christian's heavenly feast.

We do not say that it is the duty of the sisters to leave their domestic sphere and go out into the world to proclaim the truths of the Gospel to promiscuous assemblies. But we do say that it is both their privilege and their duty to teach them, through the medium of the pen, and in the social circle.

These they can do without neglecting the duties of home, or subjecting themselves to the ridicule of the world They can point to the wayward youth, the fruits of virtue, and teach him how to shun the hidden snares that lie along the flowery paths of pleasure. They can reclaim the erring, strengthen and encourage the weak, by holding up to them the precious promises contained in the living Oracle. They can visit the haunts of vice and misery, and speak words of comfort to the despairing souls; teach them how to overcome the evil influences by which they are surrounded, and point them to the "Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world."

If those intelligent sisters who are spending their time and talents in an employment that perishes with its using, could be induced to engage in the work of putting down those evil influences which are poisoning the minds of youth, and dragging so many down to the dark world of woe, they could do more toward moralizing the world, than our most eloquent preachers; for it is seldom that the heart, blackened by crime and hardened by sin, is penetrated by the truths of the Gospel. There we see the necessity of moral training—of early inculcating principles pure and holy, that the youthful mind may be prepared to receive and obey the the word of God.

We presume that there is not a sister in the Christian Church but could assist in the work. Then let every one who wishes to see the cause of Christ triumphant—who wishes to see vice and immorality dethroned, and virtue and religion crown our land, come out and boldly discharge the heavenly duty; that in the great day of setribution they may hear it said "well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of the Lord."

Christian Duties.

HOW ALL MAY PREACH.

All cannot preach from the pulpit, or deliver long and eloquent orations, but there is a kind of preaching that is permitted to all men, and often times this kind is most effectual. Offices of kindness to the bodies and souls of those around us; words of encouragement to the weak, of instruction to to the ignorant, of consolation to the troubled, of brotherly kindness to all, spoken by the fireside, the wayside, or bedside; hearty devotion to the services of religion in our families and our closets, as well as in the sanctuary; in a word, all of earnest, active, self-denying love to our fellow-beings, springing from our love to God, will form a most impressive sermon, a most convincing proof to the world around us, that we have been with Jesus. All Christians are called in this way to preach the gospel. Woe to them if they neglect this call, and blessed are they who who fulfil the ministry, and in their humble sphere prove themselves to be workers together with God. Let us communicate unto the poor, and especially unto our poor ministers, for with such sacrifice God is well pleased. THOS. G. SNYDER.

How to be Happy.

Do all the good you can. Whenever you hear of a poor widow, an orphan or an aged man, who is in affliction, pay that individual a visit. Do not hoard up all you earn; give a certain portion to the poor. Never get angry, if you are slandered or imposed upon. Better suffer a little than retaliate and use harsh language. Be not proud or selfish; think no more highly of yourself and your talents than you do of the capacities of others. Pay all you owe; keep out of debt. Get not entangled in the meshes of the law—avoid it as the sure gate to ruin.—Shun vicious pursuits and unprincipled associates. Honor the Sabbath and serve God, and be devoted to truth and religion. Finally, take the Christian Family Companion, pay for it in advance, read it attentively and you will be happy; peace and contentment will smile on your path, joy will brighten your countenance, and every lane of life before you will be fragrant with blessings, rich and abundant.

THE GREATNESS OF LITTLE THINGS.—Little habits drive nails into our coffins. They more than make up by their number what they seem to lack in individual importance. They are the true seeds of character. We might as well plant acorns, and not expect them to grow, as cherish small virtues and not calculate on their increase, or as reasonably hope to see the firm and noble oak where no acorns were ever planted, as true greatness and success in life, where the seedlings of a thousand little habits of industry and virtue had not been first carefully cherished.

In a word, character is the sum of little things rather than great ones. The true estimate of an individual is not ascertained by his occasional or occasional efforts, but his every day habits. A nation's character is not determined by its famous men, but by the habits of its masses, and the character of the age by the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Harvest Great but the Laborers Few.

The above is become to be a sterotype saying among the brethren. We hear it from the East and the West, the North and the South. Laborer is generally a term applied to the ministers of the Gospel, but we think it may be well applied to every one that is born of God. Can not every one do something to promote the cause of Christ, and thus become a co-laborer with God? Paul says, "every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor" (1st Cor. 3: 9.) So every one that labors to the interest of God's Kingdom will be rewarded.—We surely should all be interested in the noble work; then it follows, if we are, we will all lend a helping hand in such a way that we can. To illustrate; suppose a dozen of men were interested in a vineyard, and one or two were selected as gardeners or superintendents, and it would so happen, that those so selected could not do justice to the vineyard; those that were interested in it would no doubt do all in their power to have the garden produce abundantly; but suppose one or two of them were interested about their own individual affairs more than about the vineyard and divested their means to their self interest, would it not be said, they were not doing their duty relative to the vineyard. So we should not expect too much of those that are called as laborers; they too, have individual interests at stake. Must they sacrifice all, while others that should be "lively stones" devote all their time to their individual interest, and amass wealth and independance, which is all well and good if it is not abused. Don't, reader, suppose now, that I am going to favor a system of paid ministry on a money basis, by no means; but can not something more be done to disseminate truth over the country, than has been done and yet keep within the bounds of the Gospel. Sow bountifully, and we may expect to reap bountifully. Had we tracts treating upon the plain commands of the Savior, and the principles of the Gospel generally, and scatter them broadcast in the wake of God's ministers, much good might be accomplished. We do know much error is being disseminated through the tract societies of different sects. Surely truth also could be disseminated in some way.—We have felt the want of something of the kind in this wide field of Wt. Va. We are falsely represented by our enemies and many are the inquirers as to what these people teach. One or two ministers cannot keep pace with the interest that is awakening. In the absence of tracts, our periodicals may accomplish much; I know of the circulation of a few numbers of the Companion in certain districts doing good the past year or two. One of our brethren was severely censured by a man of another denomination for causing some of their members to leave and join the brethren. The brother wanted to know in what way he caused them to do so. By lending them your paper ("the Companion") he said.—O said the brother, I did lend them my papers and would like to lend you some of them. I have known them to be lent and passed around from one to another until about worn out, (surely they answered their mission.) So brethren and sisters, here is, in this way a chance for you to sow good seed, away up here in the mountains of Wt. Va. A number of our members scattered over a large field would be glad to recieve the paper, that cannot otherwise get them, and they would pass them around to their neighbors, and in many sections, in fact wherever we go, we find persons that are friendly to us and the cause, they would gladly recieve the papers and pass them around. Here is a chance to do good to the comforting of isolated brethren and sisters, and for the cause generally. Just think of it for a trifle, you can send the Companion once a week to a poor member, or to a friend. I can dispose of one hundred copies in this way, which would be, during the year five thousand papers scattered abroad, and I believe much good can be done in this way. Suppose but one soul would be led to the truth in that way, would it not be money well spent? Who then will not deny themselves of just one little luxury and send on their mite to the office of the Companion to pay the expenses of a messenger of truth to go weekly to whom it will be welcome. Come brethren, come sisters, to the rescue of souls from error, and in heaven you may meet face to face, dear ones that you have been instrumental in bringing to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. God prosper the cause.

The Refiner of Silver.

Brother Holsinger: Enclosed you will find an article that I have selected for the Companion. I must agree with the writer—that it is a beautiful figure. My prayer is that God may give us grace to endure our afflictions, till Christ is clearly reflected in us.

Yours in love.

HENRY F. LONG.

Some months ago, a few ladies who met together in Dublin to read the scriptures, and make them the subject of conversation, were reading the third chapter of Malachi. One of the ladies gave it as her opinion that the Fuller's Soap and the Refiner of Silver were the same image, both intended to convey the same view of the sanctifying influence of the grace of Christ: while another observed, there is something remarkable in the expression of the third verse:

"He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver.

They agreed that possibly it might be so; and one of the ladies promised to call on a silversmith and report to them what he said on the subject. She went accordingly, and without telling the object of her errand, begged to know from him the process of refining silver, which he fully described to her.

"But, sir," said she, "do you sit while the work of refining is going on?

"Oh yes, madam," replied the silversmith, "I must sit with my eye steadily fixed on the furnace for if the time necessary for refining be exceeded in the slightest degree, the silver is sure to be injured."

At once she saw the beauty, and the comfort, too of the expression. "He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver."

Christ sees it needful to put his children into the furnace, but He is seated by the side of it; his eye is steadily intent on the work of purifying, and His wisdom and love are both engaged in the best manner for them. Their trials do not come at random; the very hairs of their head are all numbered. As the lady was leaving the shop, the silversmith called her back, and said he had still further to mention that he only knew when the process of purifying was complete by seeing his own image reflected in the silver.

Beautiful figure! When Christ sees his own image in his people, his work of purifying is accomplished.

Christ Preaching to the Dead.

On page 767, Vol. 6, C. F. C., brother C. P. L. Roberts desires an explanation of 1 Peter 4:6. Which reads: "For, for this cause was the Gospel also preached to them that are dead that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit."

For the purpose of understanding Peter, we must understand what he is writing about. See the 3d, chapter, from the 17th, to the 20th verse, where he speaks of Christ's sufferings, and says, "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit; by which also he went and preached to the spirits in prison, which sometimes were disobedient when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the Ark was a preparing." "Suffering the just for the unjust." We understand that Christ in his death and sufferings; redeemed all Adam's family, both dead and alive, from under the curse of a broken law, and after they were redeemed, Christ must necessarily preach the Gospel to those that are dead, after his death, as he did to those that are living before his death, that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world stand guilty before God. (Rom. 3:19) Hence, while his body lay in the tomb, his quickened spirit was with the disembodied Antediluvians in the prison of the underworld, there preaching the Gospel to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit. (1 Peter 4:6.) Paul says, Eph. 4:9, "He also descended first to the lower parts of the earth." There he preached the Gospel to the dead, and then through the power of his resurrection. "He ascended up on high, led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men." Eph. 4:8. "Wherefore God hath also highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." California and Oregon Mission.

[EDITOR AND PUBLISHERS JACOB MILLER AND [illegible] STOKES.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Under the guidance of a kind Providence, we left South Bend, Indiana, on the 6th day of October 1870. We had a pleasant journey to California, where we arrived on Wednesday the 12th of October, stopping at the house of Elder Geo. Wolfe where we were kindly received by himself and family, (all members of the church.) We tarried with them and the brethren and sisters in California until the following Tuesday, in which time we held six meetings.

In company with Elder Geo. Wolfe we went to San Francisco, stopping there until the 20th, at which time we left brother Wolfe and San Francisco on a Steamer for Portland, Oregon, where we arrived, after a very pleasant journey, on Sunday the 23d, at ten o'clock P. M. After a good night's rest we took the stage for Albany the county seat of Lynn County, where we arrived at sun-down on Monday the 24th, and were directed to the house of brother Solomon Ritter, in Albany, where we were very kindly received by himself and family. Brother Philip Baltimore, also living in Albany, was absent from home, but sister Baltimore his wife, and other members of the family came over to brother Ritter's and we had a very interesting interview. On Tuesday morning brother Ritter conveyed us to the brethren living eight miles east of Albany in the Williamette Valley. After meeting with the brethren; we appointed a meeting for public preaching, to be held on Thursday evening the 27th of October. The brethren and neighbors attended and the large school-house was filled. Good attention and much interest was manifested by all present and much desire being expressed for more preaching, we held five more meetings for public preaching, which were well attended by the members and public generality. On Monday the 31st of October the members from far and near met at the house of brother David Peebler in church capacity. After meeting with them in humble prayer to God, we informed them that our mission to California and Oregon consisted in more than preaching the word—that we were sent to them by the Annual Meeting on a missionof love to aid and assist them to form a more perfect organization of the church in Oregon.

—Every brother and sister expressed a willingness to come into full union and fellowship with the general Brotherhood—to receive and give council as the gospel directs, according to the usages of the church, and as they had troubles of a serious nature, which had for a long time deprived them of the enjoyment of the gospel priviliges, not even assembling themselves together for the public worship of God, (until we came to them) they unanimously desired us to act as a committee to hear the causes of their grievances and to report a decision to the church.

Feeling our weakness yet trusting in the Lord, we yielded to their request, heard the causes of their grievances and made a report which we presented to the church, which was accepted by every member, rendering full satisfaction, and christian peace and love was restored, and in that reunion and christian fellowship, (after holding a number of meetings in different parts of the valley where members reside,) we left them on the 14th of November, to return to California, which we accomplished by stage, a distance of five hundred and fifty miles, in four days and five nights, a very tiresome but otherwise pleasant journey. We took the cars one hundred and fifty miles farther to the brethren in California where we visited, holding meetings in different places, as the members are scattered over a large space of territory. We continued preaching the word until Saturday the 10th of December, when we met with the members, who were assembled from far and near, in church council. We all labored together in the fear of the Lord until the much desired, happy result of union and fellowship was manifested by the Brethren in California with the general brotherhood, and our labor in California was closed.

We then had preaching on Sunday in the neighborhood of the brethren, near Elder George Wolfe's, and on Sunday evening at the Disciple's church, in Stockton (many of the brethren accompanying us to the latter place) to a large and attentive audience, and on Monday we took the parting hands of brethren and many friends, and took the train at 12 o'clock eastward for our home in South Bend, where we arrived after a pleasant trip on the 17th of December, at 9 o'clock P. M, and found all well.

We truly feel that the Lord was with us, and greatly blessed us, inasmuch as we enjoyed the best of health; had no disappointments in all our travels; no accidents happened us, and our labors were received in love everywhere, both in California and Oregon, by the brethren and the world.—All manifested their sorrow that we had to leave them,—and with many tears they entreated us to return again, if we could possibly do so, and to urge the general brotherhood to lend them help, which we agreed to do as the Lord enabled us, and are very sure that the cause of Christ Jesus requires that a minister among brethren should be located in Oregon. And we are satisfied from all that we could learn from the brethren, and also from the citizens, together with our own observations of the general appeaance of the country, that brethren could do well there for themselves and families, and effect much good. We are confident the prospects are very favorable for the building up of large churches in Oregon, and so far as we could learn, the only reason why it has not been done has been for the want of proper ministerial labor. The members are humble and faithful, and would do honor to any age or country.

California is a very large field for the few laborers who reside in that state, considering the wants of the people. The members are scattered over the country very far from each other, which renders it very difficult for them to meet often in the one only organized church in the state. The brethren and people generally, express a strong desire that members, and especially ministers, come and settle among them, and we are sure that much good would result from a compliance with their request. And we feel it our duty to urge the general brotherhood to consider this matter in the fear of the Lord and to act as promptly as possible.

We found the brethren in California in comfortable circumstances, so far as the good things of this earth are concerned;—enough and to spare,—and we think that industrious, prudent brethren, could do well there in accumulating property, yet if we were to give an opinion relative to the matter, our preference would be in favor of Oregon, as being in most need of ministers, and agricultural pursuits being more uniformly remunerative to the laborer, than in California, the rains being more regular.

Finally, brethren, the mission to California and Oregon, through the blessing of God, has been a success so far as we know, and it is our prayer, and we ask all the brethren to unite with us in this prayer to God, that his blessing may forever rest with them, and that all may feel an interest in the welfare of souls, praying the Lord of the harvest to send forth more laborers into the vineyard, that His sheep may be fed.

A few Thoughts for the New Year.

The year 1870 is now closed; and with it has closed another year of the Christian's warfare, and another year of the sinner's day of grace.

The Christian who has been faithful to his God and Savior during the past year, is one year nearer, both in age and experience, to Heaven his eternal home, than he was a year ago. He has become more established in the service of his Master. It will now require a greater effort on the part of the enemy to overcome him; still his time of watching and prayer is not yet closed.

On the other hand, the sinner who has steadfastly resisted the convictions of the Spirit of the Lord during the past year, is now one year nearer his final doom, both in age and experience, than he was a year ago. He has become more confirmed in the service of his Master; his opportunities to escape the damnation of hell, are gradually growing less; it will now require a stronger effort to liberate himself from the grasp of the enemy than it would have done a year ago. His heart is gradually becoming harder; the convictions of the Spirit are becoming weaker and more easily resisted. He will soon take His flight, and leave him to the company of his choice, for time and eternity: "My Spirit shall not always strive with man."

The year 1870 has closed the mortal life of many of the children of men. They have

"No more a share in all that's done
Beneath the circuit of the sun.

And so it will be during the present year. The aged Christian, weary of life's vanities and disappointments, will exchange the cross for the crown, and join the happy number who have come up through great tribulations: "Who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

Many an aged sinner who has long resisted the Spirit, and who, by his wicked life and influence, has been a snare and curse to the rising generation, will go to his final doom, and experience the solemn truth: "What a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

The careless Christian, who seems to divide his heart between God and the world, will go to his doubtful destiny, and see the importance of life as he never saw it before

Many a young man with fair prospects for honor, wealth, or reputation, will experience the solemn truth that man is mortal, and born to die.

Many a darling child, now the delight of its parents, will forego the bitter sorrows and disappointments of a life on earth, and join the holy throng who are now singing praises to God and the Lamb.

Many a family circle, now unbroken, will, before the close of the present year, be entered by death, and one of its members shall bid a long farewell to those who are strongly attached to it by the ties of nature and friendship.

Dear reader, these are solemn thoughts, yet none the less true.

"Like shadows gliding o'er the plain,
Or clouds that roll successive on;
Man's busy generations pass;
And while we gaze, their forms are gone.
Oh! Time how few thy value weigh,—
How few will estimate a day!

The year rolls 'round, and steals away
The breath that first it gave:
What'er we be, what'er we do,
We're trav'ling to the grave."

The Family Circle.

The Fireside.

No lessons leave a more abiding impression than those that gently drop into the mind at the fireside. No fun is more tickling, or leaves behind it less to regret. No history is purer, as whole, than a fireside history, and none lives longer or more lovingly in remembrance. He who cannot look forward with yearning desires to fireside enjoyments as the staple enjoyments of his life, is greatly to be blamed; for the fireside has its duties to be done as well as its pleasures to be realized. They who make light of its sanctities, or who rise up in rebellion against its spirit or who wantonly disturb its peace, or who poison its springs of confidence with suspicion, or who introduce jealousies within that charmed circle, or who profane it by aught that savors of selfish despotism, break the spell which environs it, and forfeit its rewards. It should be the alter to which we bring our daily sacrifices—the turtle doves and young pigeons of home life—to offer them to the genius of domestic unity. There is no place where we are more bound to "mind the things of others" as our own, or more gracefully display affection in trifles, or can with more profit study to please others than ourselves.—Forgetfulness of of fireside duties indicates, to say the least, deficiency of disinterested love. A man cannot be truly judged by what he does before the world. All manner of selfish motives may urge him to wear in that broad theatre the dress of sanctity, or courage, courtesy, or patience, or considerateness, "that he may be seen of men." But it is at his own fireside that he best shows himself, when he casts aside the garments of pretence, and puts on the slippers of natural habit. What he is there and then he probably is in reality, for his heart is en dishabille, and commends itself, or otherwise, by his own proper qualities unveiled and and undisguised.

The greatest temptation the devil has for the christian is—comfort.

TIME

The term we use of duration we call time. In its extended sense, time is that portion of eternal duration which had its "beginning" with the creation of the "heaven and the earth," (Gen. 1: 1.) and which shall end when the "mighty angel" shall stand with "his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth," and shall swear "by him that liveth forever and ever," that time shall be no longer. Rev. 10: 1–6.

But we have smaller divisions of time by which its lapse, or onward motion, is measured and estimated. In mathematics, denominate numbers express quantity of seven different kinds, viz: money, length, surface, volume, weight, divergence, and time. Each of these different kinds of quantity has its divisions, called denominations, by which it is measured.—The most important division is the basis of measure, and the less important are divisions or repetitions of this basis, thus: 1 is the basis of numbers, and $\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{1}{3}$, &c., are divisions of this basis, while 2, 3, &c., are repetitions of the same basis. The foot is the basis of measure in measuring length, inches are divisions, and yards, rods, furlongs, miles, &c., are repetitions of this basis. The design of measuring quantity of any kind, is, to enable us to estimate and express the quantity measured.

In measuring time we have two natural units, or bases of measurement, the day and the year. The day is the time in which the Earth revolves upon its axis. hours, minutes, and seconds are divisions and subdivisions of the day, while weeks and months are repetitions of the day. A year is the time in which the Earth makes a circuit about the Sun; seasons are divisions of the year, and centuries are repetitions of it. It is by acorrect application of these divisions or their aggregate, that we are enabled to converse intelligently about all matters that relate to time; and it is very evident that, without such a system of measuring time, this could not be done. For illustration, if we tell you that in six months from to-day, at fifteen minutes past three o'clock in the evening, we will call at your place of residence, you, being acquainted with our method of measuring time, will know precisely when to expect us; while if we had no method of computing time, we could not communicate that idea to you at all. The minister of the gospel announces that in three weeks, at 10 o'clock in the morning, he expects to preach at a certain place.—The people know the time, and, when the hour arrives they come together at the appointed place to hear the glad tidings of salvation; but without a system of computation this could not be done.

From what has now been stated, it appears very clear, that circumstances, our relation to each other in life, and the nature of our communications to each other, render it necessary for us to have a common method of measuring and estimating time. We say a common method, for if each had his own method of computing time, it would amount to the same as not to have any at all. In the United States the denominations of money are mill, cent, dime, dollar, &c., and as we are all acquainted with the value of these denominations, we have no difficulty to understand each other in our money dealings with each other. But in England the denominations of money are pence, shilling and pound. If, therefore, we were to go to London to deal, without having any knowledge of the value of the different denominations of English money, we would certainly be in a sad plight, and we should find it necessay, before transacting any business, to acquaint ourselves with their method of reckoning money. We venture the assertion, that there are many persons in the United States, who, if they were offered £50 for a horse valued at $100, would not know whether the offer was good or not.—Now, just as necessary as it is to have a common reckoning of money to enable us to transact money matters intelligently, it is to have a common method of measuring time, to enable us to understand each other in matters that relate to time.

Our readers are all acquainted with the mode of reckoning time now in use in enlightened nations, so that it is not necessary to dwell upon this subject. But it may be of some advantage to notice that, while our year contains 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, and 49 .7 seconds, most of the Mohammedans reckon their year by twelve moons, so that the Mohammedan year contains only 354 days, 8 hours, 48 miniutes, 38 .2 seconds. It is evident, therefore, that, while our year begins regularly at the same time in the Winter season, the beginning of theirs, in less than thirty-four years of our reckoning, runs backward through all the seasons. Who does not see, then, that to read Mohammedan history, dated according to their method of computation, understandingly, we must be acquainted with their manner of reckoning time?

"Some think the Egyptians and others, once reckoned the time of one revolution of the moon their year, and that this is the source of their extravagant reckonings concerning antiquity. It is more certain that before the Hebrews' departure from Egypt, they reckoned by a year consisting of twelve months, each of which consisted of thirty days, and began their year about the beginning of our September. Possibly the Chaldean year was much the same, till Nabonassar, about the time of Hezekiah, ordered them to reckon the year by twelve months, or three hundred and sixty-five days, and the Egyptians soon after admitted this form. After the long confusion, the Greeks reckoned the year by twelve months, of thirty days each; but seem afterward to have reckoned by twelve moons, or three hundred and fifty-four days. They mostly began their year at the summer solstice, when the sun is most northerly in June; but the Macedonians began theirs about the middle of our September. At first the Roman year consisted of ten months, or three hundred and four days. King Numa extended it to twelve months, or three hundred and fifty-five days; and every second year, they added twenty-two or twenty-three days by turns. Julius Cæsar, their first emperor, fixed it at three hundred and sixty-five days and six hours, which in four years make one day, which in the fourth is added to February, and occasions that year being called leap-year. By this year we still reckon our time; but as it includes about eleven minutes too much, this, in one hundred and thirty years, runs the reckoning forward one day, and in our reckoning had run forward the year full eleven days, till this was rectified by the introduction of the New Style among us, as it was in several countries abroad, by Pope Gregory, almost two hundred years ago. The old Persian year began about the beginning of June, and consisted of three hundred and sixty-five days, or twelve months."—BROWN'S BIBLE DICTIONARY, under the head of YEAR.

We have now called your attention to the fact, that, in different countries in the same age of the world, and in the same country in different ages of the world, widely differing methods of measuring and estimating time have been in use. This we have done that the reader may have a glimpse of the difficulties which attend the study of universal history, in points having reference to dates, and to show that it is necessary, in order to read the history of any country understandingly, to be conversant with the method of reckoning time in use in that country at the particular period to which it relates. The study of the Bible comes under the same rule, as the years, the months, the days, and the hours, as used by the people of the Lord in ancient times, and consequently by the sacred writers, were all different, in some respects, from those in use among us. It may not be out of place in this connection to notice, that in measuring quantity of all kinds their measures were different from ours. In reckoning money they had the gerah, bekah, shekel, maneh, talent &c. In measuring length, their measures were, the digit, palm, span, cubit, fathom, &c. In weights their denominations were gerah, bekah, shekel, maneh, talent. In measuring capacity, for liquids they had the caph, log, cab, bin, &c.; and for things dry, the gachel, cab, omer or gomer, seah, ephah, &c. But as these measures have no bearing on our subject, we mention them, merely to impress it upon the mind of the reader, that it is indispensably necessary, in order to understand the sacred Scriptures, to be acquainted with their different tables of measures.

We shall now enter upon an examination of the divisions of time as used in the Bible; and, although this part of the subject may seem somewhat dry and irksome, we ask our readers to follow us patiently, and we feel certain that in the end you will feel yourselves more than rewarded for your trouble.

Well, we have no objection to that, if he had just told the whole truth; viz: that they only gave about two-thirds the amount of reading, and that of an inferior class, not at all to be compared to the matter found in the Companion. Hope you will take care of that part.

"You will find on sheet, seven subscribers. I think I may say, six new ones, that are not scared at the tobacco question, at least they want the Companion.

THOS. GRAY.

The Companion is a welcome visitor at my humble abode. I am always glad to see it come; nevertheless sometimes I am made to feel sorry when I see the sharp missiles some of the brethren fire at each other in controversy, particularly about tobacco and likeness. Now brother Holsinger, I do not wish to distance and hope I have not given offence, but I do think the brethren should be more mild and pleasant to each other. If they could take example by some of the sisters it would be an improvement. How very pleasantly sister

Deardorff, and sister Rohrer gave their different opinions as to who the angels are. It does me good to read such communications. Wish we had more sisters to write for the Companion."

KATHARINE FRANTZ.

We wish so too, and cannot see why we do not have, for many of them have little else to do. If they would devote the time they employ in making ruffles, and plaits, and other fineries, for themselves and children, to studying useful subjects, and writing for us, we verily believe it would be an improvement that would even be manifested in our paper. But sister Frantz's suggestion is well made, and we hope it will be received and adopted by disputants, and that they will show for each other that love that should at all times characterize brethren

"To your encouragement I will say the tobacco question has not caused any decrease in our church, but rather an increase. We have heard at least some speak favorably of you for placing your foot on the evil. And we say keep it there, and press it harder."

JOSEPH D. NEHER.

"Enclosed you will find a list of names of a few subscribers that I have gathered together for your paper. Your prospectus was received some time ago, but as the brethren about here had chances of going into other clubs, I did not try to get up a list myself. My husband went into a club some time ago. But since some of the brethren have been so seriously wounded in the "tobacco war," as to be unable for duty, even as agents for your paper, I thought I would do all I could for you. I commenced smoking tobacco when I was about 25 years old, and about twelve years ago I quit it. I am now 69 years old. My husband commenced chewing tobacco when he was quite young, and he quit using it about the same time I did. Now, we can see what a useless and filthy habit we have been relieved of.

Would it not be convenient for those who are getting up clubs, to have a small space set apart for the rates of the paper, with special rates, and premiums. I have forgotten what premiums you offer, and have not now time to hunt it up."

REBECCA WAMPLER.

The sister's suggestion is a very good one, and we will try to remember it. Our rates and premiums should have been published in every number since their first appearance.

Explanatory.

It will be seen by our correspondence department, that in every number, tobacco gets its usual share of rubs. The pressure is irresistable; we cannot hold it back, and would not if we could. We have blessed God in our heart for what has already been accomplished. We have a number of names of brethren who, with the New Year, have abandoned the use of tobacco. We mean to get up a list or pledge, and publish the names of all those who for the sake of our holy religion, and the love they have for their brethren, will quit the use of it. We firmly believe we shall have a long list.

But there is one thing that perplexes us somewhat. It is this: We do not wish to devote so much of our space to this one subject; and yet we have so many good things, consisting of essays, confessions, experiences, and admonitions, which we think ought to be published for the good of all. In view of which we have concluded to issue a Tobacco Supplement of eight pages, at some time previous to the first of April, in which all can have full liberty to express themselves. It will be sent to all subscribers free, but we will receive contributions from friends of the cause toward defraying the expenses of issuing it. We will also receive orders for extra copies at the rate of $2 per hundred. Now, friends, here is a chance to show your faith and zeal by tangible manifestations. If you will spend half as much as the tobacco devotee we shall circulate twenty thousand copies of the supplement. We have a "hook" ready for communications, and a book ready for contributions and orders for extra copies.

TO BROTHER SHANK.

You are a little too lukewarm upon the subject. We had rather you were cold or hot. Your position is untenable. The use of tobacco, as a habit, either temperately or intemperately, has never done any good, and never will, unless it was indirectly, by giving employment, in which case the slave owners, doctors, undertakers, and grave diggers, received the best patronage. You must not make any such promises. Tell the brethren that you hoped that soon all the brethren and sisters would quit the habit, and persuade them to do so, and then there will be no more of it in the Companion. O, that we could see the day when it can be said: These Dunkards believe in entire consecration; they will give up everything for their religion, and will deny themselves of every needless luxury for their brethren. They have as a body discarded tobacco using! O, what a reputation this would give God's peculiar people, and what a God-like peculiarity! Brethren, let us all work for it.

Remember the Poor.

"The poor ye have always with you, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good."

"Thou shalt open thy hand wide unto thy brother, and to thy needy, in thy land." Deut. 15 : 11.

Brethren and sisters, these cold days you draw your overcoats and shawls closely around you. And at night you sleep under warm blankets, and thick comforters, in warm houses. Do you know that there are thousands of people in the world, even in our land, and many in our own states, who are shivering with cold for want of clothing and cover? Mothers, when you have snugly tucked away your little ones in their comfortable resting places, under their nice, thick covers, did you then think of the thousands and the tens of thousands of your sisters, whose bosoms also swell with motherly affections, but whose covers are thin and nar row? And as you fell down at your bedside, did a big tear drop upon your folded hands, as you said in your heart, "O Lord bless the poor this cold night?" Has such been your experience? Be sure and let all such tears drop on your hands, it makes them so liberal. Think of the poor, brethren and sisters, pray for them, and what is worth more than all, clothe and feed them. We only recommend prayer, when you cannot do any thing better. When you are not by them, then pray for the poor. If your prayers are sincere, you will act so much more naturally, when you come in contact with them. Your hands will be "wide open," and your dimes and dollars can be taken away by the poor, without tearing the corners off. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver, and in that particular, we are like the Lord, we love him too.

"The Independent."

Many of our readers have some acquaintance with the paper bearing the above name. We have a copy of it now before us. In looking over it we observe that THEODORE TILTON, the great woman suffrage champion, had been the editor of the paper, but that his connection with it in that capacity, ceased with that issue, and that HENRY C. BOWAN, the proprietor, will occupy the chair. This is as it ought to be. Let a man talk for himself. And judging from Mr. Bowen's introduction, we believe he can and will do it. Any of our readers who can afford a first class city weekly, should get The Independent. Price $2.50 for 52 Nos. Address Henry C. Bowen, Box 2787, New York.

Answers to Correspondents.

A. PEARSOLL.—We have no account whatever of your second order for Almanacs; and feel certain that it never reached us. It is etremely dangerous to send money by letter without registering.

D. S. CRIPE.—The money sent by Joseph Hart, is credited for volume seven; and we have no account against you for 1870.

S. A. OVERHOLTZER.—Yes, as you cannot obtain green-backs, postage stamps will answer; or, you can send gold by registered letter.

WM. LEATHERMAN.—Yes, we will allow you ten per cent, on the terms you propose.

G. W. BURKHART.—How much exoneration do you want for your friend?

WM. SADLER.—Yes, we will take him; it will all come right.

M. E. HOOK.—Fifty cents more will pay for both papers

J. G. WINEY.—You have now paid for Volume 7.

BENJAMIN SHELLENBERGER.—Sixteen dollars and eighty-eight cents.

B. CLEMMER.—All right.

JOS. J. HOOVER.—It came to hand, and will receive attention in due time.

D. H. HIMES.—Yes, we will send you the note book. We have no account of the devil having entered any other swine except those which were choked.

J. H. MOORE.—There is $1.00 due on volume 6, hence $3 25 will pay for P. Y. and C. F. C. to end of present year.

DAVID HAIR: We do not publish the Cnmpanion in German. You sent 75 cents, how do you wish to have it applied?

A. C BARR: Suppose several numbers of the paper may not have been sent, after your subscription had expired. We have now commenced your subscription with beginning of year.

CORRESPONDENCE

A Visit to Hudson, Ill.

According to previous agreement, I left Urbana, Ill., Dec. 10th, and was soon in Bloomington, where I was met by brother T. Lyon. After dining with a brother in Normal, I was conveyed to brother Lyon's residence, where I was well entertained, by a religious and an intelligent family. On Sunday morning I was pleased to find at the place of meeting, brother Philip Moore, (and wife) with whom we labored during the week, in the vineyard of the Lord. Near the close of the week we were joined by brother John Barnhart, and with the brethren had some very pleasant meetings.

We were pleased to see the christian, spirited religion that these members manifested during our short visit. This characteristic is not confined to the aged only, but often fully manifested in their children. Few things are more beautiful that the journey of a father to Jesus,

" With his companion by the hand,
And all his children in a band."

Misisters may boast of their eloquence, philosophers of their knowledge, but the most useful feature is left to the parents, who by example can manifest Christ in the character of their children JNO. H. MOORE.

Dear Companion:—In my canvass to obtain subscribers for you, I was often told there was too much contention in your columns, and on that account they felt indifferent about having it. My answers were, that there had not been any thing of the kind, except the questions of eating swine-flesh, and the intemperate use of tobacco, and as I thought they were pretty thoroughly ventilated, I did not think we would have any of them in the next volume. And in this belief I renewed my exertions and did all I could. But, since I see by the last Number of Volume 6, that I labored under a mistaken idea, I feel sorry that I made promises I could not control. I feel that I must protest against the continuance. I do not take sides with either. I am not for or against tobacco, it has done harm and it has done good; and I am charitable enough to leave it to the judgment of those who use it, and if I see any of my brethern or sisters use it to their injury, I have the right, and it is my duty to admonish them in love and kindness. But to command my brother or sister, "thus and so thou shalt and must do," it is not mine nor any other brother's province to do. Christ Jesus is our Master, He has the right to command, and if we claim to be his servants or his followers, we will in no case assume the Master, but in all cases manifest the brother only in admonishing and doing good to one another.

If the Companion comes to us on such a mission, then it is a Companion indeed, but if it comes with a commanding and dictatory tone, then where Christ is only the acknowledged Lord and Master, it can not be a welcome Companion.

The declaration of war, was an inappropriate phrase, in the pages of a non-resisting periodical, but could easily have been looked over with forbearance, had it not caused war among the brethern instead of the tyrant against whom it was declared. I feel sorry that things have run in such a channel. I am not in favor of the intemperate use of tobacco, neither for habit or fashion, yet, I am opposed to the way this warfare is conducted, and the vigor with which (I am sorry to say) it seems still to be prosecuted. For sake of peace and unity, I hope brethern will desist writing, and editors printing these disturbing questions and contribute more towards holiness and perfection, and all unite in their efforts to give through the pages of our Companion such instruction as will promote peace and harmony among us here, and to the welfare of our souls hereafter.

CHRISTIAN SHANK.

Lawrence, Kansas.

Dear Companion:—It is a very pleasant thing to have friends, for without them, the world would be a wilderness; yet I must confess that I am a little out of humor with some of mine; not that I don't love them as well as ever I did; nay, verily nay; but I had fondly hoped that they would all move together into one house, since they are of one and the same occupation and by me paying a visit to one could converse with all at once. Instead of that I am put to the pains to pay my address to them individualy and probably each one wishes to be served first; this is impossible, one must be first and the other last. But perhaps if none gains much by my visit we all shall remain good friends, if friendship is not founded on loaves and fishes.

It is well known to all my friends that I had a spell of sickness, and for a long time I cared very little about the things pertaining to this life, and would rather have bid farewell to all, but now that health hath returned as well as can be expected in my age, I am willing to labor a little longer, and so I took a flying visit to Bourbon, Marshall county Indiana, attending the Dedication of the school-house, called college. Though I had never seen a college inside, I can now say I have been to college, and I believe I am not a bit prouder now than I had been before, though I learned something that I did not know before.

The first I learned was that not the brethern dedicated the college but the citizens and donors of Bourbon dedicated it to the Brethern, and gave a deed to the brethren of the Northern District of Indiana.

There were a few brethern there which took offence, because there was instrumental music, and a choir there. I do confess I feel curious, too, that the brethren should have gone so far as that: but I was soon relieved when Judge Frazier rose and addressed the audience in plain English. I could have wished that all our brethern and sisters could have heard him. I could not give a synopsis or short account of it, only this that he was called upon without previous notice to dedicate this college to the brethern. whose character as a people he discribed, and trusted that in this house those christian principles and morals would form an integral part of education, and that this school might rise in estimation and worth to the highest standard in our wide spread land. One of the brethern was called upon who gave a little history, and some of the characteristics of the body called Dunkards, remarking that the anticipation should not be raised too high. This being the first instituion of the kind among them, there are many obstacles to be removed like in every other undertaking.

A number of persons made short addreses and all pointed to this one particular, that they hoped or were convinced from the character of the people to whom they entrusted the house, that pure morality and christian virtues would be taught and instilled into the minds of the student. The dedication thus closed after several addresses in the evening.

The citizens of Bourbon were disappointed in this, that all did not get brethern to entertain, but I felt happy to know that those brethern living around Bourbon sustained such a good character, especially when I thought back some twenty-five years when I and some other brethern used to travel twenty five miles every eight weeks to preach there, when the number of brethern was less than a dozen: now several churches are formed of that territory. I will here remark that the first speaker, Jacob Shively, elected here, takes an active part in establishing this school, as well as his brother David, who also is an effectual speaker.

The second day after the dedication the school was organized, by reading the first chapter of the Gospel of John, an appropriate hymn, exhortation and prayer, all the students and persons in the house kneeling. The number of students was less than a dozen, but increased next morning. When, after the school was opened, I bid them farewell and came home, promising however to soon visit again.

I forbear to say much about brother O. W. Miller and his companion. They are affectionately remembered. I know they will be humble, relying on God for his aid in their great responsibilities.

Now we hope that those who can not see with us the propriety of such a school, will withold all evil speaking for awhile since it is an individual undertaking, and if it works well we expect them to avail themselves of its benefits. And to its friends we would say come forth then in your might, either in donating good books, periodicals, or money. It is desired that the students have the advantage of reading our Periodicals. In them a monthly report will be published. The teacher desires to use our Hymn book but it costs money. Will not our brethern furnish the same?

Now in writing and speaking favorably of this school I shall have to bear some reproach from some whom I love, but please look for the reasons of the stand I took in the 'Gospel Visitor,' and do not be too hasty in condemning, and if you can not pray for its success, then pray God if He does not approve of it, to put it down before evil hath come out of it.

Random Thoughts.

BY S. M. MINNICH.

If the editor will consent I will occupy a small space in our Companion, but if he thinks the thoughts and deas conveyed in these lines detrimental or unprofitable to the interests of the Companion, and the welfare of the Brethren, it will be a favor if this be thrown to the flames. However my egotism might cause me to desire to be seen in print, my better judgment ought to teach me that the editor whose daily avocation is to prepare food for the human mind knows better than I what is suitable food to place before a hard to-please people. It would be wrong for me to try to compel him to publish what I write by a threat that, "if you do not publish this I will not take your paper any longer." Neither should I try to coax him with the bribe that, "if you publish this I will renew." But I ought to to send my manuscript to the press without threats or promises and let it stand or fall on its own merits.—Should an article be published to which I had pinned on a threat or a promise I would be at a loss to know whether I had scared it into the paper or whether the editor thought it contained ideas that would instruct and edify his readers.

The amount of good that our periodicals have already accomplished is immense, and they should have the hearty support of the entire Brotherhood. No mercenary or selfish motive should cause us to with hold the patronage due them. Our papers are furnished to subscribers at as low a price no doubt as they can be afforded with the meagre support they now have.

The idea of subscribing for a paper whose only merit is cheapness, and introducing it into our family, knowing that its teachings are in opposition to our faith, would be as unwise in us as the merchant who employed a crazy man because he could be hired cheaply, yet knowing very well that his buildings and merchandise were in constant danger of being burned through the thoughtlessness of an unskilful hand. Some religious papers take such "liberal ground" that they will save all the world with its sin and corruption; and on this account their subscribers number many thousands, for the world loves its own and will support it. But the paper that keeps in the narrow way in which Jesus went, will not be so well supported.

There is a paper published in Indianapolis of the same size as the Companion, devoted to the cause of Masonry. It is only published once a month and the price is $1.25 per year. How does this compare with the Companion for cheapness? Let us see. We get 50 papers for $1,50, which is only twenty-five cents more than the Masonic organ, and yet the Companion gives more than four times the amount of reading matter. The Masonic paper will only guide to the Jordan of death. But the Companion is a guide through its turbid waters even to the shores of Bliss. Oh! no, brother, do not cast away the pure seeds of truth for corrupt seed, though it seem cheap.—We may find in the end that it has been the means of damning our souls.

Antioch, Ind.

"Let not then your good be evil spoken of, for the kingdom of God is not meat or drink."—ROMANS 14: 16, 17.

Beloved Brethern:—Grace and peace be with you all amen.

Now since peace is proclaimed we will also say a few words. While the war was going on we wanted to stand neutral, and we still wish to be impartial,, but the prediction of our thoughts has already come, at least in part; that the brethern will fight a goodly number out of their family company, and probably some altogether out of the church, if not a little more careful; but if the enemy be so great they may say, there will be no harm done. But let us be careful brethern, lest we be more defiled by that which cometh out than by that which goeth in. I am not going to defend anything that is evil, no, no. Neither tobacco nor evil speaking of one another. I use no tobacco, but the swine, and the sausage I will not give up, especially since our chickens and turkeys are most all dying out and are more unclean than our swine. I believe it is very wise for brethern not to eat anything to hurt themselves, and especially also, not to sell anything that is diseased and would hurt others, let it be swine, chicken, turkey or anything else. It is very unpleasant to me to greet a brother with a kiss who uses tobacco intemperately, but I would sooner deny my own self than to drive him out of my company. For meat, destroy not the work of the Lord—for tobacco destroy not the work of God. The christian warfare is a very good one, as long as we fight against our own evil propensities, but I have learned that when we strike too hard at others, we may do more harm than good. The sheep are of such a peculiar nature, though they are harmless, yet they are very easily scattered. So I believe it would be best to have that war stopped now, and pay the cost among us by confessing faults one to another, and pray for one another, that we may behold: James 5: 16, "ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not," chapter 4: 2.

We believe if brother Henry truly believes as he has already confessed, that those things are not sinful in themselves except against the body, then his terms of peace will not be so hard; surely not. Brethern let us pray for one another that those who are yet in chains or prison may be released and that we may add to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity, if these things abound in us, surely we shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, but on the other hand if we lack, it is well for us all to consider well what follows. But we are never going to be made any better by leaving the truth and going back to the law for ordinances, which are now no better than the commands of men, and rudiments of the world, Col. 2: 8, read carefully to the end and compare the German translation. I was almost constrained to write when the swine idea came out, and again, when it was said that it is for them who eat them to prove their cleanness, but since I see that their unclean iness or sinfulness is defined against the body only, I am better satisfied. But we believe that it was proven long ago that every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused if it be received with thank-giving, for it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer. 1 Timothy 4: 5. 6, "That which is sanctified by the word of God and prayer is clean." It is also clear that Paul had reference to those things that were once called unclean, or they would not have needed sanctification. So with the sheet [illegible] which he had prayed and was very hungry. I believe that the Lord was going to show him that he should go right down with the men, doubting nothing, neither the uncleanness of the Gentile nor their food, which they set before him, for they prayed him to stay certain days, Acts 10: 13, &c. Christ so loved his church that he gave Himself to sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word. And thank God that he cleansed their food, also, Ephesians 5: 25, 26. Col. 2: 14.

In Skippack Branch, Montgomery Co., Pa. On the 1st., of December 1870, quite suddenly, brother JOHN DETWEILER, aged 69 years 4 months and 7 days. On the following Sunday his remains were consigned to their last resting place in the Brethren's burying ground in Skippack, in the presence of a great concourse of relatives, friends and neighbors. The occasion was improved by brothers John Umstead, Saml. Harley, A. Cassel and J. Gotwals. The deceased was widely known as a brave soldier of the cross. Of him can well be said, "he fought the good fight of faith, and won the palm of victory.

In the Elklick branch, Somerset Co, Pa., time not given, Lydia Miller: aged 15 years.

In the Yellow Creek congregation, Dec. 30th, 1870, sister BARBARA HYSONG, aged 76 years, 8 months, 13 days. Disease Palsy. Funeral occasion improved by the Brethren, from Hebrew 9: 27, to a very large and attentive congregation of people.

S. A. Moore.

In the bounds of the Clover Creek congregation, Pa. Dec, 23d, 1870, sister CATHARINE PAUL; aged 87 years, 1 month, and 12 days. Services by the Brethren, from Rev. 14: 13.

Also in the same branch, AZARIA, son of Dr. J. F. and sister Catharine LIVINGSTON, aged 11 days.

Jacob L. Wineland

In the Crawford Co., congregation, Ohio, Sept. 5th, 1870, brother HENRY SNYDER; aged about 78 years. Funeral discourse by Elder John Brillhart, and brother Henry Heller.

Daniel Chanvers.

On the 4th, of Dec. 1870, sister REBECCA CRUMPACKER, wife of Elder Peter Crumpacker, of Montgomery county, Va., of Obstruction of the Bowels, in the 66th, year of her age. Funeral services by brother John Brubaker and Henry Beehm, from Rev. 14: 13. She was the daughter of Elder Jacob Peters, of Botetourt county. She was a member of the church about 16 years, and lived in unostentatious and unaffected piety, and died as one going peacefully and calmly to rest.

She leaves to her many relations and friends, a rich legacy of Hope that her triumphant spirit has ascended to the mansions of the blessed, and while we weep because of the tender bonds that are severed by the rude scythe of death, yet we hope to meet again in heaven if we endure unto the end. D. C. Moomaw.

Notice.

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and sells readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. Fahrney, No 30, North Dearborn St. Chicago, Illinois, or

Address H. R. HOLSINGER,

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Christian and His Echo.

True faith, producing love to God and man,
Say, Echo, is not this the Gospel plan?
The Gospel plan.

Must I my faith and love to Jesus show,
By doing good to all, both friend and foe?
[illegible]
Love him still.

If he my failings watches to reveal,
Must I his faults as carefully conceal?
As carefully conceal.

But if my name and character he blast,
And cruel malice, too, a long time last,
And if I sorrow and affliction know,
He loves to add unto my cup of woe,
In this uncommon, the peculiar case,
Sweet echo, say, must I still love and bless?
Still love and bless.

Whatever usage ill I may receive,
Must I be patient still, and still forgive?
Be patient still, and still forgive.

Why, Echo, how is this? thou'rt sure a dove!
Thy voice shall teach me nothing but love!
Nothing but love.

Amen! with all my heart, then be it so;
'Tis all delightful, just, and good I know:
And now to practice I'll directly go.
Directly go.

Things being so, whoever me reject,
My gracious God me surely will protect,
Surely will protect.

Henceforth I'll roll on him my every care,
And then both friend and foe embrace in prayer.
Embrace in prayer.

But after all these duties I have done,
Must I, in point of merit, them disown,
And trust for heaven through Jesus' blood alone?
Through Jesus' blood alone.

Echo, enough! thy counsels to my ear,
Are sweeter than, to flowers, the dewdrop tear;
Thy wise, instructive lessons please me well:
I'll go and practice them. Farewell, farewell.
Practice them, farewell, farewell.

What Hast Thou Done?

What hast thou done to show thy love,
To him who left his throne above;
His glorious throne in yonder sky,
And came to earth for thee to die?
Tell me, my soul!

What hast thou done in all these years,
Since Christ, in love, dispelled thy fears,
And in their place gave thee to find
Access to him, with peace of mind?
Tell me, my soul!

Hast thou the world renounced entire,
And for its praise felt no desire?
In folly never turned astray
But sought still [illegible]
[illegible]

[illegible]
Did'st thou with generous soul reply,
And for Christ's sake, thyself deny?
Tell me, my soul!

Hast thou e'er dried the widow's tear?
Or sought the orphan's path to cheer?
Hast thou e'er raised the fallen up,
And bidden him once more to hope?
Tell me, my soul!

Or hast thou lived in selfish ease,
Seeking alone thyself to please,
Forgetful that thy God would claim
Thy service, if thou bore his name?
Tell me, my soul!

Forget not, soul, that by and by,
A reckoning comes in yonder sky,
When Christ, as Judge, will ask of thee,
"O soul! WHAT HAST THOU DONE FOR ME!"

Speak No Evil.

[There is a lesson to be derived from the following lines; they speak of an evil which is perhaps the cause of more hatred and revenge, more sorrow and vexation, than any other one of the many evils that our tongues are liable to create:]

Nay, speak no ill—for a kindly word
Will never leave a sting behind,
But oh, to breathe each tale we've heard,
Is far below a noble mind.
Full oft a better seed is sown,
By choosing thus a kinder plan—
For if but little good is known,
Let's speak of all the best we can.

Give me the heart that fain would hide,
That would another's faults efface—
How can it please the humble pride
To prove humanity but base.
Then let us reach a higher mood,
A nobler estimate of man,
Be earnest in the search for good,
And speak of all the best we can.

Nay, speak no ill, but lenient be,
To other's feelings like your own,
If you are the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known;
For life is but a passing day,
No lip can tell how brief its span—
Then oh! the little while you stay,
Let's speak of all the best we can.

All our happiness depends upon prayer; all our prayer upon love.—Ford.

For the Companion.

Luther on Baptism.

TO BROTHER NOAH B. BLOUGH.

In compliance with your request, I submit an answer to your interrogative, in regard to [illegible] Baptism in its full signification. The expression I referred to occurs in G. S Bailey's manuel of Baptism, page 152, as preliminary to Luther's expression. I will refer you to what Doets. Ston and Flast in their theology say, which was translated by doctor Schmucker and published at Andover; Vol. 11, page 291. Speaking of the "old custom of Immersion being retained in the western Churches, and even after aspersion had been fully introduced in part of the western churches, there yet remained several who for some time adhered to the ancient custom.—This expression, following, under these circumstances, it is certainly to be lamented that Luther was not able to accomplish his wish in regard to the introduction of immersion in Baptism, as he had done in the restoration of the wine in the Eucharist."

Then immediately following, he (Baily) refers to Martin Luther's works, Vol 11, page 76, edition 1551. "On this occasion, (as a symbol of death and resurrection) I could wish that such as are to be Baptized should be completely immersed into water according to the meaning of the word and according to the signification of this ordinance (not because I think it necessary) but because it would be so beautiful to have a full and perfect sign of so perfect a thing; as also without doubt it was instituted by Christ. 1 Chase. on Baptism page 50.

For your further benefit and research into more of the great reformer's significant expressions, I refer you to a sermon of his on Baptism, which occurs in Walch page 2593. He says: "Though it be the custom in many places no longer to dip the children wholly in the font, but only to pour water on them from it with the hand it were better still and fit according to the sense of the word Baptize, that the child, or any one else who is Baptized, should be entirely sunk into the water, and drawn out again, as this would suit the signification of the thing and furnishes us a fully complete sign.

Both of Luther's formulas for Baptism that of A. D, 1523, and the revision of A. D, 1524, include the rubric: "Then let him take the child and dip it in the font," with clear reference to our immersion.

By refering to Quinter and McConnell's debate, page 129, Quinter makes this reference to Luther as a learned, popular man. In the year 1530 Luther was written to by Henricus Genesiuns, preacher at Schtershausen, in reference to Baptizing a converted Jewess. Luther replied and in his letter he says: "As to the public act of Baptism let her be dressed in the garment usually worn by Females in baths, and placed in a bathing tub up to the neck in water; then let the Baptist dip her head three times in the water with the usual words: "I Baptize you in the name of the Father," &c. Luther's works, Ed. Walch, part X, page 2537, translated by C. L. Loos, for the disciple. I have never examined many of Luther's works, but I am told by those who have that he abounds in many such significant expressions, and perhaps if your mutual friend examines the record of the great head of the church carefully, he will not be so fluent in handling the references made as false. The opinions of all great men when once proclaimed to the world do not become food for public use, so long as we exagerate or misrepresent.

Trusting this letter of information may prove satisfactory to your waiting mind. I am fraternally yours.

P. S. NEWCOMER.

For the COMPANION.

Is It So?

I notice an article written by bro. D. M. Mohler, published in Companion, Vol. 6, page 702, reviewing an article written by brother J. L. Forney, under the head of "Mutual Forbearance," and published in No. 39. Brother Mohler says in his review: "First, the Brethren administer baptism by trine immersion, not because we have a verbal 'thus saith the Lord' for it, but we must have some mode."

Is it so that we have no verbal nor written "thus saith the Lord for it?" Is it so, that the first sublime truth, the first holy ordinance ordained, set and fixed at the "Door" of the church by the Father and God of the universe, has no "thus saith the Lord" for it? Is it so, the first and most prominent doctrine of the church, that which the Brethren have labored so faithfully to establish, is now to be brought down on a level with rules and regulations that the church makes and changes, as circumstances may seem to require? The mode of Baptism a mere derivative, a conclusion of the Brethren's, drawn from a combination of circumstances, and not a command!

I must confess I have heard this kind of reasoning from other denominations, and thus they reason out of existence every ordinance and observance that we find in the word of God.

Again brother M. says, "Again, we have what we call the Lord's supper, * * * not because the Savior or the apostles in so many words commanded us to eat such a meal together." Now as to what the brother means by "so many words" we will not pretend to say, but that baptism is commanded is too plain to be denied according to the reading of Matthew 28: 19, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Thus we see it is a positive command to baptize first, in the name of the Father, second, in the name of the Son, third, in the name of the Holy Ghost, and when it is done you are at liberty to call it Christian Baptism or trine immersion, if you please, and not a mere tradition or conclusion of the old Brethren, in the absence of a command, or "thus saith the Lord for it."

The same is true of the "Lord's Supper," and of all the ordinances in the household of faith. Now we understand brother M. not as opposing any of those ordinances, but trying to establish other things by them. It is this feature that we object to, and would say let every thing stand on its own merits, or fall by its demerits. God forbid that we should ever lower the high tone of the great plan of Salvation and bring it on a level with rules and regulations that are made and changed at the will of humanity. I do not propose to say anything on the subject at issue between the two brethren whose articles I have referred to in this, but do feel like exhorting the brethren, together with all that write for our "periodicals" to be careful least at a moment they think not, the adversary will seize their pen and thrust a hard blow at the precious cause of Jesus.

Yours in Brotherly love.

Truth in Brief.

"Any person can soil the reputation of an individual, however pure and chaste, by uttering a suspicion which his enemies will believe, and his true friends never hear of. One puff of idle wind can take up millions of thistle seeds, and do a work of mischief which the husbandmen must labor long and hard to undo, the floating particles being too trifling to be seen and too light to be stopped. Such are the seeds of slander; so easily sown, so difficult to be gathered up, and yet so pernicious in their fruits, fruits that many a pure mind will catch up, and become poisoned by their insinuations, without ever finding, or caring to seek the antidote or truth of it. No reputation can refute a sneer, or human skill prevent its mischief."

The above paragraph, so truthful in its meaning, I read not long ago while visiting at the house of a friend not far distant. The truth of it forced itself so sensibly on my mind that I thought it might not come amiss to copy it for the C. F. C., hoping that none of my brothers and sisters in the Lord will become offended at it, and say it was intended expressly for them, but that, with myself, we may study each point, and see if there is not more truth than poetry in it.

Slander, is to my mind a thing a christian—one of Christ's followers—should be careful never to utter. As shown in the above extract, one such a word is like the thistle seed, which can do a work which weeks of labor may not undo again. Why are we so prone to speak of the rough side of one? Why not, with a man of old, resolve if we have no good qualities to speak of, not to talk of his evil ones. A good reputation is of priceless value, and we should be very careful what we say to vilify it. It must cause one deep remorse and sorrow to think, he has injured one of his fellow beings, through careless and unguarded remarks.

I have not had help to compose these poor but well meaning lines, but would that some of my young friends, with me, would resolve to occupy our spare moments in writing for the Companion. With me the Companion has taken place of the romance and fiction works, and oft-times when the waters of trouble have seemed very deep, and the waves boisterous, that it seemed to me I could never wade through, and was almost ready to say: I sink! I sink! some column of the Companion, founded on the holy Word, would cheer me on, and enable me to look beyond the dark cloud, to the silvery lining behind; helping me to put my trust in God, knowing that he doeth all things well, and that he will not send afflictions greater than we can bear. May we all prepare for a better world, and to meet you all in heaven is my prayer.

Scriptural Passages Alphabetically Arranged.

A man that flattereth his neighbor spreadeth a net for his feet.

Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightness than he that is perverse in his ways, though he be rich.

Confidence in an unfaithful man in time of trouble, is like a broken tooth, or a foot out of joint.

Debate thy cause with thy neighbor himself, and discover not a secret to another.

Every way of a man is right in his own eyes, but the Lord pondereth the hearts.

Fret not thyself, because of evil men, neither be thou envious at the wicked.

Go from the presence of a foolish man when thou perceivest not in him the lips of knowledge.

He that is greedy of gain, troubleth his own house, but he that hateth gifts shall live.

In the fear of the Lord, is strong confidence, and his children shall have a place of refuge.

Judgments are prepared for scorners, and stripes for the back of fools.

Keep my commandments and live, and my law as the apple of thine eye.

Let not thy heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths.

My son attend unto thy wisdom, and bow thine ear to my understanding.

Now therfore hearken unto me, O ye children, for blessed are they that keep my ways.

O ye simple, understand wisdom; and ye fools, be ye of an understanding heart.

Put away from thee a forward mouth, and perverse lips put far from thee.

Quench not the spirit.

Remove not the ancient landmarks, which thy fathers have set.

Say not thou, I will recompense evil, but wait on the Lord, and he shall save thee.

To do justice, and judgment, is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice.

Unto you, O men, I call, and my voice is to the sons of men.

Violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.

Wise men lay up knowledge, but the mouth of the foolish is near destruction. D. E. B.

An Example.

If Christians, when they have a matter of difference, would graciously agree to meet with each other in prayer, and pray together kindly for each other, their contention would soon end; but one cannot stoop and the other will not. They are not so wise as Luther's two goats, who met upon a narraw plank over a deep water; they would not go back, and they dare not fight, at length one of them lay down while the other walked over him, and so peace and safety attended both. Why should not Christians try this method?

Heavenly Occupations.

Thanks be to God our Savior, for his words concerning us of the Gentile world, that "many shall come from the East and the West, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven." Aye, sit down with them. That is the way to listen to their grace-taught stories from their fire-touched lips. Sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and if with them, then also with Adam and Eve, children of God of every age and clime.

Will not that be glorious? What a world of wonders, new and old, there will be to hear and tell! What a clearing up of mysterious things! What an unfolding of the riches of glory, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, which have been hidden from all the generations past, and which are now past finding out! What an unvailing of the fullness of his love which passeth knowledge! And what a wealth of heart-history, not unknown, will be opened up, to be known and read of all!—Boardman.

Do Your Children Pray?

It might be a rather hard question for some teachers to answer if the question had reference to their own conduct. The teacher ought to pray. If each one could realize how much the future of each scholar depends on his or her faithfulness, and how important it was that the Divine blessing should attend their labors, the duty would not be so often forgotten. Do your children pray? Have you ever asked the question? It is not well, either with teacher or scholar, if the former is unconcerned on so vital a point. One great object of the Sunday school is to lead these lambs to the Great Shepherd, and we cannot too early urge them to seek His favor. The teacher should know exactly the position of each scholar, and while making their salvation a special subject of prayer, urge upon them the importance of this duty. A praying boy or girl will, in all likelihood, become a praying man or woman, and when there is a prayerful heart, we may count with confidence on a godly, useful life.

Keep as close as you can to the genuine, even track of a Christian walk, and labor for a prudent and meek behavior, adorning your holy profession, and this shall adorn you, and sometimes gain those that are without, yea, even your enemies shall be constrained to approve it.—Archbishop Leighton.

December 13th 1870.

By Barnabas C. Hobbs.

Superintendent of Public Instruction.

It is well for us sometimes to go up to the top of Mt. Pisgah and survey the promised land. We may read the book of history and learn much. We can not fail to be profited by studying carefully the condition of the present. Aided by unfulfilled prophecy, men of faith and hope may take their bearing and distance on the ocean of time.

In the learning of antiquity we must remember that in the absence of books, men studied trees, mountains and rivers, plants and animals, the stars and the ocean, time and eternity; and what we see in Patriarchs, who walked and talked with God, is but the record of lives and characters well developed by thought, and obedience to duty, according to the demands of their age. They filled up their mission in earth honorably and well, having the assurance that they pleased God, and in that immortality which was the anchorage of their hope, they still live.

In seeking a true solution of the designs of the Creator in placing man on the earth, and of his ultimate destiney, we must seek instruction in His own Book, written for our learning, with the lesson to all that "Secret things belong unto God, but those that are revealed belong to us and to our children!"

The duty assigned to Adam before the fall, required thought, and mental development. A garden was to be dressed and kept, in which were four rivers. Plants and animals were to be named. All the energies of mind and of the physical powers were called into play. He had given him dominion over the fish of the sea, the fowl of the air, over all cattle. He was to replenish and subdue the earth. The forces of nature, and the wealth of the forest and of the mine were to be subject to his intelligent powers, and he was to keep the way of the tree of life.

As time and society advanced, and the purposes of God were manifested by important periods, we discovered the great instrumentalities which He has used in the accomplishment of His ends. Men have stood out in history in full proportions of intellectual and moral development, according to the civilization of their respective ages.

Abraham was a man whose impress on thought and religion will never be effaced. His noble and generous mind, whether we consider him socially, politically, or religiously, was of a superior order of development, for the period in which he lived. He performed well his mission in the earth as a man of large and generous sentiment, of faith and of works.

When a nation was to be delivered from the tyranny of a heartless Egyptian oppressor, no ordinary man was chosen for a leader, but one who blended all the learning of his age with that faith in God which leads its possessor to choose affliction with the people of God, rather than to become a devotee to the pleasures of life. He was a man of letters, of great intellectual power, blended with meekness, and of political, legal and executive ability. The Pentateuch is the work of his editorial pen, and the labors of his master mind as an instrument in the Divine Hand, will exert a wondrous power in the earth through all time.

For the accomplishment of the great work entrusted to him, men were demanded of diversified skill, learning and ability. Men who were filled with the Spirit of God in wisdom and understanding and knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship. "Even wise-hearted men in whose heart the Lord had put wisdom, even every one whose heart stirred him up to come unto the work to do it," such were the type of men on whom Moses was to depend for the accomplishment of the work before him, earnest, skillful, educated, inspired, devotional, chosen men. Four hundred years passed away and David a shepherd king of God's annointing, was crowned by the Elders of Israel. He organized his court. A well trained band of men made up his conquering army. He needed, however, a civil and diplomatic corps, men of learning, to conduct his correspondence, and adjust his treaties with foreign powers, who spake in other languages; men that "had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do." Two hundred was given as his compliment, in addition to the Rabbies and Scribes, for the reading and expounding of the Law.

Solomon, while yet a youth, was chosen his successor to the throne. He made his petition to God for wisdom and knowledge that he might perform well the duties of a monarch. Wisdom and knowledge was granted him, and to this blessing were added riches and honor, such as no king before nor since has attained. His learning was diversified. It pertained to trees and plants, creeping things and fishes. It excelled the wisdom of the east and of Egypt. Precepts, proverbs, songs, and instructive lessons of passing excellence, are the products of his pen.

An unfaithful people brought the empire of David and Solomon to an inglorious end. An Assyrian conqueror buried their temple. As captives her nobles hang their harps on the willows, and sat pensively on the banks of the distant Euphrates. But they were not destined to ignorance and idleness. The church had a work for them even in captivity. Many learned men were required to hold state relations with one hundred and twenty seven provinces, and since Palestine was one of them, it was fitting that her young noblemen serve the court of her conquerors. The history of David, Hananiah, Michael, Azariah, Mordecai, Esther, Ezra, and Nehemiah, shows how God watched over and preserved His people.

In their captivity Jerusalem was still above their chief joy, and God restored them to their Fatherland. With them He sent the intelligent Engineer, the Architect, the skillful Diplomatist and the scholar, as well as the Priest and the Levite. The rich, pure Hebrew of David, and Isaiah, and Jeremiah was no longer their household language. Their dialect was Chaldee. The Bible, however, must be read and understood. The pure original must be rendered into the vernacular. The Linguist was the servant of the Church. Ezra, with his thirteen associates, erected his pulpit of wood, and "read in the book of the Law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading."

The Lawgiver has ever watched over His Law and has given the hearts of men solicitude for its preservation and purity—that the genuine, authentic text should not become corrupt. He has kept the words, syllables, and even the letters counted.

The Jewish college at Alexandria had not cultivated letters for nought. The fitting time came for the Bible to go to Greece, and Rome, and Carthage. Ptolemy Philadelphus, prompted by a desire to see in the Greek language and in the library in Alexandria, which he had established, the book that contained the prophesy that Grecia should be the conqueror of Persia, sent to Jerusalem for men well skilled in Greek and Hebrew, to make the translation. A solemn service was thus demanded of the church, by a heathen monorch. It was nothing less than giving to the Gentile world the Divine Law, to a people from whom in time, the Lord gathered a glorious harvest. Worthily did the church and the scholar respond to the call. Seventy-two men, six from each tribe, were selected for the work. Their translation was so faithfully made that both Jews and Christians have read it in all succeeding time as a standard authorized version of the Bible.—By this version, the Law and the prophets went out, through the Jewish Synagogues, to the Grecian and Roman states, and the gentile mind was prepared for the glad tidings of great joy that came with the advent of the Messiah.

The Oracles at Delphi had refused to answer the petitions of its votaries. The heathen world was becoming prepared for a new epoch. The cycles of time were reaching a transitive period. There was born in the "city of David a Savior which is Christ the Lord." The gospel message was proclaimed by angels whose anthem was glory to God in the Highest, on earth peace and good will to men." The east sent her wise men to do Him reverence, and waiting evangelists lingered in the Holy City, to take the infant Redeemer in their arms and to bless Him before they died. The Prophet which the Lord their God had promised to the children of Abraham, came. He accomplished His mission on the earth and on the cross. He died to make atonement for the sins of the world, and rose from the dead for our justification and sanctification, and ascended up on high a glorified Redeemer. He gave gifts to men and commissioned them to go into all the world and to preach the gospel to every creature.

Who were those evangel men! Some were, when called, unlearned, unlettered, and untilled fishermen of Galilee. Jesus taught them in person for three years in His own school. In their riper years, they gave evidence that neither logic nor letters had been overlooked. Their writings are marked by intellectual ability and culture. Their Lord had a work for them to do Men saw in them divine power, and that they had been with Jesus. They healed the lame, and raised the dead. God was glorified through them and gospel power and fire and light were felt and seen by the multitudes. They filled well, their appointed place in the Church. The Lord has a varied service and can raise up and qualify the humblest instruments to perform it.

All his Apostles were not of this stamp of mental culture. Matthew was found at the receipt of custom, a financier. Luke was a doctor of medicine, a professional man, and had peculiar qualities which fitted him for a varied service Manaan was brought up with Herod the Tetrarch. Alexandria furnished an earnest reformer in the person of Apollos, an eloquent man and mighty in the Scriptures.

The scholar was needed for the work. The schools of Plato, of the Epicureans, and of the Stoics were to be fearlessly and successfully met. Not only in Damascus, the Assyrian capital, and in Jerusalem the Holy City, were the Doctors of the Law to have shown to them in masterly logic and clearness the glad tidings of the Son of Righteousness, the end of the Law and its glorious ante-type, (which Patriarch and Prophets desired to see but were not able) but pagan Greece and Rome were to be brought to confusion and the seeds of a new and purified Literature, and of eternal salvation through a crucified and risen Savior, were to be sown where the world worshipped the great goddess Diana, in Athens and Corinth, the centres of Grecian literature and art, and in the seven-hilled city of Italy, in which the wealth, and learning, and glory of the Roman Empire had concentrated, in the Forum and in the Palace, in the Latin, Greek and Hebrew languages.

The fitting man was found in the apostle Paul, who in early life had been an earnest student, and whose knowledge of the Law surpassed many of his equals in his own nation, who was familiar with the literature and learning of Chaldea, Greece and Rome, as well as with the Law of his fathers, a man who held the pen of a ready writer, who was an accurate and logical thinker, whose heart had been baptized into gospel light, life and faith, the wisdom and power of God.

The fire then kindled still burns, and yet will burn until it encircles and evangelizes the earth. There is a majesty and grandeur about the life of such a man. Superior intellectual attainments, devotion to his Lord and Master, patience in tribulation, unconquerable courage and persistent fixedness of purpose, full of faith and hope, having a large, liberal and tolerant mind. All, these varied and extraordinary qualities combined to render him a personage that blessed the church by his labors, and at the end of his eventful race he was garlanded with a far richer crown than honored the brow of the Olympian victor Slowly and stubbornly the superstition of the Gentile world yielded to the higher and purer teaching of the gospel. The Priests of Jupiter, Minerva, and Diana, the philosopher and scholar, for more than three centuries contested the field before the Roman Empire did homage to the king of the Jews whom it had ignominiuously crucified. Not only so, but in that very seat of learning, in the college of Alexandria, speculative philosophy, supported by an able pen was found openly and insidiously jeopardizing the Christian faith. Science and Literature when baptized into gospel light, and life, and faith, have ever been great powers in support of the church, but under the influence of unbelief and of pagan and pantheistic philosophy, are only equal powers for evil among men.

Under the reign of Roman Emperors, from Nero to Constantine all the infidel powers were arrayed against the conquering church, Ignatius, Quadratus, Eusebius, Polycarp, Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Athenagoras, Origen, Cyprian were but a few of a learned host who met earnestly and well their ingenious attacks. The Bible found its defenders among men of letters and their names are honored in history.

The design of anything may be inferred from its capacities. Take the simplest form of existance—a grain of sand. It is hard and gritty, and so may be used for polishing. It may help to rear the bulwark of the coast, to prevent the ocean from laying waste the land. It may put forth its tiny might of gravitation, and exercise a real and necessary though infinitestimal influence in holding the worlds in their places. These, then, are the offices God has assigned us.

When we record our angry feelings, let it be on the snow, that the first beam of sunshine may obliterate them forever.

For Social Meetings.

"To do good and to communicate forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." HEBREWS, 13 : 16.

How we rejoice when we assemble together and talk of the goodness of God. When we thus meet we feel like talking about our Heavenly Father's will, and we fell assured that while talking on that blessed subject, we are just doing what old brother Paul told the Collossian brethren that they should do; that is, to teach and admonish one another. How often have we been made glad, when we heard a dear brother or sister admonishing us to be faithful in the Master's cause. When we communicate such thoughts to one another, it is then that our conversation is in heaven, and not about the perishing things of time and sense. It is then that God is well pleased with our sacrifice. Then let us meet together often; then our Christian ties will become stonger and stronger, and finally we will meet to part no more.

The Monk in Solitude.

I recollect a pleasant story, told by a pious minister, about a monk of former days. He resolved to leave his monastry, on the ground that he there too frequently met with causes of provocation, and was betrayed into anger and other sins. Accordingly he retired into the desert, in the hope that solitude would enable him to serve God with an easier mind. One day his pitcher hap dened to upset, and, when lifted up, fell a second time, which kindled his anger to such a pitch that he dashed it to the ground and broke it into a thousand pieces. When he came to himself, he said, I now see that I cannot be at peace, even in solitude, and that the fault lies not in others, but in myself. He then returned to the monastery, and after many strenuous efforts, succeeded in subduing his passions, not by flight, but by self-denial.—Christian Scrivner.

Kind admonitions are better than harsh reproofs.

Apologetic.

We do not like to make apologies, but we deem it necessary at least to inform our readers of the cause of the irregularity which they must have observed in the appearance of our issues since the beginning of the new volume.

Well, to begin, we must tell you that we have had a terrible time of it. Our prospectus having been sent out too late, and then combined causes having delayed many of the lists, subscribers were late coming in. Our first number was printed several days before its date, but about that time the letters began to pour in upon us at the rate of from forty to ninety letters a day, so that it took over a week before we could get our books into a shape to address from. And by the time the second number was printed we were in no better shape; and at the present time we find ourselves nearly a week behind hand, both in the editorial and printer's department. To add to our consternation we were taken with a spell of sickness which deprives us of half a week of precious time. Now friends, please have patience with us; we are straining every nerve to get into regular working order, and hope to attain our design ere long.

The Pious Youth will also be over two weeks behind its regular time.

Don't Relax.

Brethren, sisters, and friends, please do not yet relax in your efforts to add names to our lists of subscribers. We have not yet by one thousand the number that we ought to start with. True there are many yet to hear from, but how favorably they will respond, is unknown to us. Many have written us encouraging words, and some have sent for agent's outfits, and assure us that they will return telling lists. Nevertheless, we know from present indications that we shall need the aid and influence of all who have the success of the cause at heart. Shall we have it?

Thanks.

The assistant editor hereby expresses his thanks to brother Jacob P. Hoover of Morrison's Cove, for a present of a sack (one fourth barrel) excellent white wheat flower. We accept it gratefully as a token of affection and as an evidence of charity; and we pray the Lord, the dispenser of all good, to remember and reward our brother's kindness.

Answers to Correspondents.

P. S. NEWCOMER. Amy Fahrney's subscription would not have expired until No. 31, present Volume. We have now credited her to Vol. 8, No. 31, and charged you with $1.50. Is that right?

HENRY F. LOEHR. What is your postoffice?

SOLOMON HENDRICKS. We can find no account against you.

H. H. ARNOLD. Have no charges against you. When you write again let us know how many names, and how much money you have sent, and will credit on Vol. 7.

ABRAHAM CAUFFMAN. Yes, it is right.

WM. HUGHART. Loxa, Coles, Co., Ill's, wants a furnished farm on shares, somewhere among the Brethren.

ADAM COCANOWER. Patoka, Gibson Co., Ind., wishes to correspond with the Brethren, at some place where there is a chance for a poor man to get a home. Would prefer going south of his present location.

L. S. SNYDER. One dollar more for the Phrenological Journal.

DAYS.

The Hebrews computed their Days from evening to evening, according to the order mentioned in the first chapter of Genesis: "The evening and the morning were the first day." Their first day of the week began at sunset on the day we call Saturday, and ended at sunset on the next day, where their second day began, and so on throughout the week; so that their Sabbath, being the seventh day of the week, had its beginning at sunset on the day we call Friday, and continued till the next sunset, when the first day of the new week set in. Upon this point all authors unite; but as we shall follow no man any farther than he follows the Bible, God's word shall be our support and guide.

We have more than an intimation of this computation of the day, in Ex. 20: 11, where Moses says: "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested on the seventh day." Here the creation of "the heaven and the earth," is included in the six day's creation; but by reference to Gen. 1: 2, 3, we learn that "the heaven and the earth" were created before light was spoken into existence; therefore it follows that the darkness preceding the light was counted as a part of the first day.

Again, on the tenth day of the seventh month, there was a day of atonement: it was a holy convocation. On this day they were required to afflict their souls, and to "offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord," and to abstain from all "work in that same day." This day was also called a Sabbath, and is spoken of in the following decisive language: "It shall be unto you a Sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls, in the ninth day of the month at even: from even unto even, shall ye celebrate your Sabbath." Lev. 23: 32. As this Sabbath was the tenth day of the month, and as it was to be celebrated "from even unto even," it is evident that the tenth day of the month was reckoned "from even unto even;" and if the tenth day of the month was computed in this way, a harmonious system of computation required all other days to be reckoned in the same manner.

Once more, on a certain occasion, when our Savior was in Capernaum, teaching in the synagogue on the Sabbath day, "they were astonished at his doctrine; for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes." But they thought it unlawful to bring the sick to him to be healed on the Sabbath. After healing one who had an unclean spirit, he left the synagogue, and "they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John," where he healed Simon's mother-in-law, who had been lying sick of a fever. "And at even when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils." Ma. 1: 21-32. From this circumstance we see that the Sabbath day, the seventh day of the week, ended at sunset; and, certainly, where the seventh day ended, the first day of the week began. As we have now shown that they reckoned "from even unto even," and that their days began at sunset and ended at the next sunset, we will proceed to notice the divisions of this natural day.

We noticed in our remarks on time, that circumstances render it necessary for us to have a common system of computing time, and that the day—the natural day, consisting of twenty-four hours—is a natural basis of measuring, or reckoning time. We now add that the Lord gave us example both for the division and repetion of this basis. "God divided the light from the darkness: and God called the light Day, and the darkness he called night." Here God divides the natural day into light and darkness—day and night; affording an example for dividing the day into parts. This division was sufficient for the purpose of giving a history of the creation. In following this example, mankind made such sub-divisions as were requisite to enable them to converse understandingly about all their affairs having reference to time. We also read of the first day, the second day, and so on, up to the seventh day: "And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made" In this we have an example of the repetition of the day—the basis of measurement—and of estimating the lapse of time. The reader will notice, too, that on the fourth day, God having set lights in the firmament of the heaven," to rule over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness," he said: "Let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and years." Thus we are instructed by God, in Nature, and in his own reference to time, to have a system of measuring and estimating time: a system adapted to the nature of our communications to each other.

The natural day is the time in which the earth makes one revolution upon its axis; the artificial day is the time during which the sun is above the horizon. The term day is used with both of these meanings in Gen. 1: 5. "And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day." It is probable that in Gen. 1: 5, 8, 13, 19, 23, 31, the terms evening and morning mean the same as darkness and light in the fifth verse. If this be so, the word evening, in these places means, the whole night, or time of darkness; and the word morning, means the whole artificial day, or time of light: it is certain that the expression, "the evening and the morning," embraced the whole natural day.

Very early, in the age of the world,

it became necessary to have an improved system of computation; and, although it is difficult to trace the changes, and the precise time at which they were introduced, it is but reasonable to conclude that the divisions of the day were such as could most naturally and easily be made, and such as were best adapted to their circumstances and wants. At first, minute divisions not being necessary, they were content to divide the artificial day into morning and evening, or morning, noon, and evening. The Psalmist said: "Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud." Noon was, when the sun was on the meridian—midway between its rising and its setting—the middle of the day. That part of the day which intervened between sunrise and noon, was called morning; and the part between noon and sunset, was called afternoon—Judg. 19: 8—or evening. In the 90th Psalm, 6th verse, it is said in reference to grass: "In the morning it flourisheth, and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down, and withereth." Here morning means the forenoon, and evening the afternoon. The words morning and evening are also used in this sense in Eccl. 11: 6, "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand."

More frequently, however, morning means early in the day, and evening, late in the day. This is so evident to Bible readers, that it is unnecessary to refer to texts for proof; but for the satisfaction of those who wish to refer to the scriptures on this point, we will give a few citations. For the use of the word morning, see Gen. 19: 15; 24: 54; 40: 5; Ex. 7: 15; 10: 13; Deut. 28: 67; Judg. 16: 2; 20: 19; Math. 16: 3; 27: 1. Evening, Ps. 104: 23; Math. 16: 2; Luke 24: 29. Although these are but a few of the many texts in which these words are found, we deem them sufficient.

The morning, or forenoon, and the evening, or afternoon, were both divided into two equal parts, dividing the day into four equal parts, or fourths. Hence we read in Neh. 9: 3, "And they stood up in their place, and read in the book of the law of the Lord their God one fourth part of the day; and another fourth part they confessed, and worshipped the Lord their God."

We also read of the "heat of the day," (Math. 20: 12,) and the "cool of the day," (Gen. 3: 8). These allusions to divisions of the day are somewhat indefinite; and as they have no particular reference to our subject, we shall pass them by simply stating that the "heat of the day" was the warmest part of the day, including a part of the forenoon, and a part of the afternoon.

The division of the day into hours was also in use among the Hebrews; but they probably knew nothing of this division before the Chaldean captivity. The first mention we have of the hour is in Dan. 3: 6. The artificial day was divided into twelve equal parts called hours. These hours were numbered from one to twelve; the first beginning at sunrise, and the twelfth ending at sunset. As the length of time between sunrise and sunset is not the same at all seasons of the year, it is evident that the hours also differed in length at different times.

At the time of the summer solstice when their days were the longest, their hours were considerably longer than they were at the winter solstice when the days were the shortest. Let it be remembered, however, that at all seasons of the year the day was divided into twelve hours: "Are there not twelve hours in the day?" Jno 11: 9. When the days and nights were of equal length, the commencement of their first hour synchronized with our six o'clock A. M., and the end of their second hour agreed in time with our 8 o'clock; their third hour with our 9 o'clock, their sixth hour, with our twelve o'clock, or noon; and so of the other numbers in their order. Math. 20: 1–12.

Your attention shall now be called to the divisions of the night. The night was divided into watches; so called because they were severally the length of time which watchmen were required to spend in their nightly service. Before the captivity, and according to the proper Jewish reckoning, the night was divided into three watches. They were each four hours long; and hence the first watch ended at the fourth hour of the night, or about our 10 o'clock; the second, at the eight hour, or near our 2 o'clock; and the third, at sunrise. A watch being the third part of the night, it is plain that each watch varied in length one-third as much as the nights did throughout the year. The first or evening watch, was called "the beginning of the watches," Lam 2: 19; the second was "the middle watch," Judg. 7: 19; and the third, "the morning watch," Ex. 14: 24; 1 Sam. 11: 11.

After the establishment of the Roman Supremacy, the night was divided into four watches of three hours each, which were described either numerically; as, the first watch, the second watch, &c., as in the case of "the fourth watch of the night," Math. 14: 25; or by the terms "even, midnight, cock-crowing, and morning," All these watches are mentioned in our Savior's exhortation to his disciples: "Watch ye therefore, for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning." Math. 13: 35.

The evening extended into the night as far as the first watch did, and the morning extended as far back into the night as to the commencement of the morning watch. In harmony with this it is said of Jesus: "And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed."—Mk 1: 35

Nevin, in treating on the divisions of the night, says: "It was also, like the day, measured into twelve equal hours, from sunset to sunrise." BIB. ANTIQ. VOL. 1, CHAP. 8, § 4, WATCHES.

Reference is made to this division of the night in Acts 23: 23: "And he called unto him two centurions, saying make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Cesarea, and horsemen three score and ten, and spearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night." It might be claimed that "the third hour of the night" is the same as "the third watch of the night," but the position could not be sustained; for, according to Brown and Smith, Antipatris was forty-two miles from Jerusalem. Albert Barnes says it was about thirty-five miles from Jerusalem. In the 33d verse we read: "Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul and brought him by night to Antipatris." This they could not have done by starting at the third watch; but by starting at the third hour of the night, three hours after sunset, by a forced march they could accomplish the trip. It is certain, therefore, that the night was divided into hours, the same as the day. When Jesus, in the night of his agony, came to his disciples and found them asleep, he said: "What! could ye not watch with me one hour?" Math. 26: 40. And during our Savior's mock trial before Caiaphas, Peter having twice denied his Lord, it is said: "And about the space of one hour after, another confidently affirmed," &c. In both of these cases the term hour was applied to portions of the night.

They also used the word hour in reference to transpiring events, the same as is common amongst us. Ananias, because of his treachery," fell down and gave up the ghost," and he was buried. "And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in." Acts 5: 7. Again, when, at Ephesus, Demetrius had excited the worshipers of Diana, Alexander being put forward, it is said: "And when they knew that he was a Jew, all with one voice about the space of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Acts 19: 34. We wish our readers particularly to remember this use of the hour.

We have drawn up a diagram to illustrate the divisions of the day, as used in the Sacred Scriptures, and to show how these divisions compare with our computation. The diagram represents the day when the day and night are of equal length.

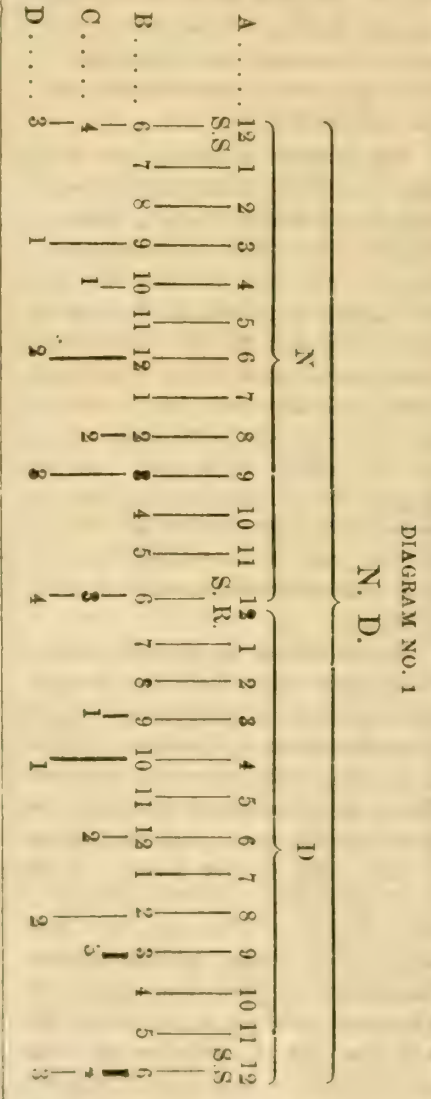

DIAGRAM NO. 1

N. D. Natural day. D. Artificial day.—N. Night. S. S. Sunset. S. R. Sunrise.

The brace N. D. include the natural day, reckoned from (S.S.) sunset to the next (S.S.) sunset.

N. spans the night, from (S.S.) sunset to (S.R.) sunrise.

D. spans the artificial day, from (S.R.) sunrise to (S.S.) sunset.

The A line of figures, represents the hours as numbered according to the Bible computation; and the B line, the hours as numbered according to our own reckoning. By a comparison of these numbers it will be seen that their first hour synchronizes with our 7 o'clock, their second, with our 8 o'clock; their third, with our 9 o'clock; their sixth, with our 12 o'clock; their ninth, with our 3 o'clok; and their twelfth, with our 6 o'cclock. The hours of the day and of the night compare in the same manner.

Line C represents the three watches of the night prior to the Chaldean captivity, and the division of the day into fourths. Line D shows the four watches of the night after the captivity; and the morning of the day, the heat of the day and the evening.

Before concluding this chapter, we will yet notice a few incidental references to the day and its divisions.

"Then came the day," as in Luke 22: 7, refers to the commencement of the natural day; but, "when the day was fully come," as in Acts 2: 1, refers to the beginning of the artificial day, the night of the natural day being past.

"The dawning of the day," as in Josh. 6: 15: Job 3: 9; 7: 4, refers to the appearance of light in the morning; but, "as it began to dawn toward the day," as in Matth. 28: 1, refers to the setting in of the natural day in the evening.

As already shown, in reference to daytime, morning sometimes means the entire artificial day, sometimes the forenoon, and sometimes the early part of the day; and evening sometimes means the afternoon, and sometimes late in the day. In reference to the night, evening sometimes means the whole night, or time of darkness, sometimes the first half of the night, sometimes it is equivalent to "the evening watch," and sometimes it means early in the night; and morning sometimes means after midnight, sometimes it is the same as the morning watch, and sometimes it refers to the dawning of the day. It is clear, therefore, that the term morning is used in reference to all parts of the natural day, except the first half of the night; and the word evening is also used in reference to all parts of the natural day, except the first half, or forenoon of the artificial day. From this let us learn to ascertain the precise time referred to, by reference to the context. Indeed, it is only by taking the Bible as its own expositor, and by a just comparison of scripture with scripture, that we can come to a correct knowledge of its teachings.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Henry:—A Happy New Year to you.

The brethren of the Koon River Church, Guthrie county, Iowa, wish me to inform you that we met in council on Saturday the 31st of December 1870, nearly all the members present, recieved and confirmed a selection of 8 acres of ground which a former committee had selected, having been appointed for that purpose, for a burying ground and a meeting house; and we will proceed to make the necessary preparations for building a House during the present year, if the Lord will and we are able. We will meet in council again in a few weeks, and in the mean time will try to find out our strength to build. The congregation is small, numbering at present between twenty and thirty members only; consequently it will be a heavy tax upon us; but we need a house so badly that we are determined to try. If the richer congregations east, or any brethren that have plenty of this world's goods, feel like giving us aid, it would be very thankfulully received. The money could be sent to either of the undersigned, brothers J. D. Haughtelin, J. W. Diehl, or the writer; at Panora, Iowa.

Brother Robert Badger and Zachariah Mummert of Painter Creek, were with us and had preaching Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night. Meetings were well attended, and much interest, apparently manifested. May the good Lord bless the efforts of our beloved brethren, in helping to build up our little Zion. Yours in love.

By order of the Church.

Brother Henry:—The brethren at HUDSON, are about trying to raise funds for the erecting of a meeting house, for the use of the brethren. We very much need such a house; and finding that the means are hard to raise, we thought by giving a notice of our intentions in the C. F. C. that some brethren in easy circumstances might help us to accomplish the enterprise. Any remittance for that purpose may be sent to John Y. Snavely, Hudson, Ills., and will be acknowledged in C. F. C. from time to time, and will be gratefully received.

THOMAS D. LYON.

Brother Holsinger: Enclosed you will find $13 50 for 9 copies of the Companion, to partly supply the place of those subscribers who have discontinued your paper, for the simple reason that you have published some pieces against the filthy practice of chewing and smoking tobacco; and I am fully persuaded in my mind, that every minister of the Gospel of Christ, should oppose the evil alluded to above, for it is a moral, religious, physical and intellectual evil, and all Christians should stay if possible, any evil so injurious to the morals of the young and rising generation, as the drinking of ale, beer, or any kind of intoxicating liquors, and that of chewing and smoking the nauseating weed, called tobacco.

Let me here remark, that I was sorry to learn through your paper, that old brother Jacob Steel, (whom I, in my boyhood used to hear preaching the Gospel, and heard him gladly), was advocating the usage of tobacco. I have often heard some of our old brethren preach against pride, or the "lust of the eyes," but omitted to say a word against "the lust of the flesh." Consequently they shunned, or failed to declare the whole Gospel of Christ, and I do not believe that any man can consistently preach the doctrine of cleanliness, holiness and perfection, being himself a servant of such a filthy practice as named above.

Let me say in conclusion, that the practice of chewing and smoking tobacco is either a sinful or a virtuous practice; if virtuous, then let us recommend it to our wives and children, our neighbors and their children; but if sinful, then let us abhor it, resist it, and stay its evil influence, that we may save the young and rising generation from the sinful practices now so prevalent in the world, and be prepared for that city where nothing unclean shall enter, but the pure in heart, who shall enter through the gates into that heavenly city, and shall see God, and enjoy him forever.

Proposed Visit.

Leave home on Thursday, the 26th January; stop off at the city of Lancaster one night. Leave Lancaster on the morning of the 27th, for Norristown Pa., stay over Sunday, till Wednesday following. On Thursday the 2nd of February will go to Philadelphia, and stay over Sunday if desired, God willing and we live.

GRAYBILL MYERS.

A Brief Sketch of a Catholic Funeral.

To-day, Dec 29th, 1870, the funeral of Mrs. John Nagle, of Cornwall, came off. Having been requested to give conveyance, I consented to do so; and, therefore, had an opportunity for the first time to witness the ceremonies of a Catholic Funeral. The body of the deceased, and the friends and acquaintances present, having been conveyed to the "Catholic Church" in Lebanon, a distance of five miles, the ceremonies of "Mystical Babylon" were performed. The house was cold, and so was everything. It was beautifully decorated; and of all the images, I confess my inability to give a description.

The ceremonies consisted properly of chanting by the priest, three little boys, and a choir of lady singers. They had music on the organ too. I could not understand their chanting for it was all in "an unknown tongue"—Latin, and therefore I could not "prepare for the battle."

Some water was sprinkled over the coffin, and various other manœuvres were performed. All took about forty-five minutes. Catholics verily have much patience for listening so long to what they do not understand.

The Priest now said, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live," He spoke about ten minutes on these words, and the principal points which he noticed were about these: "We must have the true faith,—the Catholic faith,—not the Protestant faith which originated three hundred years ago. O what consolation, brethren, to belong to the Catholic church; for 'though we were dead, yet shall we live!' Nor is it faith alone as some heretics teach. St. James says, 'faith without works is dead.'" The works which he noticed were, "that the body of the deceased had been brought here that these ceremonies could be performed. We trust she is at rest, but if she has sinned so that she is in punishment it now remains for the priest and friends to pray for her that she may not remain long there."

The body of the deceased was now taken to the Catholic cemetery, about one mile from the church, and interred amidst "unknown" chantings, &c. Now the priest said: "Brethren I want you to go right off home from here, i. e, you are not to stop in Lebanon, but go directly home to Cornwall. When we had the last funeral from Cornwall you went from hotel to hotel, and made disturbance along the way. There was a talk about it. It gives Protestants an occasion to ridicule. If any will stop I will read their names in church next Sunday. It is disgraceful for Catholics to be have so." And we returned home well pleased with the command, and did not stop save to water the horses, and for some other necessaries.

GEO. BUCHER.

Cornwall, Pa.

Brother Holsinger: By the grace of God I will endeavor to write a few lines unto you. I received a circular from you some time ago to solicit subscribers to the C. F. C., but am sorry to say, so far have been unsuccessful, but I will try again and again. I am not discouraged. I think in a few weeks I will get out among the people more, and if I get any subscribers, will send the list immediately; I will do all I can for you as I would like to see your paper in every family, especially in our town, where pride and the fashions of the day, are corrupting everything, even the churches. I do not get to church often, therefore the Companion is a welcome messenger to me. How I love to read its comforting pages, and I do not see how any brother or sister can do without it, especially when they have the means at their disposal.

I do not have much leisure time with the cares of a family resting upon me, but yet I love reading so very much that I find time to read the Bible, Testament, and other religious books, and the Companion too It is not quite a year ago that I united with the Church of the Brethren. I was a church member for several years, but, alas! I was blind like there are thousands at the present day, serving both God and Mammon. I prayed for light and understanding, as I thought the church I was united with did not obey all the commands of Jesus Christ. My eyes were opened and I could see the dreadful precipice whereon I rested. I then resolved by the help of God to unite with a church that obeyed the commands of the Lord, but it was a bitter struggle to leave all my gay companions; and even friends turned cold toward me, as if I had done a disgraceful thing; but the grace of God has thus far been sufficient for me, and in Him is my trust. My husband is not united with any church, and my desire is, to let my light shine before him and my family, and live near to the Lord, that they can see that it is better to have a wife and mother to be a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, than if she follows all the vanities and follies of the present day.

M. R. CHARLES.

Brother Henry: We feel to give a little news to the Brotherhood from our arm of the church. We have had a few night meetings, which were crowned with the very best of success. Our dear young souls were made to rejoice on account of God's love that flowed into their hearts, and the pardon of their sins, and were led down into the water, and buried with Christ in Baptism, and are now rejoicing in hope of being saved in obedience. Many more were made to feel the need of a Savior. Our meetings were well attended throughout Our church is small, but firm in the faith. Now brethren, pray for us, that God may gather the stray sheep into the fold of Christ. This church lay in the swamp, called the Hemlock. The ministering brethren present at our meeting were, I. Paulson, J. Hoppock and the writer.

The Holy Kiss.

Brother Holsinger:—The following is clipped from a stray sheet of the Waverly Magazine, on the Holy Kiss; from it those intrested can learn on what foundation the faith of those professors who deny the propriety of the Kiss of Charity, rests, namely, the Council of Carthage A. D. 397. JOS. HOLSOPPLE.

Kissing, which means in the Hebrew, simply adoration, or "touching with the mouth," was always one of the essential parts of heathen religion, without which was no possibility of either piety or virtue, and people were branded as atheists who neglected to kiss their hands, or the statues of the gods, when they entered a temple. Indeed, the feet and knees of the gods were quite worn away by the touch of worshipping lips, as in the case now with certain saints and shrines abroad. This custom stood the brave Demosthenes in good stead; for when he was the prisoner of Antipater, and was taken by the soldiers into the temple, he raised his hand to his mouth, as if in worship. The soldiers thought it an act of adoration; but it was an act of despair instead. He did not mean to salute the gods, but to take the poison which he had long ago prepared for such an emergency. And did not the people of Cos, when they found Psyche sleeping among the butterflies and roses, treat her as Venus "by kissing her right hand?" So, at least, says Apuleius, that most original and delightful of storytellers. Even at this present day the Mahometans kiss the ground in the direction of Mecca. The early Christians had their religious kiss, like all the rest. As the initiated into the Eleuisinian mysteries kissed each other in token of brotherhood and equal knowledge, so did the first disciples in their Agapes, or Love Feasts. But in 397 the Council of Carthage thought fit to forbid all kissing between the sexes, notwithstanding St. Peter's exhortation, "Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity." It also forbade all lying on couches at mixed meals; and finally broke up the agapes altogether, as of a somewhat too dangerous tendency for ordinary humanity Several later sects have, at various times, sought to bring back the institution of the kiss of peace; but, though very pleasant to the feelings, and doubtless exceedingly edifying to the young, it has generally been found necessary to prohibit the use and continuance of the same, and to go back to less godly forms of salutation. It still lingers both in the Greek and Romish Churches. In Russia, and wherever the Greek Church prevails, all persons kiss each other on Easter Day, that being their great festival and day of rejoicing, as Christmas is with us, and the Jour de l' An with the French. "Christ is risen," they say, as they kiss each other on the cheek —great hairy moujiks, flat-faced peasant woman, slim nobles and high-bred ladies indiscriminately. Formerly the women kissed each other at ayble immediately after the prefational glass of brandy or vodki had been served, but that pretty custom has now gone out. Just before the celebration of the Communion, too, in the Romish Church, some kissing is done. The officiating priest kisses the altar, then embraces the deacon, saying, "Pax tibi, frater et ecciesæ sanctæ Die." (Peace to thee, brother, and to the Holy Church of God.) The deacon embraces the sub-deacon, with "Pax tecum" (Peace be with thee) only; and the sub-deacon, in his turn, kisses the inferior clergy, who thus are all bound in a mystic chain of love and concord; the first link of which lies in the kiss of the officiating priest laid on the alter. No religious ceremony in our own Church is now specially consecrated by a kiss, except, perhaps, the wedding kiss, which old-fashioned clergymen yet contrive to get from bride and bridemaids during that mysterious conference in the vestry, when a bride signs away her independence for life.

ELK CITY, OREGON,
Dec 22, 1870.

Brother Holsinger—A few words from me may not be lost labor. Not being a public writer, I will not attempt to write in a figurative style. I have almost forgotten the Brethren as I have not seen any of them for about seven years; but accidentally coming into possession of a copy of the Companion it reminds me that there is a class of people in existence known as the German Baptists, whom I have enjoyed myself with at different times, and have not forgotten all of their good work. I feel as if it was my duty to communicate with them in some way or other, and knowing of no other way at present, I have resolved to do so by writing a few lines to the Companion for the benefit of those whom it may concern.

I see by the copy of the Companion that I received, that there was a mission of the Brethern sent to this coast, known as the California and Oregon Mission. I should have been exceeding glad to have seen those Brethren, as I have set under the sound of Brother Jacob Miller's voice a number of times, and I could not have enjoyed a better treat than to have had the privilege of hearing him expound the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. But I am deprived of that pleasure this time; but hoping that this Mission is only the forerunner of a more extended one I will content myself with asking (as I am informed that they have come and gone again, and I am none the wiser of it, though had I known when and where to have written I would undoubtedly have communicated with them and tried to have enjoyed their company for a season) what their mission was, what they came to the coast for, what they did, where they were, and whom they saw, whither they went and whence they came, for I cannot find out anything they have done as yet, though they might have done a great deal of good, but if so it must be (as it were) in under currents, and has not got far from where the labor was performed, for I have not heard a word that they have said, or an act that they have done, yet I hope that they have done a great many good things, and that their words and acts may multiply a thousand fold, for indeed the harvest is plentiful but the laborers are few, and of all the places that I ever was in this Oregon has the greatest fields for preaching Jesus Christ and him crucified. Now I don't want it understood that I find fault with brethren Miller and Sturges, but it does look to me as though they ought to have stayed a month or two and have given us all a chance to see and hear from them. Even one year would not have been too long for the work that is here to be done

Now as I have said above, I know of no field that needs laborers as badly as Oregon. I think that some of the laboring brethren ought to take up their families and move to this coast. The way is not so difficult as it was a few years back, and I think the brethren ought to send us some good speakers to remain with us for a few years at least, until the Lord sees fit to choose from our own number preachers to lead his flock on Zionward. The enemy has full control of a majority of men's souls in this country. We have all the isms and cisms preached here that you have there, but as to the preaching of the gospel of our Blessed Lord in its primitive purity, we have none such in this country, as far as I know of. I think therefore, that it is a duty that you owe to God and your fellowman, that you should send preachers to this coast to preach the gospel to every creature, teaching them to observe all things.

Yours in Love,
G. R. KISTLER

The report of the Mission Committee will give the brother some news.

Oregon and California Mission.

Brother Henry: Allow the undersigned to acknowledge through the columns of the C. F. C. that money has been received from the following named churches, up to Jan. 1st, 1871:

David Long, Md.
Thorn Apple, Mich.
Elkhart, Ind.
Augwich, Pa.
Red Bank, Pa.
Pipe Creek, Md.
Keokuk Church, & Domoinse Valley, Iowa.
Upper Conawaga, Pa.
Daniel Miller, Ohio.
Eel River, Ind.
George Garver, Dayton, Ohio.

Received from the Churches & paid over to the Committee, $300,50.

They received of the brethren in Oregon and California, $106,25

Their travelling Expenses were: $618,05, so you see that leaves me short of paying them up, $206,30. How will we Balance the Remainder?

Invitation--Special and Personal

I wish to inform friend Berkey that we have almost arrived at the conclusion that you are not coming to visit us again; but we cannot think of that. We will still urge upon your coming, if circumstances will permit. Bring M. Shoats along if possible, or some other able speaker, and stay a few weeks with us, and console the minds of some of our inquiring sinners.—There are a few Brethren here, and they are compelled to attend other churches or stay at home, and hear no preaching. They have had no opportunity of communing, and no encouragement. I would not feel strange if they strayed off. Others here wish to join, but have no opportunity. Now, say, will you come? The neighbors here within 7 and 8 miles, inquire of me every week whether those preachers are coming again, and some said that they would not come, for them "Dunkards" don't do as they promise. So I did not like to stand that, and I thought I must write and inform J. Berkey, through the C. F. C. Now then, friend Berkey, if you will come soon, while we have good sleighing, you may expect a large attendance. So make your coming sure and soon

From your friend. H. HUNT.

Gleanings.

"Such pieces as that in the last Companion, Vol. 6, page 781, from a minister's wife, should awaken every member to a sense of their duty. I have often thought if the money that is vainly spent for tobacco, were given to poor minister's families, what a blessing it would be to tobacco users, in this world, and ten fold more in the world which is to come."

M. GARBER

Yes, and if to that were added what is just as vainly spent for fashion, and luxuries, and if the time that is idled away were usefully employed and the proceeds appropriated to the purpose, how we could gladden the hearts of our brethren and sisters in the far west, whose cries for the bread of life are continually ringing in our ears, by "sending" the heralds of the Gospel, two by two, into their midst! If———if———if. Let us labor to make it a reality.

"Some object to the paper on account of the advertisements. They think you should not publish any advertisements, and I am of that opinion myself."

ISAAC LUTZ.

Well, now, we do not see that anybody ought to object to the advertisements we publish. And we are sure we are giving reading matter enough for the price of subscription asked. Nevertheless, let us hear what can be said against the advertisements; and if they have a sufficient show of plausibility, and there be a general opposition to them, some method may be devised, by which they can be dispensed with. "What have you to say, brethren?"

Queries.

Brother Holsinger: Can a brother, a minister be ordained, who had once been put in avoidance, and after a while released again?

And another question: When a minister had been silenced, for sufficient reasons, and afterwards restored again, can he be ordained? We look for an answer to the above through the C. F. C.

(Name lost,—Ed.)

We prefer that some brother, or brethren of more experience in church business, should answer the above, and will give due time for meditation, and response.—EDITOR.

Were Joseph and the Savior, sold for the same price, as it is often preached? We find that Joseph was sold by his brethren to the Ishmaelite traders for twenty pieces of silver, and by reference to Math. 26: 15, and 37: 3, we find that the Savior was sold for thirty pieces of silver.

Will some brother give his views as to how long Noah preached to the Antediluvians and how long he was engaged in building the Ark?

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the East Nimishilling congregation, Stark Co., Ohio, ELLEN CARPER, twin daughter of brother Andrew and sister Susan Carper, the parents were from home butchering, leaving six children to take care of the house. In the evening, after five o'clock Ellen went to the cellar with a candle to fetch an apple. Shortly after her screams and shrieks were heard, and the one next older running down found her enveloped in flames. The rest of the children were at the barn doing their feeding. By the time they came to their assistance, she proved to be so terribly burned that she died after five hours of pain. This is another sad warning to parents. Age, 3 years, 8 months, and 26 days. Funeral discourse was improved by the Brethren. SAMUEL MARKLEY.

In Upper Conawaga, Adams county, Pa., December 24th, 1870, HENRY WALER; aged 77 years, 7 months, and 20 days. He fell dead in the morning while washing, and in usual good health, and never spoke.—Thus were two of our neighbors summoned suddenly to the Spirit world; only ½ mile from my house.

In the same branch, December 24th, 1870 sister POLLY HESS; widow of Philip Hess; aged 69 years, 7 months, and 6 days. She lived with 3 grand children. aged 8 and 10 years. In the evening at about 7 o'clock, she was sitting in her arm chair sleeping, enjoying good health. The children wishing to waken her, discovered that she was dead. Affrighted they ran up stairs, and went to bed, leaving old grandmother in her chair, lifeless, until next morning, at 8 o'clock the children woke up and gave the alarm. The neighbors found her in a natural sitting position. So sudden can death take us without a struggle.

ADAM HOLLINGER.

Dec. 10th, 1870, In the Sandy Creek congregation, Preston Co, West Va., of Old Age, brother JOHN GUTHRIE, aged 78 years, 3 months, and 11 days. Brother John was a benevolent friend at home, abroad, and in the church, having been a faithful member of the church for a number of years, earnestly contending for the faith revealed in the Gospel, and enjoying that blessed hope of obtaining eternal rest with all saints in heaven.

He leaves a sorrowing widow, with quite a number of sympathizing friends. Funeral occasion improved by Eld. Jacob M. Thomas, from 1 Cor. 15: 54–58, to a large congregation. F. C. BARNES.

In Churchtown, Cumberland county, Pa., on the 17th, day of December 1870, brother WILLIAM C. LAHMER; aged 39 years, 9 months, and 11 days. He was a faithful brother, and his death was felt as a loss to the Church and friends. He suffered for many years with Asthma; and after a sudden and severe attack he calmly fell asleep in Jesus. Funeral services by the brethren from the 39th Psalm, to a large concourse of people and friends. G. BRINDLE.

In the Duncansville branch, Blair county, Pa. Jan. 3rd, our beloved sister CATHARINE COGAN; aged about 55 years. Disease, Inflamation of the Bowels.

Very suddenly and unexpectedly, but calmly and peacefully did she close her eyes to the scenes of earth, leaving her devoted husband and dutiful children to mourn the loss of one whose worth is only known in death. She was kind to her family, loved in the Church, respected in the neighborhood, and therefore her death has caused an aching void that can only be mitigated by the soothing hand of time.

The sacred volume was a dear delight to her, and while her lamp held out to burn she failed not to become well acquainted with it. With her friends we drop the sympathizing tear, but through that we see the bow of hope to meet again beyond the hills and vallies of time when the disappointment and sorrows of life are over, if we but prove faithful, hold fast and endure unto the end.

Funeral services by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13. JAMES A. SELL.

In the Shade Mill branch, Alleghany Co., Md, Sept. 1870, sister NELLY WORKMAN; aged 84 years.

In the same branch Feb. NIMROD WORKMAN; aged 41 years. Came to his death by the cover of a coal pit falling on him, killing him instantly.

In the same branch July, of consumption, CLANA SOPHIA WORKMAN. The above 3 funerals were attended by the writer and brother Jonathan Kelso, on the 11th and 12th of December, last. two were preached in a Methodist meeting-house, and in a place where the brethren were not known, at least only by a very few. We were very well pleased with the order and attention.

In the Elklick branch, Somerset county, Pa. December 2nd, of age, Brother WILLIAM SHOCKEY; aged 84 years, 1 month, and 1 day.

In the same congregation December 14th, MAGGIE ABBERTH, daughter of brother Elias and sister Emma YOUNKIN; aged 1 year, 6 months, and 24 days. Disease, Croup.

In the same branch December the 18th, of Erysipelas, sister ELIZABETH BEAL; aged 59 years, 8 months, and 29 days. Improved by John P. Cober and the writer, from Isaiah 3: 10, 11. C. G. Lint.

Henry Shaffer, born Sept. 19th, 1809, died November 29th, 1870; aged 61 years, 2 months, and 10 days.

DANIEL KELLER.

Near Williamsburg, Blair county, Pa. July, the 24th, 1760, JACOB SNIVELY, son of elder Jacob Snively, Deceased; aged 56 years, 11 months, and 10 days. Funeral services by Andrew Bassles and John Bowers.

VISITOR please copy.

A. SHELLEY.

In the Conemaugh congregation, Cambria county, Pa. December 14th, 1870, AMANDA, daughter of brother Solomon and sister BALDWIN; aged 1 year, 2 months, and 13 days. Funeral sermon preached by brother Stephen Hildebrand and the writer, from Matthew 24: 44. Samuel Brallier.

At the residence of her son, Peter Altland, in Shipewanny branch, Lagrange co., Ind., Dec. 2nd, 1870, our old sister SALOME ALTLAND.

She was born Sept. 28th, 1784; brought her age to 86 years, 2 months, and 4 days. She suffered almost beyond description for the last four years, with Rheumatism, being as helpless as a child, her body and limbs drawn much out of shape. Her remains were buried in the White Pigeon grave yard, Michigan. Brethren David Truby, and Henry Gephart improved the occasion by preaching from the text: "I am the resurrection," &c. The writer had visited the departed several times, during the last few years, and she was indeed the most pitiable object we ever beheld in the mortal. We thanked the Lord, when we heard of her exchange for an immortal life. GEORGE LONG.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME VII. TYRONE, PA. TUESDAY, JAN. 24, 1871. NUMBER 4.

For the Companion

Anti-Christ.

Especially does John in his epistles exhort his brethren and sisters to an earnest in the love of God, and to sincere obedience in keeping the commandments. "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." "We love him, because he first loved us. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." "Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is anti-christ, that denieth the Father and the Son." "For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come into the flesh. This is a deceiver and an anti-christ." "Even now are there many anti-christs." "Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God. And this is that spirit of anti-christ, whereof ye have heard that it should come: and even now already is it in the world." From the tenor of these passages, it appears plainly that John understood anti-christ to be a spirit working in the children of disobedience against Christ; for anti means against, and anti-christ means against Christ; as he also said to his disciples on a certain occasion, "He that is not against us, is for us;" and consequently, he that is not for us, is against us, which is anti-christ.—Therefore every person, or spirit who is not for Christ, is against him, and that is anti-christ. Since John so earnestly encourages his brethren to the love of God by being obedient unto his commandments, it seems that even those who profess Christ, but obey not his commandments, are anti-christ, since they deny him in their works.—Such seem to have been the Apostle's views, and such have been our views. But upon a more mature reflection on this subject, it appears that John in the first place alludes to something more than merely a spirit of anti-christ. For this adversary spirit was perceptible in all ages of the world: even in the first family, in Cain when he slew his brother Abel, who was already a type of Christ.

In the long period from Adam to Christ, the spirit of anti-christ confronted the Lord's people, at various times, very distinctively, in the shape of false prophets. And now, in these last days, this same spirit is in the shape of false teachers, ignoring the plain, simple commandments of God; is puffed up with worldly honor, "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men," in creeds, confessions, and articles of faith, aside from the plain word of God. But, mark what the Apostle says, "Little children, it is the last time; and as ye have heard that anti-christ shall come, even now are there many anti-christs; whereby we know that it is the last time. They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would have continued with us." 1 John 2: 18, 19.—In the first place he says, "ye have heard." Mark what he says: "ye have heard." Heard what? "That anti-christ shall come." When? In the last time. But now it is the last time. "Even now are there many anti-christs. They went out from us, but they were not of us." But from whom have ye heard that anti-christ shall come? Answer, from old brother Paul. Mark what he writes to the church at Thessalonica. "Remember ye not, that when I was yet with you, I told you these things." What things? Why, that the day of the Lord shall not come, "except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. Remember ye not, that when I was yet with you, I told you these things?" Paul in so many words, admonishes his brethren not to be shaken in mind, nor troubled in regard to the state of things which then existed; that, though the mystery of iniquity was already at work, yet those going out from them, and turning against them, of which John speaks, is not that falling away which shall come before that man of sin, that opposer, that adversary to the truth, be revealed, prior to the coming of Christ. Paul saw in the book of Daniel that some of his visions and prophecy were not yet fulfilled, and that that which was determined must surely come to pass. Paul knew that he was dwelling in that kingdom which Daniel saw represented as a "beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly:" It had ten horns; and there came up among them another little horn, and in this horn were eyes like the eyes of men, and a mouth speaking great things. "I beheld," says Daniel, "and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of days came." He further speaks of this horn, calling him a king. "And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws." "And such as do wickedly against the (new) covenant, shall be corrupt by flatteries: but the people that know their God shall be strong, and do exploits. And they that understand among the people shall instruct many: yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity and by spoil many days." "And the king shall do according to his will; and he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvelous things against the God of gods, and shall prosper till the indignation be accomplished: for that that is determined shall be done." Dan. 11, 32 36. This whole prophecy and all that relates to it has been fully accomplished in the [illegible] of history. In the eleventh century a book was written against [illegible] Bruis, under the title of Anti-christ. Bruis was a preacher among the reformers, called Petrobrusians, although, in the middle of the twelfth century, when their number was very great, the Pope [illegible] their [illegible], sought to [illegible] destroy them: and as they would not admit of any proofs relative to religion, but what could be deduced from the ce places the popish party called them Apostolics. They believed the pope to be anti-christ. The INFALLIBLE POPE! He arose in the church, and the church is the temple of God; he has exalted himself above every thing that is worshipped, as it was predicted. Though popery is now much on the decline; the power of the pope in the Dark Ages was unlimited. Now, "that Wicked" has been revealed and is being destroyed by the brightness of the Lord's coming. When I look over the prophecies, and compare them with the annals of the past, I can find nothing which lacks fulfillment at this time before the Lord's coming. It appears to me that the great tribulation has been shortened and now they say, "Lo, here is Christ, and lo, there is Christ." Mark 13: 21. The brightness of his coming is as the lightning shining out of the east even unto the west. The spreading of the Gospel, resembles the lightning, since the word of God is light: "that is the true light which enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world." It is an error that some people are in, who are looking for a personal anti-christ to come to deceive the world, which is, and has long ago been deceived, when all the prophecies relative to anti-christ, the man of sin, have been both literally and spiritually fulfilled. Though the spirit of anti-christ, the opposition to Christ, shall continue to exist until the time when every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord of lords and King of kings.

Bearing One Another's Burdens.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."—GAL. 6: 2.

Dear Brethren:—I will for the first time endeavor to write a few lines for the Companion, not that I wish to be called great in the eyes of the brethren, or the world, for if you will read the 3d verse of heading chapter you can learn what I am, or any one that has this wish, when we have done all in our power, in serving our brethren and obeying our Master, we are yet unprofitable servants. But to the text:

Bear ye, &c. We all have a burden to bear, but some have a heavier one than others, and therefore need help, in order that they may not fall by the way.

Brethren, let not one soul of us think we need no assistance to bear our burden. That would be pride, selfishness, and will be sure to fall. I will enumerate a few items out of many, to give a more clear idea of what we want to understand from the heading of this article.

The majority of us have families to maintain, and when the minister of the word is called off to a work in his Master's cause, it often happens in a very busy time of the season; but he must go. How well could some of the brethren donate a few days labor to him. Would not this help bear his burden? But some think preaching is not labor or burden. Brethren, you that think so, please go with your weak brethren and bear a part. Sometimes we that are but laborers are left to fill the place of our co-laborers, and by the help of God we do the best we can in declaring the truth. And you know the truth condemns some of unrighteousness, and they begin to shake their heads in time of delivering the truths, and after services they call you to one side, and give orders not to preach this publicly any more, as it has become a general practice by the brethren as well as the world, and that some of our old fathers and mothers have practiced the same before us. My advice is, with the apostle, put away all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness, and bear the burden by standing the word between the servants of satan and the servats of God. If not truth, rejectit, and in order to know this we must search the scriptures, for by them I am willing to be tried, but not by man's carnality. John says, to try the spirits, and I understand him to mean that by the word of God we are to try them. If the word condemns us, we have not the spirit of Christ, and if we have not his spirit, we are not his.

"Bear ye one another's burden, and so fulfill the law of Christ." A hint to the wise is sufficient.

Conversion.

We learn from the holy scriptures that this change is necessary to our seeing God in peace. The change is produced by the power of divine grace, or, in other words, by the agency of the Holy Spirit, in all who truly seek the Lord. The necessity of it is found in the corruption of human nature and action. The testimony of God concerning our race is that they "have corrupted their way, that "there is none good (by nature) no ,not one," that the imagination and thoughts of their hearts are evil, only evil, and that continually; that they "are by nature children of wrath," and, therefore, that they must be "renewed in the spirit of their minds," and have the whole course of their lives changed But it is not necessary to go largely into the proof of the necessity of such a change in this our day. It is, however, of importance to those who would become converts, that we point out the way according to which conversion may be obtained. Many, understanding that conversion is the work of the Holy Spirit, too hastily conclude that human agency and means have no influence in bringing it about; and therefore that we must wait the pleasure of the Lord, in any providential deliverance. The extraordinary manner of his reviving his work in our day (?) and our manner of speaking of it, have a tendency to produce that impression. We see that God pours out his spirit at some times, and in some places, more than at others.—How natural, therefore, to conclude that we must wait for the seasons of refreshing from his presence. This is, however, a great and fatal mistake. There are diverse operations of the same spirit. We must distinguish between his ordinary and extraordinary operations, and may be compared to the pouring out of water: the ordinary are like the gentle insinuating dews, and yet nothing more is necessary to conversion. Let any sinner, as a rational, accountable agent, bring his understanding to bear on the nature, necessity and means of conversion; let him, in the appointed means of grace, seek a change of heart; the Holy Spirit is in every effort he makes, and in all the means he uses, and will certainly, convert and save him, if he perservers. It is not necessary that his understanding should be fully opened suddenly; that his mind should be agitated with fear and despair, in order to obtain pardon, and be assured of an interest in the divine regards. But he may say that his mind is dark, stupid, and barren of every thing good. It is well that he has a sense of these things; but he means to say, that he has no adequate sense of them; yet he has a sense of them adequate to present necessity, and if he goes on the Lord whom he seeks will give him a deeper conviction when that shall be necessary.

Prayer is one of the chief means to be used—the prayer of confession, at least, and this will lead to the prayer of supplication, which will in due time bring into his soul the kingdom of the living God, which is righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. This conviction, and these efforts, constitute repentance. Faith, also, is a condition of conversion; but faith, here, is not a luminous, joyous faith. I now speak of a conviction of sin, both original and actual; a renunciation of our own righteousness, and an earnest desire for renewal through the merits of Jesus Christ alone. He that understandingly uses all the means of grace within his reach, shall find increasing desires, until they are all embodied in the "love of God shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost given unto him." Then, and not till then, is he a real convert. But let him not, on the one hand, conclude that he is truly converted because he sees and laments his situation; nor, on the other hand, despair, because he cannot convert himself. The Lord, whom he seeks, shall suddenly come to his temple, and make his abode with him; even the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. But if these gentle convictions alone be necessary, and be attainable by man as a free agent, in the use of the means, why is conversion ascribed to God? Let me not be misunderstood, when I say that man may obtain conversion. I do not mean that he can convert himself. But although he cannot convert himself, he may, as a free agent, use the means which God has appointed; and these means must be used, or the sinner will never be converted. But if the question be confined to those distracting fears, despairing horrors, and distressing anxiety of mind, which frequently attend conviction of sin, the answer is, that God may permit these, for a season, to subdue the obstinacy of the sinner, and deter him from the path that leads to eternal death. Many would never reflect on their case, were they not thus compelled; and it is no wonder that a sinner, on discovering his guilt and danger, should feel all the painful passions of his mind put in motion; but his conversion is not hastened, but frequently retarded thereby. His conversion is not the more sound for these things, nor is it certain that his Christian course will be the more even and steady on their account. St. Paul was dealt with in the extraordinary way; the twelve apostles in the ordinary, and yet their conversions were as sound as that of St. Paul. Many things often mingle in the exercises previous to conversion, which are not essential to that work. Let us then learn to separate the dross from the gold. Conversion is a thing of the utmost importance to every individual. Let us not rest without this and the evidence of it. "Jesus answered, verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John 3:5. "Let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." James 5:20.

Unconditional Prayer.

The spirit of true prayer is a submissive spirit. If one is pleading an absolute promise then may he indeed be importunate and assured. He stands on a solid rock. But there are errands which the praying soul brings to the throne of grace, embraced in no specific promise, and in regard to which the most fervent petitions should close with the memorable words, "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done."

It was many years ago, when I was pastor in another state, that I was visiting my senior deacon, one afternoon. He and his wife were of the excellent of the earth. The conversation turned on the subject when the good woman turned to me and said, with great solemnity, "My young brother, never pray unconditionally for any temporal good."

After a moment of silence, she pointed to an idiot daughter, some thirty years old, who was standing in the room and gazing at us with a vacant, meaningless look. "You see," said she, "that poor creature. When she was a babe, not more than a year old, she was dangerously sick. I felt I could not part with her. I clung to her with all a mother's love I now remember it all as though it were yesterday, I went into the bed chamber yonder, shut the door, and, kneeling down, agonized in prayer for the life of that child. I told God I could not part with her, and closed by beseeching him to send what he would if only he would but spare the life of my child." Affected by the rehersal, there was a momentary pause, and then she added, "God took me at my word. He granted my request. The life of my child was spared to be the bane and the burden of my life these thirty years."

The story, the solemnity with which I was myself then placed, in circumstances which made the lesson especially applicable, all these combined to render the impression deep and permanent. I felt that the good mother in Israel had preached to her pastor a most valuable sermon from the text, "Never pray unconditionally for any temporal good."

Be Sensible.—Do not be above your business; he who turns up his nose at his work, quarrels with his bread and butter. He is a poor smith who quarrels with his own sparks; there's no shame about any honest calling; don't be afraid of soiling your hands, there is plenty of soap to be had. All trades are good to traders. You cannot get honey if you are frightened at bees, nor plant corn if you are afraid of getting mud on your boots. When you can dig fields with a toothpick, blow ships along with fans, and grow plumcakes in flower-pots, then it will be a fine time for dandies.

An Indian whenever he got into a bad place in the swamp, used immediately to put up a stake to mark the spot. Thus he not only kept clear of the danger the second time, but kept others from the same danger. We not only should guard against our own false steps, but as we pray, "Lead us not into temptation," be careful to remove all temptation from others.

A Word of Encouragemet to Young Disciples.

The atonement is no half-way measure, and religion is no half-hearted service. No feat of Satan is equal to his persuasion of people that they can "fear the Lord and serve their own gods." Christianity and worldliness are fixed and absolute opposites. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils." The scales cannot balance both sides of the beam at the same time. If dress has more of our attention than the adornment of the soul with the jewels of grace, we are not "on the Lord's side." If the market has stronger attractions than the sanctuary, we are none of Christ's. If "the love of money" makes us more devoted to business, than the love of Christ does to the prosperity of Zion and the salvation of the soul, we are "dead while we have a name to live." Where our treasure is there is our heart also, and thither tend the main currents of life's activities. To the saint the Savior is precious, "the chief among ten thousand," the Magnet of the soul's deepest, warmest love. We "sit under His shadow with great delight, and His fruit is sweet to our taste." Holiness to the Lord "must be written in letters of sacred blood on every article of raiment "from the sole of the foot even unto the head." Everything we put on for the public eye is an unrobing of the soul of its Divine attire. To make public sentiment the criterion of our costume, is to barter the blood of Christ for the smiles of His enemies. Take care, my beloved, that you add not a little here and a little there to please those who appreciate only superficial beauty. These little fixtures in dress cannot long be allowed for the sake of others, before we wear them to please ourselves. Keep yourself in the atmosphere of Golgotha, always in hearing distance of the death-agonies of the sin-bearing Savior, and the devil will tempt you in vain with the gewgaws of fashion. Every unnecessary flounce and ribbon is purchased at the expense of the Redeemer's blood, springing from the very element that nailed Jesus to the cross.

"Be ye holy for I am Holy." This is the solemn point on which turns our eternal destiny. If we have this we have all else that is included in the Christian character. Absolute holiness is unattainable by the creature, here or hereafter. "God only hath immortality," & in this absolute sense none else can have it, not even the glorified saints and "elect angels." In the same sense God only is holy. But if we cannot ascend to God's altitude, we can "grow in grace," be even in the process of transformation, "with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord," while we are being "changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord." It is to be feared that not a few of our members do not strive for perfection with an ardor that will secure it in the world to come. The old serpent has coiled himself into the garden of the new Eden, and persuaded many that they shall not surely die, although they eat of the interdicted tree. The little indulgence that promises such great advantage without a compromise of principle—this is the pivot that swings souls hellward, imperceptibly at first, but with even increasing velocity, until, with the ponderous millstone of accumulated guilt hanging at their necks, they are drowned in the depths of perdition. "This one thing I do," dying unto self and the world, rising higher and growing stronger in the life of God, "pressing toward the mark," "following after" the Divine Ideal with an earnestness that involves "the loss of all things for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord." This was the constant aspiration of Paul, and is the language of every soul in which the Holy Ghost is resident. O dearly beloved, let nothing come into competition with the claims of your blessed Lord and Savior. Never confer with flesh and blood, but at once pluck out the right eye, cut off the right hand and foot, and cast them from thee; for it is better to enter halt and maimed into life, than to have thy whole body cast into hell, "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." It matters not what you lose, so long as you keep the testimony of a good conscience and the favor of God. You can have no plans, arrangments, and ends apart from your Christian character; and just so far as you have, you dishonor God. No sooner do we set our feet on debatable ground, than we offer ourselves to the wiles of Satan, and show that we do not regard the service of Christ sufficient to yield "fullness of joy." You constantly need wisdom and guidance from on high to keep your garments unspotted from the world." Fightings and fears, temptations and conflicts, gilded evils and alluring baits, meet us at every step. Satan never slumbers, and our inbred corruptions are ever ready to respond to his wicked suggestions. There is a devil in as well as a devil out, only that is chained and decreasing, while this is at liberty and raging. When the adversary outside calls, his fettered accomplice inside answers. He that would reign and rejoice with Christ hereafter, must wrestle and bleed and triumph with him here.

In one aspect the Christian life is dark and sad and perilous and burdensome. It has its yoke, its cross, its sacrifices, its tribulations many and sore. These are in themselves "not joyous but grievous." But the other side is luminous with the beauty of Divinity and the glory of the upper Paradise. One beam from the face of Jesus scatters the thickest gloom in the believer's sky. Faith no larger than a grain of mustard-seed, overbalances the world, the flesh, and the devil. The saint's weakness, is more than a match for the sin-father's strength. Christ's, little finger is thicker than the devil's loins. 2 Chron. 10: 10. One throb of Divine life has more power than all the hosts of hell, and more rapture than all the pleasures of sin. One hour on the bosom of Jesus yields more thrilling joy, than has ever been felt by the unregenerate since the forbidden fruit was plucked in Eden. "Sackcloth and ashes" are a more glorious garment, than "purple and fine linen." The crumbs under the table are sweeter to Lazarus, than the sumptuous fare of the glutton. The least manifestation of God to the soul is great enough to beggar the universe besides—great enough to live for, and, if need be, to die for. The sun is reflected as fully and clearly in a dew-drop as in the ocean. So the babe in Christ has the image of holiness as distinctly stamped upon the soul as the father in Christ. The infant on its mother's breast relishes its nourishment as keenly as the giant his strong meat. The holiest saint on earth is only a miniature of Jesus. O dear fellow pilgrim, I beseech you as one whose heart burns with holy desire for your salvation, cultivate a close, loving intimacy with Jesus. Every day, every hour, open your heart to its utmost capacity, and invite Him to possess and sanctify and direct every faculty and power and impulse of your being. Become more familar with Jesus than with any friend on earth. Tell Him all your wants. Carry every burden to Him. Whisper every sound into His ear. Pillow your soul on His bosom in every trial and perplexity. Confide all your troubles and heart-achs to Him. Let all your tears fall upon His feet. Cling to Jesus with such love and fervor as those alone can feel who are wedded to him forever. Close your eyes to "the pride of life," and your heart to the seductions of the flesh. Let your baptismal vow become daily more solemn in its obligations, and more Divine in its significance. "Look not behind thee," "Remember Lot's wife. "Sell not your birthright for the pleasures of sense." "Give all diligence to make your calling and election sure."

Constantine, "professing himself a Christian, undertook to convert the kingdom of Christ into a kingdom of this world." The visible church becoming thus the object of royal favor the teachers and overseers of the flock being exalted into affluence, grandeur and influence in the empire, the light that had so clearly shone over the world, and the gospel power and love which had enabled thousands to die cheerfully and triumphantly at the stake began to grow dim; and centuries passed while spiritual darkness covered the earth and gross darkness the people. Heaven seemed, till the twelfth century to frown on the earth. The pen and tongue were fettered. The persecutor performed his work without hindrance. The voice of religious liberty was hushed. The humble true devotee retired to the Alpine valleys, and mountain caverns. But the Bible was in the keeping of God who was waiting His own time to call it forth to the light, and to republish truth among the nations.

The scholar led the way. Peter Waldo of Lyons, in love for the church translated the Bible into French. The minds of many were awakened and the fire burned. "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil," and all the power of state were brought to bear upon the rapidly developing Christain life and power. Catherine De Medici and St. Bartholomew's day will call up terrible things to the end of time. "Truth struck to the earth will rise again."

The usurpations of the Court of Rome were at their zenith. That astonishing power had extended over nearly all Europe, England was well nigh subjugated. The fitting time came for the pall to be removed from modern Europe. The slumbering fire that had kept secretly burning in the bosoms of Waldenses and Albigenses, had begun to show signs of growth and power. Ecclesiastics hid in cloisters the Divine Law, and had substituted formularies in its stead. There was an intellectual and spiritual upheaval in western and central Europe. Men thirsted for a better life and cried for light. Their prayers were answered. It came through collegians.

Wickliffe, whose learning and sterling piety had secured for him both honor and place was first warden of Cantebury College, Oxford. His soul was warm in the cause of the Reformation. He felt that his learning, his pen, and his life must be devoted to the cause of the church. He translated the Bible into Anglo-Saxon. Multitudes rejoiced to read it in their mother tongue. Its long suppressed precepts gave new life to thousands. The Lord blessed the man and the work.

The Areopagi of Athens had long ceased to canvass the merits of Platonic, Epicurean and Stoic Philosophy. Academic Groves of Greece were no more the centres of learning, but "beyond the Alps," and among a modern people the seeds of learning were sown, along the banks of the Rhine and the Danube and in the valleys of the Alps. The names of Luther and Melancthon, of Zwingle and Calvin, are eminently conspicuous in that memorable encounter of Truth with error,—that life and death struggle which marked the history of the sixteenth century.

John Knox, of the university of St. Andrews became the dread of the enemies of reform. Priest and monarch quailed in his presence. He taught the truth that the world had not yet comprehended, that both civil and religious rights were the common inheritance of all new truths, which, when recognized would require kings to relinquish prerogatives, and the enfranchisement of their subjects.

In these rough controversial days, when light the earth was yet dim, and human rule arbitrary, and men were vindictive, we may find much that we may wish were wiser and better. Let us throw over the times the mantle of charity, when we find among them a consciousness that the truth was then but dawning, that the sun had not reached its zenith. Both on the continent and in the British Isles the master minds both for and against the church were found amongst Collegians. At the seats of Learning as in Jerusalem, Alexandria, Athens and Rome, where the best cultivated intellects assembled, were found the centres of the great reform life and power.

The records of another century disclose the fact that while kings are contending for prerogatives and parliament for power, the printing press had become the great instrumentality in the hands of the controversialists. Tyndal translated the whole Bible and published a printed edition. The church had still its cloud of witnesses. The version in present use called king James's translation followed. The fires were kindled in academic halls, Kenelon, Flavel, Baxter, Milton, Kempis, Bunyan. Barclay, Penn, Fox and Robenson were few of a host who spoke and wrote in defence of civil and religious liberty, as well as of the apostolic, and evangelic faith

At a later day we have the touching and eloquent teachings and able writings of such men as the Wesleys, Horne, Newton, Clark, Calvert, Scott, and Hunter, Asbury and Whitfield. I need not dwell on the advance made by modern Europe nor of the learned works of Neander of Germany, and of Chalmers of Scotland ,of kindred intelligent minds of our own century; for with them come a cloud of witnesses to the fact that the religious world is constantly assuming higher ground and entertainig more catholic conceptions of the apostolic faith.

Let me then, my young friends, who are to be inmates of this college, bring this truth solemnly home to you.—To such as you all through our land, must we look for that great work which remains to be done before prophecy shall be fulfilled, when "the glory of the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters do the sea." To you must we look to hasten this glorious result.

Let us look over the earth, and contemplate its thousand millions of people, only about one-third of whom have heard, much less read, the written Law of God. Even Christendom is groping in the dark. Evangelical Christianity finds too many men of highly developed minds arraying their learning against it. Pantheistic and Mythological philosophy in our day revives in the guise of Materialism and Rationalism in their diversified forms.

In the very church itself the controversy is earnest and persistent, a contest which must go on until the gospel day shall shine out in its native primitive purity, fair as the moon and clear as the sun.

In this controversy, mind will continue to grapple with mind, and the strongest intellects on both sides will be earnest for victory. History is ransacked for proof, languages traced to their roots, philosophy, logic and rhetoric, are taxed for aid. The real contest is for God and his Law; for the Church and the Bible on the one side, and for the Prince of this world on the other. A kingdom is arrayed against a kingdom.

Prophets have told us that a glorious future awaits us. But to do this work, will require much earnest, patient, christian life-labor. Men and women in Europe and America have laid their lives on the altar. All our learning is demanded for the Lord's cause.

The history of the Reformation is but the developement of those fundamental truths that sustain both church and state, and secure to this nation whatever of gratefulness and happiness, in the providence of God, it may possess.

The pioneers that sought a shelter on the rock-ribbed coast of New England, on the beautiful Hudson and Delaware, and on the Ashley and Copper rivers ornamented by stately pines made fragrant by the yellow jessamine, were pilgrims who had no continuing city here, but sought one to come.

They had learned in dungeons, and by passing through the fire and by gibbet, that a peaceful home in the deep wilderness, with God and freedom, is better than a palace with political and spiritual bondage. In these fit retreats, the stern Puritan, the Catholic, the Swede and Finn, the Huguenot, and the Quaker, the persecuted of the old world under whatever name, could seek shelter from the wrath of tyranny, and perform their devotions, each under his own vine; and the church had rest.

These pioneers were not ignorant men. In gospel light, in Literature sacred and profane, in Science and Art, they had seen the true relations of Church and State.—Kings were begging for the protection of their prerogatives while their thrones were being shaken, and their subjects were inquiring about their natural rights.

But the American mind was not all clear; some had not yet learned that civil and religious liberty are the commoninheritance of all. They assumed that, "We are right and being right, are entitled to liberty. Being right we are proper judges of others, and none but those who are right are entitled to liberty. When men will not of their own free will, do right, they should be compelled, or suffer until they will, For a time, until the light of the Reformation became more generally diffused, the inquisitorial honor made a dark chapter in American church history.

In that deep deadly struggle of two hundred years ago when great minds grappled with error, and "seized upon truth where'er twas found" when with a martyr spirit the trials of sea and land, the wilderness, famine, pestilence and death were resolutely met, we find, as the result of all this baptismal ordeal, principles like the following the fruit.

1. That the most successful method of resisting tyranny is by imbueing the minds of the whole people with a true and intelligent love of liberty, and thus creating a necessity for a free government.

2. That revolutions in government can be most safely made by the ballot, and by teaching truth.

3. That God blesses good and prayerful men and will assist them in accomplishing his purposes in the earth.

4. That governments like clocks, go from the motive imparted to them and depend on true men more than on good laws.

5. That good government succeeds best when the citizen is a patriot through a conscientious desire to honor the divine law.

6. That no class of men can monopolize moral truth. It is the common inheritance of all.

7. That all men are equal in privilege and accountability before the law, that every citizen is entitled to the right of trial by a Jury of his compeers whose verdict should be unrestricted.

8. That noble blood is only found associated with a noble heart and mind.

9. That no people may be brought into bondage but by their own consent.

10. That the power for making, sustaining, and modifying governments is in the people.

11. That knowledge and learning generally diffused throughout a community are essential for the freedom and happiness of any people, and that the orphan as well as the more fortunate child is the ward of the state.

12 That no earthly power may absolve man from his allegiance to God, and that all men should of right, be permitted to worship him according to the dictates of their consciences.

13. That even savage nations should be recognized as possessing instincts, and a sense of right in common with ourselves, that may be controlled by sound reason, truth, and justice, and that they may be made allies to more favored nations in the improvement of society

14. That the tendency of christianity and general intelligence is to advocate the happiness and secure the permanent peace of nations, and by the light of prophesy we may feel the assurance that the destiny of man is to rise upward ever until every nation shall be enfranchised and evangelized.

These elements, the fruit of the reformation of martyr and evangelic lives, beautifully blend in the constitutional law of our state and nation. In these elements the church can take root and live, and it is for the patriot scholar, and the christian statesman to guard, develope and mature them.

The truly conscientious man is the best citizen. He that acts through both the love and fear of God, will afford the best security to the state. The rights of conscience are the most sacred rights. It is God's prerogative to hold the hearts and minds of men obedient to the Divine Law. As we come to this as citizens we will not only feel a desire, mutually, as Christians to encourage each other to faithfulness, but we will as citizens so shape the laws and character of the state that human government shall harmonize with the Divine

This great work with its responsibilities, is on our hands. It is for us, as laborers for the church, to see that these elements of the reformation are not only universally diffused through our own nation, but we should also recognize the fact that a Divine Providence has meant that the power of our intelligence, freedom and moral influence should be felt among the nations of the Globe.

As a pilot, that steers the ship has his hands upon the rudder, and his eyes at the same time upon the [illegible] above, so should we be diligent in the use of means, but look up to God for direction.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. 4.

WEEKS, SABBATHS, MONTH AND YEAR.

WEEKS AND SABBATHS.—A week is a cycle of seven days. The first use of the word in the Bible is in Gen. 27: 26, 28, having reference to the seven days of nuptial feasting, which Jacob, according to the custom of the times, fulfilled for Leah's marriage, before he obtained Rachel. The measure of time called week, however, is as ancient as the creation of man. This cycle is intended, no doubt, to be a continued memorial, to preserve the remembrance of the six day's creation and of God's rest on the seventh day from all his work. The six days in which work may be done, remind us of the six days in which "the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is," and the day of rest keeps before our minds the completion of the creation and the Lord's rest from all his work which he had made. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed." Ex 31: 16, 17. As God ended his work and rested on the seventh day, and work his people, Israel, observed the seventh day throughout their generation, so our blessed Lord ended his great work of redemption on the first day of the week, when he arose triumphant over death, hell and the grave, in memory of which his people observe the Lord's day—the first day of the week—and still preserve the cycle of seven days as a memorial of the work of creation. On the first day of the week, the same day on which he arose from the dead—our Savior appeared unto his disciples; and in a week from that, he met with them again; on both of which occasions he said: "Peace be unto you." John 20: 12, 26. On the day of pentecost which also was the first day of the week, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men," qualifying his disciples to execute his great commission; "and the same day were added unto them about three thousand souls." Acts 2: 41.

A prophetic week, (Dan. 9: 24–27,) is the space of seven years, a day for a year. This method of calculation was very easy to the Jews, whose law required them to observe the seventh year as a Sabbath, as well as the seventh day; it also required them to number "seven Sabbaths of years," "seven times seven years," or forty-nine years, at the end of which they were to observe a sabbatical jubilee, "and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof." Lev. 25: 1–17.

The seventh day of the week was a Sabbath—a day of rest; and the seventh year was a Sabbath—a year of rest. Beside these they had other rest days—holy convocations—also called Sabbaths. The tenth day of the seventh month, irrespective of the day of the week on which it fell, was "a Sabbath of rest." Lev. 16: 31; 23: 26–32. So was also the first day of the seventh month, Lev. 23: 24. The first and last days of the feast of tabernacles were holy convocations, and were called sabbaths. Lev. 23: 33–40. As their holy convocations were sabbaths, and as the first and last days of the feast of unleavened bread—the fifteenth and twenty-first days of the month Abib—were holy convocations, in which they were to do no manner of servile work, these days were also sabbaths. Lev. 23: 6, 16. From a careful examination of this passage of scripture it also appears very clear, that, counting from the sixteenth day of the month, the morrow after the fifteenth day sabbath, every seventh day for seven consecutive weeks, was a sabbath. How absurd, then, it is to say, as we have heard from the pulpit, that no day except the seventh day of the week was ever called sabbath.

MONTH.—In the Bible there is a very close connection between the terms "month" and "moon." The principal points in connection with the Hebrew month, are, its length and the manner in which it was calculated. It may be reasonably inferred that the month at first corresponded to a lunation, that is, that it set in with the first observance of the new moon, and continued until the next new moon.—As they were not skilled in making astronomical calculations, they could not tell the precise time of the moon's conjunction with the sun; but by careful observation, they were generally enabled to know the day on which the new moon could first be seen, and with which their months would commence. "And David said unto Jonathan, Behold, to-morrow is the new moon;" "and Jonathan said to David, to-morrow is the new moon. 1 Sam. 20: 5, 18. From these texts we infer that, in the time of David, they knew when to expect the new moon. From the same chapter, 24—26 verses, we ascertain that their months were reckoned from new moon to new moon: "So David hid himself in the field; and when the new moon was come, the king sat him down to eat meat.—And the king sat upon his seat, as at other times, . . . and David's place was empty. * * * * And it came to pass on the morrow which was the second day of the month, that David's place was empty; and Saul said unto Jonathan his son, Wherefore cometh not the son of Jesse to meat, neither yesterday, nor to-day?" From the circumstance here noticed, it is evident that the new moon marked the first day of the month, and that the second day of the moon's age, or the morrow after the new moon, "was the second day of the month."

7: 11, 24; 8: 4, from the seventeenth day of the second month, to the seventeenth day of the seventh month is reckoned as one hundred and fifty days. From this fact some have concluded that the month was not strictly lunar. We must, however, not forget that, in this early age the world, they had not become sufficiently acquainted with the motions of the heavenly bodies, to calculate the exact time of the moon's changes. They were, therefore, led by observation; and the first appearance of the new moon marked the first day of the month. It did not require a long time to discover that none of their months exceeded thirty days; but as some of them numbered thirty days, whenever fog or clouds prohibited them from seeing the moon, not to commence the month too soon, they reckoned it thirty days. This might occur for several consecutive months, as in the case of the flood, and each month would have thirty days, as in that case when five months numbered one hundred and fifty days. Whatever departure from the true lunar month would in this way be made, could easily be corrected when the new moon was first thereafter observed; for disregarding the number of days in the month, it ended when the new moon was seen, as that marked the beginning of the new month.

As regards the number and names of the months, and the manner of their use, we can do no better than to quote rom SMITH'S BIBLE DICTIONARY under the head of MONTHS. He says:—

The commencement of the month was generally decided by observation of the new moon, which may be detected about forty hours after the period of its conjunction with the sun. According to the rabbinical rule, however, there must at all times have been a little uncertainty beforehand as to the exact day on which the month would begin; for it depended not only on the appearance, but on the announcement; if the important word Mekuddash were not pronounced until after dark, the following day was the first of the month; if before dark, then that day (Rosh hash. 3, § 1). But we can hardly suppose that such a strict rule of observation prevailed in early times, nor was in it any way necessary: the recurrence of the new moon can be predicted with considerable accuracy. The length of the month by observation would be alternately twenty-nine and thirty days, nor was it allowed by the Talmudists that a month should fall short of the former or exceed the latter number, whatever might be the state of the weather. The usual number of months in a year was twelve, as implied in 1 K. iv. 7; 1. Chr. xxvii. 1—15; but inasmuch as the Hebrew months coincided, as we shall presently show, with the seasons, it follows as a matter of course that an additional month must have been inserted about every third year, which would bring the number up to thirteen. No notice, however, is taken of this month in the Bible. In the modern Jewish calendar, the intercalary month is introduced seven times n every nineteen years, according to he Metonic cycle, which was adopted by the Jews about A. D. 360. The usual method of designating the months was by their numerical order, e. g. "the second month" (Gen. vii. 11), "the fourth month" (2 K. xxv. 3); and this was generally retained even when the names were given, e. g. "in the month Zif, which is the second month" (1 K. vi. 1), "in the third month, that is, the month Sivan" (Esth. viii. 9). An exception occurs, however, in regard to Abib in the early portion of the Bible (Ex. xiii. 4, xxiii. 15; Deut. xvi. 1), which is always mentioned by name alone. The practice of the writers of the post-Babylonian period in this respect varied: Ezra, Esther, and Zechariah specify both the names and the numerical order; Nehemiah only the former; Daniel and Haggai only the latter. The names of the months belong to two distinct periods: in the first place we have those peculiar to the period of Jewish independence, of which four only, even including Abib, which we hardly regard as a proper name, are mentioned: viz., Abib, in which the Passover fell (Ex. xiii. 4, xxiii. 15, xxxiv. 18; Deut. xvi. 1), and which was established as the first month in commemoration of the Exodus (Ex. xii. 2); Zif, the second month (1 K. vi. 1, 37); Bul, the eighth (1 K. vi. 38); and Ethanim, the seventh (1 K. viii. 2). In the second place we have the names which prevailed subsequently to the Babylonish captivity; of these the following seven appear in the Bible: Nisan, the first, in which the Passover was held (Neh. ii. 1; Esth. iii. 7); Sivan, the third (Esth. viii. 9; Bar. i. 8); Elul, the sixth (Neh. vi. 15; 1 Macc. xiv. 27); Chisleu, the ninth (Neh. i: 1; Zech. vii. 1: 1 Macc. i. 54); Tebeth, the tenth (Esth. ii. 16); Sebat, the eleventh (Zech. i. 7; 1 Macc. xvi. 14); and Adar, the twelfth (Esth. iii. 7, viii. 12; 2 Macc. xv. 36). The names of the remaining five occur in the Talmud and other works: they were Iyar, the second (Targum, 2 Chr. xxx. 2); Tammuz, the fourth; Ab, the fifth; Tisri, the seventh; and Marchesh van, the eighth. The name of the intercalary month was Veadar, i. e. the additional Adar. Subsequently to the establishment of the Syro-Macedonia Empire, the use of the Macedonian calendar was gradually adopted for purposes of literature or intercommunication with other countries. The only instance in which the Macedonian names appear in the Bible is in 2 Macc. xi. 30, 33, 38, where we have notice of Xanthicus in combination with another named Dioscorinthius (ver. 21), which does not appear in the Macedonian calendar. It is most probable that the author of 2 Macc. or a copyist was familiar with the Cretan calendar, which contained a month named Dioscurus, holding the same place in the calendar as the Macedonian Dystrus, i. e. immediately before Xanthicus, and that he substituted one for the other. The identification of the Jewish months with our own cannot be effected with precision on account of the variations that must inevitably exist between the lunar and the solar month."

YEAR.—The year among the Hebrews generally consisted of twelve moons, or lunar months; but as it was necessary, in order for a proper observance of all the rites of their feasts that the year should always begin about the same season, it became necessary about once in three years to add one month; for, as was noticed in the introduction, if the year should always consist of twelve lunar months, in about thirty-four years its beginning would run backward through all the seasons. This was not allowable; as certain fruits, the productions of the earth, were required to be offered on specified days of the year. Here again we will quote from SMITH'S BIB. DICTIONARY —article, YEAR:—

"The Hebrew year, from the time of the Exodus, was evidently lunar, though in some manner rendered virtually solar; and we may therefore infer that the lunar year is as old as the date of the Exodus. As the Hebrew year was not an Egyptian year, and as nothing is said of its being new, save in its time of commencement, it was perhaps earlier in use among the Israelites, and either brought into Egypt by them, or borrowed from Shemitic settlers. 2. The year used by the Hebrews from the time of the Exodus may be said to have been then instituted; since a current month, Abib, on the fourteenth day of which the first Passover was kept, was then made the first month of the year. The essential characteristics of this year can be clearly determined, though we cannot fix those of any single year. It was essentially solar; for the offerings of productions of the earth, first-fruits, harvest-product, and ingathered fruits, were fixed to certain days of the year, two of which were in the periods of great feasts, the third itself a feast reckoned from one of the former days. But it is certain that the months were lunar, each commencing with a new moon. There must, therefore, have been some method of adjustment. The first point to be decided is how the commencement of each year was fixed.—Probably the Hebrews determined their new year's day by the observation of heliacal or other star-risings or settings known to mark the right time of the solar year. It follows, from the determination of the proper new moon of the first month, whether by observation of a stellar phenomenon, or of the forwardness of the crops, that the method of intercalation can only have been that in use after the Captivity, the addition of a thirteenth months whenever the twelfth ended too long before the equinox for the offering of the first fruits to be made at the time fixed. The later Jews had two commencements of the year; whence it is commonly but inaccurately said that they had two years, the sacred year and the civil. We prefer to speak of the sacred and civil reckonings. The sacred reckoning was that instituted at the Exodus, according to which the first month was Abib: by the civil reckoning, the first month was the seventh. The interval between the two commencements was thus exactly half a year. It has been supposed that the institution at the time of the Exodus was a change of commencement, not the introduction of a new year; and that thenceforward the year had two beginnings, respectively at about the vernal and the autumnal equinoxes."

Our Savior's resurrection was on the first day of the week which came first in order after the full moon in the month Nisan: and Easter Sunday, which is held as the anniversary of his resurrection, is, according to the council of Nice, which was held in the year 325, the first Sunday after that full moon which comes on the 21st of March, or next after that date. According to this rule, the new moon that first preceeds the full moon which regulates Easter, marks the beginning of Abib or Nisan. But in more ancient times, the beginning of the Hebrew year was decided, either by the appearance of certain stars or by the forwardness of the crops.

We shall now arrange the numbers and names of the Hebrew months in order, showing how they compare with each other according to the civil and sacred reckonings of the year, and also their comparison with our mode of computation. The first column of figures indicate the number of the month according to the sacred reckoning, which had its origin at the time of the Exodus, and the second column the number according to the civil reckoning. The first column of the calendar months, our own reckoning, shows the months in which theirs generally began, and the second, the months in which they ended. It is however, evident that their months sometimes commenced earlier than at others, according as the new moon was earlier.

Veader was the name of the intercalary month used to equalize the lunar year with the solar. It answered mostly to March.

Hoping that our readers have closely followed us in our notice of the divisions of time as used in the Bible, attention shall next be called to the Passover.

The Pious Youth.

The January number of our juvenile paper, has now gone forth to meet its young patrons and readers, in its new form, and a beautiful colored cover. Men are not the best judges of their own work; but we confess that we are very much pleased with the Youth in its present form, and with the January number, especially, both in its execution and contents; regretting only the many typographical errors, some parts of it not having received any correction at all.

We now offer the Youth as a first-class paper, and if our Brethren and friends desire such a paper to be published among us, we invite them to support it. It will not pay expenses with less than a thousand subscribers above our present list, most of our subscribers paying us only seventy-five cents, taking it in connection with the Companion. At this rate, it will take a large circulation to compensate for the labor. The present form contains over a column a month more than that of last year, besides what is gained by driving out all the advertisements.

It is so arranged that it can be divided into four parts, for distributing among Sunday Schools, furnishing one part for each Sunday in the month. In that case we do not supply the cover but cut them apart, and send them well wrapped, and offer them at reduced rates, when ten or more copies are sent to one address.

We have a few extra copies of the January No., which will be sent as specimens, on the receipt of ten cents. Specimen packs for Sunday Schools, will be sent for ten cents.

"Money is so Scarce."

That is the complaint in almost every letter. Our agents say they could do much more for us if money were not so scarce. Well, of course we cannot publish our paper without money, for every thing we use costs us money, and it is generally wanted cash down too; but we want to accommodate our friends, and will give them all the time we can afford. We will take any number of good, honest subscribers, who will pay us within the year. However, let no one delay a week after he can spare the money, as we will be in need of it all the time. Agents will send us what they have collected. Don't sent over $1.50 at our risk, without registering the letter.

Have Patience.

Already some of our subscribers are beginning to write the second time, on account of the irregular arrival of their papers. Have patience friends; we are still about five days behind time. We would have nearly caught up, but our new supply of paper did not arrive in time, and delayed this number over a day. In another week we hope to catch up, then if any numbers are missing we wish to be informed of it at once. Tell us what number is missing, whether No. 1, 2, 3, or what, and we will supply them without fail.

Children's Paper.

The Childrens' Paper is the title of a small monthly, the first number of which has found its way to our sanctum. It is somewhat of an illustrated paper, having one cut showing Daniel in the lions' den, another of a little girl feeding chickens, another of a boy beating an ass, and the fourth of a Winter scene in a barn-yard. It is quite neat and readable. Price, per single copy, 40cts, a year; ten copies 3$. Address H. J. Kurtz, Dayton, Ohio.

Specimens of the Phrenological Journal.

Having had frequent applications for specimen copies of the Phrenological Journal, we have applied to the publisher, and have received a number of odd copies of last year, which we can send to those who wish to examine it, at ten cents each, which they are well worth to any one who can appreciate good reading.

Brethrens' Almanac.

The second and last edition of our Almanac for 1871, has now been exhausted, and we can receive no more orders.

In this connection, we will say, we have a copy of the Almanac, in which we will note all errors in names and addresses, deaths, ministers elected &c., to be corrected in the edition for 1872. There are a number of names of ministers omitted, which we hope to obtain in future editions. It will be in order to make corrections at any time; but we will call special attention to the matter about the first of July.

Erratum.

In the concluding portion of P. S. Newcomer's article, No. 3, page 34, read: "The opinions of all great men when once proclaimed to the world, become food for public use, so long as we do not exagerate or misrepresent.

Back Numbers

We can furnish back numbers to all new subscribers to the C. F. C., for volume seven, to the number of several hundred. Send on your orders.

Ministerial Visit.

We were favored with a visit by brother John W. Brumbaugh and sister Peggie, his wife, and brother Samuel A. Moore, on Friday the 13th.—They remained with us over Sunday, and had preaching in Birmingham, but on account of the very bad weather they had rather a slim turnout. They found ourself sick and in bed, so that we could not attend the meetings, but we did enjoy their company, and their kind admonition and words of encouragement; and we believe that such visits frequently repeated would have a good effect upon the Companion family. Try it brethren and sisters.

Answers to Correspondents.

Isaac Farneman. You over paid by 75 cents: we apply it to the poor.

I L Glass. It is right; and we are thankful to you for remitting so promptly.

Lewis W Teeter. We cannot account for the failure in acknowledging, but your Money Order for $20.00 was received.

H. S. Jacobs. A fair understanding: we are square.

Samuel Metzger. Your commission is 60 cents, which you can deduct from the price of any of our books or publications.

Daniel Smith M. D. The Almanacs were sent before your letter arrived. Shall we still send the G. V.?

David H. Shultz. Who sent in your name last year?

Ann E. Hoke. Your subscription had expired with volume six. We have entered your name for another year.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Dear Brethren and Sisters.—I will give a short report of my late visit to Bedford and Somerset counties, Pa. Arrived at the new meeting house at Dunning's Creek, on the evening of the 17th of December. Had ten meetings in that branch: quite an interest was manifested by the members and others. A general desire is manifested, not only by members, but others also, to obtain more light on the ordinances of baptism and feet-washing. On Monday 26th was conveyed by brother Hiram Musselman, across the Alleghany mountain to the Shade Branch, Somerset county, where I enjoyed myself very much among the dear members. Attended ten meetings in this branch, generally well attended, by members and others; and quite an interest manifested in the word preached. On the 2nd of January was brought across the mountain, back to Dunning's Creek, by brother Jacob Berkey, accompanied by brethren Jos. Berkey and H. Musselman, having been invited to attend a council meeting in said Branch, on the 3rd., that evening (2nd) brother J. S. Holsinger spoke in the Lutheran church, at Pleasantville, on the subject of Christain baptism, by request of some of their members. I trust the truth did not suffer by the investigation. On the evening of the 3rd the subject of Feet-washing had been announced, and was treated on, according to the ability that God gave. On the 4th was conveyed to brother John M. Holsinger's, where I attended meeting that evening, and an appointment was then made for Saturday evening, & the subject announced to be: "Church Goverment." A professed preacher of the gospel, having some weeks before, in a school house near by, spoken on that subject, and openly, and positively denied the authority of disowning members, no matter what their conduct or deeds may be. On the 5th was conveyed by John S. Holsinger to Snowberger's meeting-house, where I met brethren J. W. Brumbaugh and Joseph Snowberger of Clover-creek Branch, on their return from a visit of several weeks. We had two meetings that day, and also on the 6th, the evening meeting on the 6th was also devoted in examining the subject of "Church Government." On the 7th, was taken by brother D. Snowberger to Holsinger's meeting-house, where the disputed point was spoken on at length to a large and attentive audience.

Eighth again conveyed by brother S. to their meeting-house, at 10 A. M. and in the evening to Eshelman's for evening meeting. 9th to Brumbaugh's, Clover-creek Branch; where I met my companion, and learned that she enjoyed reasonable good health during my absence: also met brethren W. Howe and A. Van Dyke of the Lewistown Branch, and enjoyed their company very pleasantly for two meetings.

On the 11th I started for home with staff in hand, but was overtaken by brother G. Puderbaugh who took me on his sled to Martinsburgh—here engaged a sleigh, took his sled, home, unhitched one of his horses sent his boy with me the greater part of the way. When a cup of cold water will be noticed, such acts of self sacrificing kindness will surely not pass unrewarded.

Saturday, January the 14th returned to Dunning's-creek again, where, according to previous announcement, a choice for a minister was to take place. Preaching on that evening, and next day at 10 o'clock; after which the choice was attended to; which resulted in the selection of brother Jno. B. Miller for the ministry. He having served for some time in the office of deacon, the church decided to choose another one in his place: whereupon the votes were again taken and resulted in a tie vote for brethren George Calahan and Christian S. Holsinger, and so both were installed into the office of deacon.

Brother John S. Holsinger was ordained at the same time. So that part of the Yellow-creek congregation is now considered a separate branch; and will hereafter be represented as such at district meetings; adding one name more to the list of churhes for Middle Pennsylvania District.

Elders Jacob Miller of Yellow-creek, and Joseph Berkey of Shade Branch were in attendance at said Meeting.

DANIEL M. HOLSINGER.

Brother Henry :—Inasmuch as church news is always more or less interesting, and we trust edifying too, we have taken upon ourselves the responsibility of communicating a few items, relative to this part of God's moral heritage; and we have concluded to transmit through the medium of the Companion, believing that the majority of your readers love to read and hear of the success and prosperity of our beloved fraternity.

According to previous arrangements a series of meetings commenced on the evening of the twenty-fourth of December in the Berlin congregation, and continued about two weeks. Brethren D. F. Good, G. Bricker, and D. W. Rowland, from Franklin Co., Pa., and J. H. Baker, from Meyersville, Md., came to our help. C. G. Lint, from Elklick congregation, was also with us a few days, and took a part in the ministerial labors. But unfortunately brother D. H. Rowland took sick, and consequently could only be present at a few of our meetings, and brother G. Bricker being a mere youth in the ministry, almost the entire labor rested upon brethren D. F. Good, and J. H. Baker, to whom the success of the meeting may, in a great measure be due. The brethren met twice a day, morning and evening; and the attendance being very large and regular, the meeting, of course, soon became very interesting and edifying to both saint and sinner, as the sequel of this communication will show.

All classes and sects came pouring in, seemingly anxious to know what these humble strangers had to say, as servants of God, in regard to the wants and spiritual interests of the soul, as portrayed in the Gospel. And we are satisfied that many have gone away with quite different conclusions, in reference to the application of the saving means of the Gospel, as adapted to the soul.

No sooner had these servants of the most high God introduced themselves to the people of Berlin and vicinity, and commenced to preach the word in its primitive purity and power, than the work of the Lord commenced to revive; stirring up the minds of the people by way of remembrance of these things. Every member seemed to be at his post, together with the preaching of the Word to such great effect in the demonstration of God's Spirit, and the combined prayers of God's people ascending even before the throne of Jehovah, we trust, verifying the saying that "The prayer of the righteous availeth much." Thus the ark of God commenced moving forward, and we are persuaded in our minds, according to promise and the assurance of inspiration, that the tears, groans and supplications of the saints have been heard in heaven and answered upon earth; not only in reviving the poor way-faring pilgrim through this benighted world, but also in bringing the sinner solemnly and sincerely to reflect upon the danger of procrastinating time, and thus jeopordizing his soul in the prospects of heaven and its congenial climes, upon the sunny banks of final deliverance.

Nor is this all, whilst the brethren have been so liberally disposed in dealing out the crumbs of the bread of life to the hungry soul, our hearts have been made glad in the reception of the same. It was a rich feast to the soul indeed. At the same time they have not refused to send arrows of conviction to the sinner's flinty heart: thanks be to God, wounds have been inflicted that can only be healed by Jesus. The result is that twenty souls have confessed Jesus, and were added to the church by immersion, giving us their hands and Jesus their hearts.—Notwithstanding the depth of winter with its keen blasts and garb of ice and snow, the ice was cut, and an edict went forth from the hearts of this people: "Not my will, but thine be done in all things." Many others have almost been persuaded to be christians, laboring under profound convictions, and we trust, yea, pray, that they too, may be led into the fold of king Jesus.

We would here state that since June last, forty-one members have been added to the church here: to the church militant here below, and we pray that we might be so unspeakably happy as to be translated into the church triumphant above.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us labor and pray a little more, in order to become more thoroughly qualified unto every good work, that we may become efficient instruments in the hands of God, in doing good all around us.—No matter whether official or lay members, we have all a work to do, and cannot be idle in the vineyard of the Lord. In short, we are all laborers together.

By way of conclusion, we would just say, from what we have experienced of late, and from the glorious results of our meeting, that we feel like encourageing meetings of this kind. Yours in the bonds of union.

E. Cober,
E. J. Meyers,
Berlin, Pa. W. G. Schrock.

Brother Henry:—It is with pleasure that I take my pen to contribute a little church news for the Companion. We had purposed, some time ago, to hold a series of meetings about the hollidays, and had written for help; but obtained none from the brethren, on account of hindering circumstances. Being disappointed in this, we concluded that we would petition the good Lord for help, and go to work. We commenced our meeting on the first day of January, and continued until the evening of the tenth, in which time the Lord added unto our little zion thirteen souls, which were initated by baptism; and two more, which had strayed away from the fold, were made willing to return; which makes an aggregate of fifteen; and we trust that manny more were deeply impressed. The church in general was much revived. Amongst those that were baptized, was Peter Lohr. I here mention his name for the satisfaction of his friends what we think would be glad to hear of his return to the Lord, even in his old days. Dear brethren we can truly say that we had a time, of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, which made our hearts greatly rejoice. May the Lord continue his good work, and may we one and all gird up the loins of our minds, and hope to the end, for the grace that shall be brought to us at the revelation of Jesus Christ, is the prayer of your week but sincere brother.

Gleanings from Subscribers.

"_____ says he will quit the use of tobacco in every way, and pay ten cents for the paper, though he is well able to pay full price. I submit him to you; do as you choose."

Well, we'll take him, though really he ought to pay full price, as he will get all the benefit of the reform. Perhaps by the end of the year, when he sees how much he has saved and gained he will conclude to pay the balance; unless he should happen to take to the "root" instead of the "weed."

I mean to do for you what I can, and help to make up the loss you may have on account of the decided stand you have taken in opposition to tobacco, though I must confess to my shame I still use a little myself; though I have spent no money for it for the last eight months, and hope, by the help of the Lord, soon to be entirely free from it. H. F. Long.

That is the way to do it: say I will, and then ask the Lord to help you; and it will be an easy matter. God helps those who help themselves. When we help ourselves into a bad habit, we ought to go a good ways towards helping ourselves out of it.

"I do not belong to the church, but I feel an interest in your paper, because it exposes evil, such as tobacco, and other evils. I hope you may prosper, and still expose other evils; and I would name as such, the raising of tobacco, and raising corn for distillers, and thus sending destruction throughout the land. All such evils have a bad influence upon the church."

It does appear reasonable, that, if it is not right to use the tobacco and the liquor, we ought not to help make it, or to sell it. We would not do either. Let us not help the enemy in the least, not even by a wink. He has help enough without us. But had you not better get inside the church, friend L? You could do more service, especially to yourself. Think of it.

We feel thankful to our heavenly Father that there are still some that can give good advice and encouragement to us who are so far from hearing the true Gospel preached every Lord's Day, as many can do. We still hope that some good speaker from among the many that are in other parts of the Brotherhood, will come and settle in our neighborhood. Brother Michael Forney was up from Richland, and held six meetings here with us; and we were much rejoiced to hear him speak.

JAMES MCBRIDE.

Hazle Dell, Ill.

"I felt sorry when I saw in the Companion that there are brethren who would rather pay two dollars for a larger paper that does not advocate sound doctrine, than to pay one dollar and fifty cents for the Companion, which advocates the truth as it is in Jesus. I think it shows a very weak faith in the word of the Lord."

S. L. NEWCOMER.

I wish you would send the C. F. C. to young sister ——— ———. She is a poor, weekly sister, and has nothing except what she is able to work for. She does not spend money for tobacco, or any other unnecessary things, and is very fond of reading the Companion and would be lost without it. I hope the Lord will cause some good brother or sister, who has the means, to send you $1.50 for it.

A. J. CORRELL.

She fills the bill, and of course must have the C. F. C.; but we join brother Correll in his hope that some brother or sister may be induced to pay for it, as our list of free copies is getting quite lengthy, while our contributions for that purpose do not yet reach $5. Those who contribute to that fund, and do not wish their names published, will please select the name, or token by which we can acknowledge their contributions through the paper. When the amount reaches five dollars we will publish it.

You were kind enough to send the Almanacs, but said the money never came to hand. I now send another fifty cents to pay for them, as I think I can lose a little as easily as you can lose so much. I am very much pleased with the Almanacs, and consequently I don't want you to lose anything on them.

ISAAC GARBER.

Thank you, brother Garber, it does us good to meet with a brother of your stamp, occasionally. We lose quite an amount of money in that way, during the year. And yet it is a delicate matter in business. The writer is sure he has sent it, and does not feel like sending twice; and if we do not send him what he had ordered, he will cease to patronize us. Hence, in nearly all cases, we have borne the loss, amounting, some years, to over a hundred dollars a year, expecting to make up part of it by continued patronage and confirmed friendship.

Another drain on our income is, by the loss in bad money, counterfeit notes, which amount to considerable in a year. All suspicious-looking bills we mark, and if pronounced bad we return them; but still we are frequently taken in, mostly on 50ct notes.—Now, these are passed off on us by our brethren, unconsciously, of course, and we must lose it. We, therefore, highly appreciate it when our brethren manifest a willingness to help bear some of those losses which cannot in any way be attributed to any fault or short-coming on our part.

Rambling Thoughts No. 2.

BY S. M. MINNICK.

On last Sabbath, the certainty of death was very forcibly presented to the minds of the citizens of our village. They assembled at the M. E., Church in the A. M., to hear a discourse by the pastor, in memory of a little girl, whose spirit had ascended to the Courts above. In the P. M., they were again called upon to sympathize with parents who were compelled to have their only child consigned to the cold grave.

The minister had baptized (as they call it,) one of these little lambs a few hours before its death. He had the good sense to say, however, in his sermon, that "The spirits of all children who die in infancy, go to the arms of Jesus." This being his belief we can only account for his practice by assuming that he sprinkles these lambs of the kingdom of Heaven to satisfy the minds of the ignorant who know no better, or perhaps in obedience to the Methodist Discipline.

We did not realize that the Companion added so much to our enjoyment, until last week it failed to reach our post office. Its loss made us feel the necesity of having a Companion visit us every week for our instruction and edification. One brother came three miles through wet and mud for his C. F. C. I hope the time will soon come, that our paper will be so well supported, that it will make us a visit for every week in the year.

Antioch, Ind.

We fondly hope that our brother may be gratified in his desire. And besides, being prosperous in the business, we hope that we may also be supported by a strong corps of careful contributors and correspondents, who will prepare their manuscript with care and skill, so that the editors can occasionally leave the office for recreation, and to mingle with kindred spirits. In every congregation, some one ought to be appointed whose duty it will be to communicate deaths, marriages, and all other matters of interest.

Brother Henry:—I have neglected writing to you for several days. I wish to inform you of our lonesome condition; there are but four of us that belong to the church in these parts. My wife and myself were baptized last November. My mother and grand-mother belong to the church. We are here without any preachers. Brother Baily has been here twice. We are very lonesome, and would like for some of the brethren to come and preach for us, as I think there could be much good done. And as we are commanded to go into all the world and preach the gospel. If they will come and preach for us we will treat them the best we are able. I live nine miles west of Charleston, on the north side of the river, near cross lanes.

Mother has been taking the Companion since August, and I have been reading it, and am highly pleased with it. It is a great pleasure to me to hear from the brethren and to read their explanations on passages of scripture, when I have not the opportunity of hearing them preach.

I. H. STARKEY.

How is It?

Brother Holsinger:—We generally believe that Martin Luther was the founder of the Lutheran church. John Wesley of the Methodist, and Alexander Campbell of the Campbellites, and according to your biographical sketch Alexander Mack must have been the founder of the Brethren Church, as you say he was the first minister among the Brethren. Here in Indiana we preach that Christ was the founder of our church. JNO. H. MILLER.

REMARKS.—We would not say that Luther Calvin, and Campbell are the founders of the sects that are named after them. They were the agents the instruments through whom said churches were organized; but the founder was in advance of them, and must be traced either to the source of good or evil. We do not say in our biographical sketch of Alexander Mack, that he was the founder of the church, but he was the first mintster. We do not claim our religion by birthright, or apostolic succession. We see no advantage in denying what is true; but on the contrary we see harm in it, by avoiding the true issue and assuming a wrong one. Alexander Mack was the first minister of the peculiar organization of which we are now a member, and we can see no good reason why he should be despised for that. Neither did he ever claim, nor do we now claim for him any special honor from that source; but facts are facts, and when we go to recording historical events, or biographies of men, we desire to deal in facts. We believe that Jesus is the Author, the Founder of the Church, but men were the instruments through whom he accoomplished the work, and brother Mack was one of them. But we never preach upon this matter at all. We preach Christ, and show that the Church of Christ will keep the commandments of Christ; then we show that the Brethren do keep the commandments, and the inevitable conclusion is that the Brethren are the Church of God, no matter "whence it cometh or whicher it goeth, for so is every one that is born of God."

Queries.

Will some of the young readers of the Companion, tell us why Christ is called the Word and Wisdom of God? E. S. MILLER.

Brother Henry:—I should like for some brother to give an explanation of Matthew 16: 18, "And I say also nnto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." What rock had the Savior in view in speaking unto Peter?

W. G. LINT.

MARRIED.

On the 3rd of January by Elder C. G. Lint, brother SIMON MILLER of the Black Hawk Branch, Iowa, to sister LYDIA FIKE, of the Elklick Branch, Somerset Co. Pa.

In the Elklick Branch, Somerset Co. Pa. Sept. 25th, 1870, of Typhoid Fever, LYDIA, daughter of brother Samuel P. and sister Susan MILLER: aged 25 years, 6 months, and 23 days.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

At the residence of her son-in-law, Thomas Thompson, in Muscatine Co., Iowa, June 20, 1870, sister ELIZABETH RESLER aged 61 years, 9 months, and 15 days. She lived a consistent member in Christ, for 35 years.—Funerrl services by Eld. Joseph Garber.

Also in Cedar Co., Iowa, Oct. 7th, 1870, LUCINDA KHALER, daughter of the above; aged 29 years 3 months, and 2 days.

THOS. G. SNYDER.

In the Benton Co, congregation, Iowa, Jan 4th, 1871, brother JOHN TROXEL; aged 33 years, 8 months, and 2 days. The deceased was a faithful deacon in the church. His wife and three of his children died some time before his death. Three small children are left without father, without mother, to mourn their loss. May the Lord bless and provide for these little orphans. Since May last, eleven of the Troxels have died in the town of Maryville. Disease, Tpyhoid Fever. Funeral services by J. O. Watters and the writer, from the 103d, Psalm 13, 14, 15.

Thos. G. Snyder.

In the Upper Cumberland District, Cumberland Co., Pa. November 29th 1870, brother HENRY SHEAFER, aged 61 years, 2 months, and 10 days. He suffered much by spells, for several years, from Dropsy; but bore his afflictions with Christian patience, until the good Lord saw fit to end his sufferings by taking his spirit home to Himself who gave it. He left a widow—a sister, and sons and a daughter, and brethern and sisters in the church to mourn their loss. But we do not sorrow as those who have no hope. Funeral occasion was improved by the brethren from Philemon 1: 21.

DANIEL KELLER.

In Tulpehocken Branch, Pa., of old age, CATHARINE DOHNER, and widow of John Dohner, and mother-in-law of brother C. Bucher, January 5th 1871; aged 77 years, 5 months, and 27 days. She spent 8 months on her bed and 6 months she had to be nursed like a child. "And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones, a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward." The occasion was improved by the Brethren from Isiah, 35: 10.

Notice.

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and sells readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. Fahrney, No 30, North Dearborn St. Chicago, Illinois, or

THE PIOUS YOUTH.

A MONTHLY PUBLICATION

Designed to Promote the Welfare, and enlarge the number, of the class of persons whose name it bears.

It comes about as near pleasing everybody as any paper published.

One dollar a year in advance.
Address H. R. HOLSINGER,

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

BY G. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Ann.

VOLUME VII. TYRONE, PA. TUESDAY, JAN. 31, 1871. NUMBER 5.

The Prayer of Submission.

Father, I know that all my life
Is portioned out for me,
And the changes that are sure to come,
I do not fear to see;
But I ask yet for a present mind,
Intent on pleasing Thee.

I ask Thee for a thoughtful love—
Through constant watching, wise.
To meet the glad with joyful smiles,
And wipe the weeping eyes;
And a heart at leisure from itself,
To soothe and sympathize.

I would not have the restless will
That hurries to and fro,
Seeking for some great thing to do,
Or secret thing to know:
I would be treated as a child,
And guided where I go.

Wherever in the world I am,
In whatsoe'er estate.
I have a fellowship with hearts
To keep and cultivate;
And a work of lowly love to do,
For the Lord's own welcome wait.

So I ask Thee for the daily strength,
To none that ask denied,
And a mind to blend with outward life,
While keeping at thy side;
Content to fill a little space,
If Thou be glorified.

And if some things I do not ask
In my cup of blessings be,
I would have my spirit filled the more
With graceful love to Thee;
More careful but to serve Thee much,
And to please Thee perfectly.

There are briars besetting every path
That call for patient care;
There is a cross in every lot,
And an earnest need for prayer;
But a lowly heart that leans on Thee
Is happy everywhere.

In a service which Thy will appoints,
There are no bonds for me,
For my inmost heart is taught the truth
That makes Thy children free:
And a life of self-renouncing love
Is a life of liberty.

A Family Duty.

To fear God and keep his commandments, is the whole duty of man. Some of those commandments relate directly to things temporal, while others relate to things spiritual, or eternal. Christ teaches that some of these are weightier, than others, and terms them "the good part," and would therefore have us first to "Seek the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." Seeking the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, is our first, and may I not say, our chief duty? If we obtain this kingdom—which is a spiritual kingdom—it will be manifest to all around us. It will be like a city set on a hill, or like a lighted candle set on a candle-stick; yea, more, it will be like leaven. Although it is set up first in the heart of man, it will not be hidden there, but will soon influence all with whom it comes in contact. It is impossible for man to profess religion—at least the religion of Christ—and keep it secret. Religion implies such duties as to make it a mutual thing; and if a parent professes it, he will no longer live for himself. If the injunction: "seek ye first the kingdom of God," is observed, it will be made a family duty. Reading and speaking the word of God, as well as prayer are indispensible family duties; and it is this part of the worship of God that I wish to write on at present. I am aware that some object to making this a family duty. I was once called on to speak in Elkhart Co., Ind., and in my desultory remarks, spoke of the duty—as I considered it—of family worship; and after I took my seat, a worthy brother, rose and remarked, that "we should always be careful not to teach that for a commandment which was not commanded;" and, said he, "family worship is not a command;" but "it is good, and whatsoever is good is right." I know not why he spoke so, but I cannot forget it

Were I to write on public worship, I would not expect opposition, at least not from the ministers. "One of the great institutions of God for keeping alive in this world, and securing to men the benefits of the knowledge and worship of himself, is that of the family." God designs that wherever a Christian is found, there through that Christian, to plant a church, and as unbelievers and believers are not to be "unequally yoked together," and as "man is not without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord," the one who is in the Lord, must certainly attend to the worship of God in his, or her sphere; for women should also "labor in the Lord." The worship of God, with but a few exceptions, was performed in families by the faithful ones, in the earliest ages of the world. Although we do not find the direct command of doing so before Abraham's time, yet we know that Abraham did so, and that God blessed him for it; for says he, "shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do; seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him!—For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he has spoken of him." And after the Law was given unto the children of Israel, Moses enforces the first principles of religion on his people, by exhorting them to keep the commandments, statutes, and judgments of the Lord, and says, "Let these words, which I command thee this day, be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou lest down, and when thou risest up."—So much for the reading and teaching of the word of the Lord to our families; and if you read the word carefully, you will learn that the command, "thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve," was observed in families, as well as in public. The prophet Jeremiah certainly considered family worship an indispensible duty as well as Abraham, Moses, and others, and therefore calls on God to "pour out his fury upon the families that call not upon his name." There is great power in secret prayer, but as already remarked, [illegible] created to live an hermit life, but it is to let his light so shine before men that they may see his good works and thereby is brought to glorify God. Brethren, prayer is a good work, as well as reading and teaching the word of God. Christ's language in Matt 6: 33 is in unison with Paul's in Tim. 2: 1, none of which can exclusively be confined to public worship, but both favor family equally as well as public. But says one, we have no command how often we must engage in this duty. The word "first" will give you at least a starting point, but like public worship, duty and surrounding circumstances sometimes demand it oftener. Although there are no restrictions given, yet, when all is summed together, we have a sufficient rule for either, to forbid the neglect of it. "As the twig is bent, the tree is inclined." It is in the family that lasting good can be done to children. If parents all would perform their duties to their families, there would be more Timothies who would know the "Holy Scriptures from a child."—When the apostle Paul gives the duties of the Christian family, he instructs the parent in language as follows: "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." It is always necessary for the successful teacher to have the love and good will of his pupils; so the parent in a Christian family, must have the confidence, love, and good will of his children, which are given into his care to be instructed for heaven and eternal life. As such is undoubtedly the case how necessary it is, then, that fathers provoke not their children to wrath. Having the confidence, love, and good will of his children, the parent is then father to instruct them. "Nurture and admonition of the Lord!" what a world of meaning do these few words contain. Nurture—food, or diet, nourishment, education, &c. Christian parents, your children have souls as well as bodies; and your first duty is to look after their precious souls. They must be fed with the bread of life, and this must be done daily, or else the words of Christ are not obeyed, namely, "give us this day our daily bread." "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." It is impossible for a parent to perform this duty, unless he reads the word of God, and gives it to his children, and prays for them.—Remember nurture implies that you educate, nourish, feed and train, or bring up, and "nurture in the Lord," requires that you do it in the Lord. "Admonition," yes, "gentle or friendly reproof and counsel against faults, is also necessary, and all this must be commenced in early childhood. It is a question of discussion whether the teacher has not more influence over children than the minister of God. I believe he has. (I talk from experience) How important, then, that the parent act his part as teacher in the family. The word of God is so plain on this duty that I deem it unnecessary to add any more.

NOAH LONGANECKER

For the Companion.

Ought---Is it Binding?

The word "ought" is a defective, intransitive verb, and is considered by many not to be binding in meaning. We shall therefore proceed to examine the word carefully by different authorities. We wish to refer the reader to some of our standard lexicons, and eminent men of the day, as to how they define the word.

"OUGHT"—to be held or bound in duty, or moral obligation."—Webster. "To be obliged by duty."—Walker. "To be bound by duty, or to be obliged."—Worcester. "To be bound by duty."—McGuffey. "Bound."—Town.

We will now get the meaning of some of the principal words in the definitions. Bound—"to be obliged by contract, oath or kindness." Duty—"that which a person is bound by any obligation to do." Obligation—"the binding force of a vow, promise, contract, law; any act by which a person becomes bound to do." Obliged—"to be under obligation." By the definitions of the word ought and the meaning of the principal words in them, we find the word ought to be binding.

Upon examination of the Bible we find the word ought to be binding.—The Pharisees are a people that omitted the weightier matters of the law, which by the meaning of the word ought they were bound by duty to do. "These ought ye to have done, and not leave the other undone." Matt 23: 23. Luke 11: 42.

I now wish to refer the reader to a portion of scripture to which I was exhorted by a young clergyman, to prove that the word ought is not binding but which proves [illegible] son: "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." 1 John, 3: 26. Now my worthy opponent, whoever you may be, the commandment from the beginning is "that we should love one another." 1 John, 3: 11. "If God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." "For when we were yet without strength in due time Christ died for the ungodly." "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners.—Christ died for us." Rom. 5: 6, 8.—"This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." John 15: 12, 13. "I am the good shepherd; the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep" John 10: 11. The above quotations are sufficient to convince any unprejudiced mind that the word 'ought' in the above text is binding and that we are under an imperative duty to lay down our lives for the brethren. But as the above text is the foundation upon which man builds his doctrine that the word ought is not binding, I shall refer to other passages of scripture containing the word ought, which is just as binding.

"If I then your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." John 13: 14. Now we that are Bible readers know that "feet-washing" is an example given by Christ, and we as his disciples are under obligation to wash one another's feet.

"Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoreth his head. But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head." 1 Cor. 11: 4, 5. "For a man indeed ought not to cover his head." If a man dishonoreth his head by praying or prophesying with it covered, is it left to his choice to have his head covered? I deny that it is left to his choice, but he is under obligation to have his head uncovered, "forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God."

All denominations as far as I know believe it to be right for a man not to have his head covered while at worship. But when it is for a woman to have her head covered, they all except a few, say it is not necessary, and that the word "ought" is not binding. "For a man indeed ought not to cover his head." This language plainly signifies that a woman ought to have her head covered. I am not quoting scripture to prove that a woman is to wear a covering on her head, but to prove that the word "ought" in the quotations of scripture is binding in meaning. Paul says, "neither was the man created for the woman, but the woman for the man. For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head, because of the angels." 1 Cor. 11: 9, 10. Now is it left to the choice of a woman to have power on her head? No, she is bound by duty to have power on her head. And especially "because of the angels."

"Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be."—James 3: 10. If the word "ought" in the above sentence is not binding, people professing christianity are at liberty to bless or to curse. Can a christian both bless and curse? "Can a figtree, my brethren, bear olive-berries, either a vine figs? so can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh." James 3: 12. And so can no christian both bless and curse.—"No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other, or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Matt. 6: 24.

"So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies." Eph. 5: 28.—Should a man love his wife or should he not? Paul says, "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." Eph. 5: 25 This is sufficient to prove that men are bound by duty to love their wives even as Christ loved the Church. He loved the church that he gave himself for it.

"Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip." Heb. 2: 1. This language proves that we are under obligation to give earnest heed to the Gospel, lest at any time we should let some of the things slip which are contained therein

"For the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say."—Luke 12: 12.

"He shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do."—Acts 10: 6.

"We ought to obey God rather than man."—Acts 5: 29

"He knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know."—1 Cor. 8: 2.

"I should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice."—2 Cor. 2: 3.

"I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak."—Eph. 6: 20.

"For that ye ought to say, if the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that."—James 2: 6.

"Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought to love one another."—John 4: 11.

For the benefit of the reader I have noted the above passages in which the word "ought" is found, and if it is binding in one place it is binding in all other places. If it were not binding in the above passages of scripture the language would read differently, and the word in the place of "ought" would be option. We leave a thing to a man's option, and he makes his choice. By substituting the definitions as given above in place of the word "ought" we find that they correspond to the language in which it is found and makes it binding in meaning.

I shall now proceed to finish this article. In refering to the parable of the talents, and the reward to those who improved them. "Then he which had received the one talent came and said, I was afraid and went and hid thy talent in the earth, lo, there thou hast that is thine." His Lord answered and said unto him, thou wicked and slothful servant, thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchanges, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usery. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness, where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."—Matt. 25: 27, 28, 30. Here we readily see the reward to him who received the one talent and did not improve it, which it was his bounden duty to do. It was not left to his choice, but he was under obligation to improve the talent, and the result for not improving it is that he was to be cast into outer darkness.

To Young Men. Let the business of every one alone and attend to your own. Don't buy what you don't want. Use every hour to advantage, and study to make a leisure hour useful. Look over your books regularly. If a stroke of misfortune comes upon your business, retrench, work harder, but never fly the track. Confront difficulties with unflinching perseverance and you will be honored, but shrink and you will be despised. Seek to acquire the power of continuous application, without which you cannot expect success. If you do this, you will be able to perceive the difference which it creates between you and those who have not such habits. You will not count yourself, nor will they count you as one of them. Thus you will find yourself emerging into the higher regions of intellectual and earnest men—men who are capable of making a place for themselves, instead of standing idly gaping, desiring a place.

Make Haste.

Make haste, O man, to do
Whatever must be done;
Thou hast no time to live in sloth,
Thy work will soon be done.

Up, then, with speed and work,
Fling ease and self away:
This is no time for thee to sleep,
Up, work, and watch, and pray.

The useful, not the great,
The thing that never dies,
The silent toil that is not lost—
Set these before thine eyes.

The seed whose leaf and flower,
Though poor in human sight,
Brings forth at last the eternal fruit,
Sow thou, by day and night.

Make haste, O man, to live,
Thy time is almost o'er;
O, sleep not, dream not, but arise,
The Judge is at the door.

Address Delivered at the Dedication of Salem College at Bourbon, Indiana.

But to reach this the Bible must be taught in more than three hundred languages and dialects. Heber, Martin, and Judson have been pioneers in the work. Hundreds are now in the field. Mexico, South America, Spain, France, Italy, Hungary, Russia, Germany, Turkey, Palestine, Arabia, Persia, China, India, Madagascar, the Indian and Pacific Isles, Tusmania and New Holand, the Barbary States, the whole of Africa, are thirsting for living waters, and hungering for "that bread that cometh down from God out of heaven."

Men and women strong in faith, and earnest in labor, have by the combined aid of the British and American Bible Societies responded to this demand for aid in but about sixty languages. Only about one-sixth of the work is done. There are men all around the earth patiently tracing out, step by step, the laws of unknown tongues and adapting them to the work of the evangelist. To this enterprise there will be no backward movement. Not only from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Northern ocean to the Mediterranean, must the glad tidings of redemption be heard, but the Hun must hear it in the valleys of the Obi and the Amoor, the Celestial Empire shall respond to the same. The Arab once more shall become the child of Abraham, not by the bond-woman, but by the free, and his caravan will bear to the Ethiope on the Upper Nile, and to the Niger, a better than Moslem faith and hope. The islands of the ocean shall catch the joyous sound and waft it onward around the earth.

But to accomplish this grand work, we must fulfil our mission in the creation, which was to subdue the earth as well as to replenish it. The wilderness must be made a fruitful field, and the forces and resources of nature appropriated. Enterprising and intelligent men will be employed in sending the rail-car across the mountains, from the eastern to the western ocean, and in bringing out from the depths, earths mineral wealth, in sending commerce across every sea, and in conducting that grand system of peaceful trade and exchange which brings nations into one common interest.

When Christianity shall have vitalized the church, and its influence shall have pervaded society, professional men, doctors, lawyers, and teachers, farmers and mechanics and merchants, men and women, old and young, will feel that there is work for all to do in building the walls of Zion and in beautifying her courts. The common school, the Academy, the College and the University, will each be dedicated to the work. The Sabbath and Mission school, will abound with earnest teachers, and he who travels across the continent and the seas, will scatter the Bible and the tract among the nations. The church will send out healing waters, and leaves from the tree of life.

Ignorance and Christianity do not long exist together. When the Great Sower goeth forth to sow, the harvest of thirty, sixty, and a hundred fold is found in good soil, soil that has been broken up and the stone and tares removed. The properly educated mind is the element in which the grace of God can best operate to bless the world. History is our proof. Civilization and Christianization must exist together. Science and Literature ever have been and they ever will be the instruments by which the Bible has accomplished and will accomplish its mission.

The history of the reformation is but the history of the civil and religious rights of man. Martyrs in untold numbers, have perished in prison and at the stake, and thousands have been slain in sanguinary strife, that these rights might be enjoyed and transmitted to succeeding generations. But why think of transmitting them to posterity without intelligence to maintain and enjoy them. No people, without intelligence among the masses, can long be free.

Let me then bring this matter solemnly home to you. The Lord has created you for an object. You have a mission to perform in the earth, and your life will be worse than a failure if you live out of the Divine harmony. Seek then to look into the great future and search into the true ideal of its demands.

The path of Alexander or Napolean may satisfy the ambition of him who lives only for earth. When our race of three score years and ten is run, we shall only have commenced our existence. Life passes into eternity, but "not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of his Father which is in heaven." The delectable city is only found of those who live in the Divine harmony, of those who cast the anchor of their faith and hope on the Rock of their salvation and press forward through every crowd of difficulty.

One thought more and I will close. Our blessed Savior told his disciples, when they were entertaining sectarian prejudices and were bordering closely on religious bigotry, "He that is not against me is for me." He had "other sheep that were not of that fold," and would in the end, when their work on earth was done, gather them into one fold and He would be their one Shepherd.

Let us all, then, learn the lesson of life well, that God loves and blesses others as well as ourselves,that "He will have mercy on whom he will have mercy." His harvest is large and needs many laborers. Let then, each company upon the walls of Zion, learn to rejoice in the work of other laborers, that her walls may be made strong and her gates may speak of praise. Let every one learn to "help his neighbor," and "say to his brother, be of good cheer." How nobly did Jehu approach the king of Israel, when he said, "If thy heart be right, as my heart is with thy heart, give me thy hand."

One of the most cheering aspects of the times, is, that evangelical Christians are expanding their hearts and minds, beyond their hitherto denominational boundries, and can rejoice in the success of the common cause.

Not only the Common school, the Academy and College will be the objects of our common solicitude and labor, but the Sabbath and Mission school, and the various means of reform will bring our hearts and heads together in our common journey to that river which must be passed to reach the Promised Land. Let us learn to approach its waters with that faith and hope by which we can see "life and immortality brought to light." Though we may have gathered there from every land, from every kindred, nation, tongue and people, though we enter, clad in our varied garments, and may show the imperfections of our forms and creeds, seeing now "only in part," yet if he who is our High Priest, our Resurrection and Life, our Redemption, Sanctification and Righteousness, be with us, we shall fear no evil, and rising triumphantly from the floods, on the other side, we shall appear no more as servant or Master, as Jew or Gentile, as anchorite or pilgrim, as civilized or barbarian, as Baptist, Methodist, Episcopalian, Presbyterian or Friend, but all in the vigor of perpetual youth, and being clothed in the robes of white, which is the righteousness of saints, and having our hearts attuned to sing the same songs of eternal redemption, to the Lamb that was slain, the student and the teacher, their labors o'er, the flock and the shepherd, shall enter the beautiful city, whose walls are salvation, whose streets are gold, and gates pearls, which needeth not the light of the sun or the moon, for the glory of God is the light thereof.

THE FOLLOWING DEDICATORY CEREMONY, WAS THE CLOSING EXERCISE.

In the name of the United States of America, which has proclaimed liberty of conscience, of thought, and of speech, to its citizens, and that men are endowed by their Creator, with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

In the name of the state of Indiana, whose laws and protection are thrown over and around it, and which has recognized in its fundamental law, that in order that the rights and privileges of its citizens, may be perpetual and the blessings of heaven, and of our scientific, literary and religious institutions, may be perpetuated to all future generations, has declared that moral, scientific, literary and agricultural learning, is the common right of all its citizens, and that the Bible shall not be excluded from its schools.

In the name of the Scientific and Literary Institutions of America, which welcome it into the sisterhood of Colleges.

In the name of the Churches, that extend their fraternal sympathy and interest for its prosperity and success.

In the name of the citizens who have liberally contributed their means in its support, and whose hearts are earnest in its welfare.

In the name of the German Baptist Church, whose prayers have gone up to the Throne of Grace, in its behalf, accompanied by their generous contributions for its erection and success in the great and glorious work of the spread of Christian intelligence, and for the building up of the church, and that the day may be hastened when the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, shall cover the earth as the waters do the sea, and when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.

In the name of him who sitteth in the Heavens; in his help and in his excellency in the sky, and without whose blessings, no institution can live and prosper.

We dedicate this college to the work of intellectual, moral, and christian culture, invoking the wisdom that comes down from God out of heaven, and his choicest blessings upon the heads and hearts of all that may seek these halls, either to teach or be taught, and may it live long in the earth, to increase in usefulness, power and life to be a blessing to a multitude and to the world. Amen.

For the Companion.

Mutual Forbearance---Dress.

Sometime ago, we presented to the readers of the Companion a few thoughts on Mutual Forbearance.—Whatever we may have said in that article, we merely endeavored to argue, that when a difference of opinion obtains among Christians on points, not clearly revealed in the Bible, they should bear with one another, and not depisse or judge one another, simply because of this difference. We also intimated that, since Christ and the apostles have not specified how christians shall dress, we thought it wrong for some brethren to adopt one peculiar mode of dress, and hold it up as the model of humility, and only standard of right, and then judge others by this standard.

I will here say that I take no pleasure in disputing or arguing on questions on which the brethren hold different views, and would not have written that article, but I was almost compelled by force of circumstances to do so. And since a reply to my article by D. M. Mohler has been published in No. 14, vol. 6, of Companion, in which it is alleged that I "hate with a perfect hate, all badges external as worn by the children of God," and that I "certainly err," &c. I now ask liberty to develope the subject a little farther.

Those who hold brother Mohler's views as generally refer us to Romans, 12: 2: "And be not conformed to this world." They seem to think this proves, beyond all controversy, that Christians should dress different from all other people. It must, however, be admitted that this passage of scripture is not to be understood in an unlimited sense. It does not mean that we are not to conform to the world in any respect. The world has made many good and useful inventions to facilitate labor, and advance civilization, and all christians conform to the world, in adopting and using those inventions. The early christians traveled from place to place afoot or on horseback; but the world has invented easier and speedier modes of travel, and the Brethren now conform to the world in traveling by rail road and steam boat. And now how about dress? Does the Apostle mean that we are not to conform to the world in dress? We think not. It would be a difficult matter to dress at all, without conforming to the world in some degree. Some worldly people dress just as plain as the humblest christians.

Others dress a little more grand, and others a little most gaudy.—Christ has established no mode of dress; hence all modes are worldly and no matter how we dress, we are to some extent conforming to the world. What then does the Apostle mean by the injunction: "Be not conformed to this world?" We think the inevitable conclusion is, that we are not to conform to the world in anything that is sinful. That the Apostle had not reference to external appearance only, is evident from the expression which he immediately uses: "But be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds." If the world dresses sinfully, Christians are not to conform to it in those respects in which it is sinful. That the slaves of fashion are a shamefully, sinfully over-dressed people, is a fact admitted by all; and we think no one, who has been "transformed by the renewing of his mind" will have a desire to conform to them.

But how can we know what is sinful in dress, and what is alowable? Brother Mohler refers us to 1 Tim. 2; 9: "That women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety—not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array." But here christians will differ again as to what constitute "modest apparel." Some are certain that they are "adorned in modest apparel," while they readily see that their brethren and sisters are not.—We will quote Barnes on this passage, "The apostle, by the use of the word adorn, shows that he is not opposed to ornament or adorning, provided it be of the right kind.—The world, as God has made it, is full of beauty, and he has shown in each flower, that he is not opposed to true ornament. There are multitudes of things which, so far as we can see, appear to be designed for mere ornament, or are made merely because they are beautiful. Religion does not forbid true adorning. It differs from the world only on the question what is true ornament.—Modest apparel means that which is becoming or appropriate. The apostle does not positively specify what this would be, but he mentions somethings which are to be excluded from it, and which are inconsistent with the true adorning of christian females: "broidered hair, gold, perals, costyl array." These are forbidden. But there is no religion in a negligent mode of apparel, or in inattention to personal appearance, any more than there is in wearing gold or pearls; and a female may as truly violate the precepts of her religion by neglecting her personal appearance, as by giving excessive attention to it."

It may be a difficult question to settle, how much ornament is allowable, and when the true line is passed. But though this cannot be settled by any exact rules, since much must depend on age, and on the relative rank in life, and the means which one may possess, yet there is one general rule which is applicable to all, and which might regulate all. It is, that the true line is passed when more is thought of the external adorning, than of the ornament; of the heart. Any external decoration which occupies the mind more than the virtues of the heart, we may be certain is wrong. The apparel should be such as not to attract attention: such as becomes our situation; such as will leave the impression that the heart is not fixed on it.

We do not wish the reader to understand us as arguing against the plain mode of dress, which many brethren have adopted; not in the least. It is only when this one mode of dress is preached up as the only mode becoming for christians, and those who cannot see the propriety or necessity of adopting it, are stigmatized as "proud, breachy brethren, nominal church members," &c., that we commence to protest.

Not very long since, we heard a preacher proclaim from the pulpit, (I blush as I write it down,) that if a man was not willing to wear a hat like he wears, he is proud, and he can prove it that he is proud. I blush,—not that I "hate with a perfect hate" this peculiar style of hat, but because I am fearful that such preaching will have a tendency to injure our common cause.

That a difference of opinion obtains among christians is a fact well known; that this difference of opinion existed among the early christians, is evident from Rom. 14. And the apostle in this chapter exhorts them to bear with one another: "Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not: and let not him which eateth not, judge him that eateth." We will quote Barnes again on this verse: "The Apostle has here happily met the whole case in all disputes about dress, and scruples in religious matters, that are not essential. One party commonly despises the other, as being needlessly and foolishly scrupulous; and the other make it a matter of conscience, too serious for ridicule and contempt; and a matter, to neglect which is, in their view, deserving of condemnation. The true directions to be given in such a case is to the one party, not to treat the scruples of the other with derision and contempt, but with tenderness and indulgence. Let him have his way in it. If he can be reasoned out of it, it is well; but to attempt to laugh him out of it, it is unkind, and will tend to confirm him in his views. And to the other party, it should be said, they have no right to judge, or condemn another. If I cannot see that the Bible requires a particular cut to my coat, he has no right to judge me harshly, or suppose that I am to be condemned for it. He has a right to his opinions; and while I do not despise him, he has no right to judge me.—This is the foundation of true charity; and if this simple rule had been followed, how much strife and envenbloodshed would it have spared the church."

New Jerusalem.

"And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, come down from God out of Heaven." Rev. 21: 2.

We learn that John was favored by a vision, to have a view of this Holy City, in all its splendor and greatness, or, in other words, he saw the Church in great prosperity.

I am of the opinion that this holy city, called the new Jerusalem, signifies the Kingdom of God; the Kingdom of the Messiah; the Church of Christ on earth, that Kingdom into, which we are translated, if we are the children of God, and that state in which all the disciples of Christ are, while in the present state of existence. Now, to support the above, I will refer you to Paul's letter to the Hebrews 10: 22, where Paul informs the church in relation to its present state, he says, "Ye are come unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem."—Thus we are informed that the believers in Christ, had actually already come unto this heavenly city, the church of the first born, which is the Church of Christ. We are informed, that this city has no need of the light of the sun and moon. By the sun and moon, I understand is meant the Jewish church and state. We do not need that light in the heavenly city, because God and the Lamb is the light of it. The light of the church of the living God, is of the moral world.

And it is said that this city has a wall great and high, a strong defence so strong that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. We also learn that the gates of this city are always open, that is, the door of the church of Christ is always open to receive sinners from all parts of the earth.

There shall be no night there in that city, no moral darkness, no heathen idolatry; nothing but life, light, vital activity, attended with everlasting hapiness and joy, will be appreciated by the inhabitants of this heavenly city, the New Jerusalem, the Church of Christ.

The Wind as a Musician.—The wind is a musician by birth. We extend a silken thread in the crevices of a window, and the wind finds it and sings over it, and goes up and down the scale upon it, and puts Paganini must go somewhere else for honor, for lo! the wind is performing upon a single string. It tries almost anything on earth to see if there is music in it, it persuades a tone out of the great bell in the tower when the sexton is at home and asleep; it makes a mournful harp of the grand pines, and does not disdain to try what kind of a whistle can be made in the humblest chimney in the world. How it will play upon a great tree until every leaf thrills with the tune in it, and the river that runs at its base is a sort of murmuring accompaniment. And what a melody it shows when it gives a concert with a full choir of the waves of the sea, and performs an anthem between the two worlds, that goes up perhaps to the stars, which love most the most and sang it the first. Then how fondly it haunts the old houses mourning under leaves, singing in the hollow, keeping the old time without fingers, and singing a measure of pain and old song around the toothless and deserted hearths.

When Socrates was asked why he had built for himself so small a house, he replied "Small as it is, I wish I could fill it with friends." There, indeed, are all that a wise man would desire to assemble, for a crowd is not company, and faces are but the plain of pictures and talk but a tinkling cymbal, where there is no love.

It is by such subtle feeling as we can scarcely describe, but, that the enemy conquers; it is by each letting fall the work, that the hive is stored with honey. It is by each insect putting forth all its might, that the nest becomes an orchard, and cities rise up on the bosom of the waste.—Dr. Cumming.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. 5.

PASSOVER.

The Passover, a feast of the Jews," John 6:4, was instituted by the Lord, and was first observed by his chosen people, in Egypt, according to some chronologists about A. M., 2513, but according to others, A. M., 2515.

The design of this feast may properly be spoken of under three heads: the immediate design, the intermediate and the ultimate.

The immediate design of the Passover was a test of faith and a condition of safety to the Hebrews, the chosen people of the Lord, when he would pass through the land of Egypt," to "smite all the first born in the land of Egypt," and to "execute judgment against all the gods of Egypt." Ex. 12: 12, 13.

The intermediate design of the feast was commemorative. It was intended, by its annul observance, to keep them in continual remembrance of the delivering mercy of the Lord, manifested towards them in that night in which he "passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians." Ex. 12:14, 25 —— 27.

The ultimate design of the "sacrifice of the Lord's passover" was typical. The character of the victim, the sacrificing of it, and the feasting upon it, were all typical of "Christ our Passover." All these designs shall be noticed in their appropriate places; but at present we will proceed with some general remarks upon the institution, and first observance of the Passover, a full account of which we have in the twelfth chapter of Exodus.

The passover was instituted in the early part of the same month in which it was to be observed which month was to be to the Hebrews, "the beginning of months"—"the first month of the year." Verse 2.

The whole congregation of Israel were to observe the Passover, and Moses and Aaron were to instruct them when and how to observe it.—Verses 3, 47.

They were commanded to select their victims "on the tenth day of the month," and to keep them "up until the fourteenth day of the same month," on which day they were to kill the Passover "in the evening," or, according to the marginal reading, "between the two evenings." Verses 3, 6.

Their victims were to consist of lambs or kids, males of the first year; and they must be without blemish, according to the standard of judging of the perfection of animals. Verse 5.

The head of every family might select a victim for his own family, if there were members enough to use or nearly use it; but if the family was too small, he and his neighbor next to him might consociate in selecting a victim for the use of their families in company. Verse 4.

When the victims were slain, the blood was to be caught in basins, and they were required to take a bunch of byssop, and dip it in the blood, and strike the lintel, and the two side-posts, and none of them was to "go out of the door of his house until the morning." Verses 7, 22.

They were to be careful in dressing the Passover, so as not to break a bone of the victim; neither were they allowed, in the case of neighbors joining together, to disjoint it and eat part in one house and part in another; "In one house shall it be eaten; thou shalt not carry forth aught of the flesh abroad out of the house: neither shall ye break a bone thereof." Ver46.

They were commanded to eat the flesh in the night which immediately followed the sacrificing of the Passover. They were forbidden to eat of it raw or sodden with water; but were required to roast it "with fire; his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof;" by which we understand the undivided body, including the head, legs, liver, heart and lungs. They were to eat it with "unleavened bread and with bitter herbs." Verses 8, 9.

They were to eat it in haste, with their loins girded, their shoes on their feet and staff in hand. They were to let nothing of it remain until the morning: if any remained till the morning, it was to be burned with fire. Verses 10, 11.

Upon a faithful observance of this service, as instituted by the Lord and enjoined upon his people through his servants Moses and Aaron, they had the happy assurance of God's unfailing promise, that they should be kept from the plague, when the Lord would pass through the land of Egypt, to smite the first-born of man and beast, and to execute judgment against their gods. Verses 12, 13, 23.

This service was to be observed annually throughout their generations, to keep them in remembrance of their great deliverance from the plague and from the Egyptian yoke; and it was strictly enjoined upon them to teach their children the importance and meaning of this solemn service. Verses 14, 24, —— 27.

Not only were they to kill the passover on the fourteenth day (v. 6,) but also to put away the leaven out of their houses, and to eat unleavened bread at even,(verses 15, 18); and for seven days, commencing at even—the close of the fourteenth day, and ending at even—the close of the twenty-first day, they were strictly forbidden to use unleavened bread: it was even enjoined that there should be no leaven found in their houses. Verses 15— 19.

From what has just now been said, it will be seen that the commencement of the feast of unleavened bread and the feast of the Passover met in point of time. God, in the institution of these feasts, joined them together; and as we are strictly forbidden to sunder what God has joined, it is found necessary to considder these feasts in connection.

The children of Israel did as they were commanded, and they realized God's promise: they were secure within their blood-sprinkled houses while "at midnight, the Lord smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of Pharoh that sat on his throne, unto the first-born of the captive that was in the dungeon; and all the first-born of cattle." Verses 28, 29. Now, when "there was a great cry in Egypt," because "there was not a house where there was not one dead." The hard heart of Pharoah was broken. He, who on a former occasion had said: "Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go," Ex. 5. 2, now "called for Moses and Aaron by night, and said, Rise up, and get you forth from among my people, both ye and the children of Israel; and go, serve the Lord as ye have said. Also take your flocks and your herds, as ye have said, and be gone; and bless me also." Ex. 12: 30—32.

As "the Egyptians were urgent upon the people, that they might send them out of the land in haste, for they said, we be all dead men," the people who had eaten the Passover with their loins girded, their shoes on their feet and staff in hand—ready to travel at a moments warning—"took their dough before it was leavened, their kneading troughs being bound up in their clothes upon their shoulders," and having "borrowed of the Egyptians' jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment," "the y journeyed from Ramesses to Succoth, abouth six hundred thousand on foot that were men, besides children." Ver. 33—37.

In our remarks on the divisions of the day and night it was shown that the word morning, in the Bible, is used in reference to all parts of the natural day, except the afternoon, and that we must determine the precise time referred to by the term, by reference to the context. According to this rule, we determine that the word morning, as used in the clause, "and none of you shall go out of his house until the morning," means the after part of the night—after midnight.—The blood was to be for a token upon the houses where they were; and as there was no security outside of the houses having this token, they were to remain in them until the morning—until the Lord had passed through the land, and accomplished his work of destruction. This work was accomplished at midnight; and then "Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron.—The immediate design of the Passover as a test of faith, and a condition of safety, having now been fulfilled, and the morning, in the sense in which it had been used, having now come, they did not hesitate to go out of their houses to converse with the Egyptian king. (Compare Ex. 9: 27; 10: 16; with 12: 31;). And not only did Moses and Aaron go out of their houses in the morning,or after-part of that night, but the whole congregation of the children of Israel "journeyed from Rameses to Succoth." Wherefore it is said in Deut. 16: 1, "The Lord thy God brought thee forth out of Egypt by night." Also in Ex. 12: 42, "It is a night to be much observed unto the Lord, for bringing them out of the land of Egypt: this is that night of the Lord to be observed of all the children of Israel in their generations." The whole train of circumstances as they are recorded, establishes the fact that they left Ramesses in the morning of the same night in which they ate the Passover. We wish our readers to examine this point closely and to have this fact impressed upon their hearts, as we shall find farther use for it hereafter.

It has now been shown that the immediate design of the Passover was fully accomplished. The faithfulness of the Lord's chosen people was tested, and their safety was confirmed; the haughty spirit of Pharaoh was humbled to the dust, and his stubborn will was made to yield to the demand of the Lord, to let his people go; and the Lord's people were delivered from their bitter bondage. In the language of the Psalmist: "He brought them forth also with silver and gold; and there was not one feeble person among their tribes. Egypt was glad when they departed, for the fear of them fell upon them." Ps. 105: 37, 38.

But if the only design had been a test of their fidelity and a condition of their safety from the fearful ravages of the destroyer, it would no doubt have ceased to be observed as soon as these ends were gained; but the wor d of the Lord was: "This day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the Lord throughout your generations; ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance forever." Ex. 12: 14. "And ye shall observe this thing for an ordinance to thee and to thy sons forever. And it shall come to pass, when ye be come to the land which the Lord will give you, according as he hath promised, that ye shall keep this service. And it shall come to pass, when your children shall say unto you, What mean ye, by this service? that ye shall say, It is the sacrifice of the Lord's Passover, who passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians, and delivered our houses. And the people bowed their head and worshipped." Verse 24—27. We learn from these scriptures, that the passover, after its first celebration, was to be observed annually on the same day of the first month, as an ordinance commemorative of the delivering mercy of the Lord, manifested in passing over the houses of the children of Israel, when he smote the Egyptians, and executed judgment against all the gods of Egypt. In the commemorative character of the institution we behold the intermediate design of the Passover.

The Lord also instituted the feast of unleavened bread to be observed in connection with the Passover. The language of institution is: "Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses: for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel. And in the first day there shall be a holy convocation, and in the seventh day, there shall be a holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you. And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread, for in this selfsame day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt: therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations by an ordinance forever. In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even. Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses: for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he be a stranger, or born in the land. Ye shall eat nothing leavened; in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread." Ex. 12: 15—20. The reader will readily observe that the feast of unleavened bread was also commemorative, and that it was designed to be the anniversary of the time in which the Lord brought the armies of Israel out of the land of Egypt.

A moment's reflection will enable any person to see the advantages to be derived from such commemorative observances. The Lord had made bare his holy arm in delivering his obedient people, and in meting out justice, by taking vengeance upon his disobedient and rebellious enemies. By having these facts brought fresh to their minds, from time to time, they would be moved to gratitude and fear: to gratitude, because of his mercy so profusely lavished upon them; and to fear, because of the visitations of his wrath upon those who disregarded his requirements. By this means their faith in his promises would be greatly strengthened, and they would at each remembrance, be enabled to see more clearly the grand importance of rendering a strict obedience to all of his holy requirements. In this way, the study of the historical part of the Bible may contribute largely to our advancement in the divine life; hence "Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ," says: "I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of Egypt, afterwards destroyed them that believed not."—Jude, ver. 5.

But some of the constituent requirements of these feasts were not commemorative; we must therefore look for their signification, to their ultimate design. The purpose of God in instituting of these feasts was, not only to test the fidelity of his chosen people and afford them commemoratives of his delivering mercy, but also to give them types, to foreshadow his greater delivering mercy, in the fulness of time to be manifested toward all his chosen people, and to point specifically to the great anti-type—"Christ our Passover."

Salem College Address.

In the present number will be found the closing chapter of an address delivered at Salem College, at Bourbon, Indiana, by Barnabas C. Hobbs. The closing paragraphs demand some criticism, though much of the address is interesting and instructive. We do not look upon the great Union Movement among the popular religionists of our age, as foreboding any good to the true follower of Christ: but regard it as an unmistakable precurser of religious persecution. Let us not be deceived by the "horns of the Lamb," for when he shall have received power, all who will not worship his image shall be killed. Our hearts should be right toward all men, and should be filled with a desire for the salvation of all; but that we should wish God-speed to all the sects, and isms, and heresies of the present state of the religious world, is as foreign to pure christianity, as no faith at all, and much more dangerous.

We hope, too, for the success of the college, that its managers do not endorse that part of the address. If it is to be patronized by the Brethren, let it be a "Dunkard" school in fact, teaching and upholding our peculiar faith and practice, standing aloof from the vanities, affectations and haughty airs so prevalent in worldly and sectarian institutions of the kind. To such an institution among us we are favorable, and such a one we believe will be liberally patronized.

Remarks to A. Ludy, Jr.

We do not now wish to justify ourselves in the position we took at last Annual Meeting, upon the tobacco resolution, but we do wish to explain.

1st. We are opposed to all hasty and arbitrary ecclesiastical legislation; except where we have a plain "Thus saith the Lord." We believe in church discipline, believe it will answer its designed purpose, but do not regard it as one of the most available means for working reform. Agitation is far more successful, and does not appear so oppressive. Persuade a man that his "idol is nothing," and he will demolish it in good nature, but you undertake to destroy it for him while he yet reverences and fears it, and you may expect to feel his vengeance.

2nd We did not think the subject had been sufficently ventilated. We feared if the resolution would receive a premature passage, it would be like many others on our minutes: a dead letter. Let us convince our members that it is an evil, that it is useless, that it is wrong, and that it is their duty to abandon it, and there will be but little legislation required.

The above were our reasons for doing what we did, which, however, we do not think amounted to as much as our brother intimates. We are willing to confess that we may have heaped upon ourself some "perplexities," and we are also willing to suffer for the sake of advancing truth and holiness. We, however, plead for mercy, that our chastizement may not be beyond what we can endure, and especially that which comes from our friends may be very mild, as brother Leedy's has been.

That tobacco using ought to be placed in the same category with wearing hoops, military clothing, shawls, &c., we agree, for it can easily be proven a greater abomination, and far more injurious, morally, mentally, and physically, Mistakes.

It is said mistakes will happen in the best of families, and we presume the Companion family will not be an exception in that particular. But we are always willing to correct our mistakes. We want to be right, and we know no better way than when we see that we are wrong, to try to get right. We have now revised our books, and the addressing apparatus, and tried to correct all the mistakes we could find; should any occur in sending out this number, then we must have light from some other source than ourselves. Please give it at once.

Answers to Correspondents.

LEVI ANDES. The Assistant Editor is the author of the editorials on the Passover and the Lord's Supper. If you will have patience a few weeks longer, the point that is now dark to you, will be made quite clear and conclusive. A clear understanding of the method of reconing time, will reconcile all apparent differences. The Lord and his disciples came together, washed feet, and ate the supper in the first evening, or night of the 14th, and in the afternoon, or close, or second evening of the 14th, at the exact time for killing the Passover, Jesus died upon the cross. This will be fully shown in connection with all the intervening circumstances, and illustrated by diagrams, in a few weeks. In the mean time we invite friendly criticism, which will receive due attention as the subject reaches the points at issue

D. M. BARE: The 6 meant that you had paid for volume 6. You have now paid for volume 7 in full.

LANDON WEST: It is all right.

W. E. FADELY: One dollar and fourteen cents will pay to the end of volume seven.

J. H. PRICE: We really cannot tell how it did come. Hope the paper will come right now.

ABRAHAM H. CASSEL: A. S., including volume seven, owes $2,25. We have no report of the Salem College, except that published in the COMPANION.

NAME WITHHELD: and for that reason it went into the waste box, where everything of the kind is doomed to go.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Strive for the Mastery.

Strive for the mastery! never cave in;
  Never give up, no, never;
Always remember that those who win
  Are those who make the endeavor.

Never complain of the want of a friend,
  Expect not another to aid you,
Success must ever on toil depend,
  And toil will never degrade you.

Work willingly, then, nor let it be said
  By those who would seek to upraid you,
That a "streak of good fortune" has come to your aid,
  Or that another has made you.

All that is wanting is latent within,
  Is slumbering, is dormant within you;
Awake from your slumber! 'tis time you begin
  To let the world know what you can do.

Wake up! all around there is work to be done!
  Behold the wreck and the ruin!
Take hold like a man, for the hour has come
  That should find you up and doing.

Wake up! what's the use of creeping along
  Like a snail in the pathway before you?
Go forth like a man that is valiant and strong
  That humanity may not ignore you.

'Tis a shame that another your burdens should bear,
  While you are well able to bear them;
'Twere better that you another's should share
  Or at least be willing to share them.

Earn the bread that you eat by the sweat of your brow,
  And see that you eat no other;
With a resolute will put your hand to the plow,
  And never look back, no, never.

But on, on in your furrowed pathway tread,
  And well be that pathway beaten,
And be it of all men known and read
  That you've earned the bread you've eaten.

Then when summer and harvest is past and gone,
  And age is o'er you creeping,
You'll rejoice that you toiled when young and stromg,
  Your life-work well completing.

Do we desire to have the dead raised, Lazarus-like, from the sepulcher of their cold indifference and unbelief, and made alive in Christ? Then we must, Mary and Martha like, bring Christ to them in his living power to save. We may indeed have some stone to roll away, even then, before the command will be given, and the dead come forth alive to our embrace; but that is only part of the same great work of bringing together the Savior and those we desire to have him save.

Patience is always crowned with success. This rule is without an exception. It may not be a splendid success, but patience never takes anything in hand that it does not succeed with in some form.

The question is, not whether a doctrine is beautiful but whether it is true. When we want to go to a place, we don't ask whether the road leads through a pretty country, but whether it is the right road, pointed out by authority—the turnpike road.

As a ship held by an anchor looks as though it were going out with the tide, yet never goes, so some souls that seem constantly to be getting nearer to Christ, never come, because they are anchored and held by some secret sin.

It is not required that a man shall always be perfect, in order to be a true Christian. But it is required that he should be a sincere seeker after perfection. It is required that he should be moving forward and advancing up the straight and narrow way of life.

HABITS MUST BE CONQUERED. Those who are in the power of evil habits must conquer them as they can, and conquered they must be, or neither wisdom nor happiness can be attained

A Winter Thought.

They were bright and green in Summer,
These naked, leafless trees,
They tossed their branches gaily,
To meet the laughing breeze.
But the Winter's breath hath blighted
Full many a happy thing,
Whose lamp of joy was lighted,
At the golden fire of Spring.

The Summer leaves have faded,
The Summer flowers are dead,
And the nooks are dark and shaded,
Where once their breath was shed.
Still underneath our foot steps,
The grass is fresh and green,
But the virdure once above us,
No longer may be seen.

We found in life's sweet spring time,
Fair blossoms 'neath our feet
Thronging in wonderous beauty,
Our loving looks to greet.
As the years went on the flowers
Took on a richer hue,
But they faded far more quickly,
Than when our life was new.

There will come another summer,
And zephyrs fresh and free,
Will kiss the leaves returning
To the reft and naked tree.
But for us—we wait the harvest,
And the Angel Reaper's time,
Ere hills of summer's beauty,
Shall rise for us sublime.

In the land to which we're going,
No autumn wind hath power
To blight the leaf immortal,
Or dim the Amaranth flower.
Thither our steps are tending,
For this our dim eyes strain
The home, that knows no parting,
Nor shadow of a pain.

The Bloom of Age.

A good woman never grows old. Years may pass over her head, but if benevolence and virtue dwell in her heart, she is as cheerful as when the spring of life first opened to her view. When we look upon a good woman we never think of her age; she looks as charming as when the rose of youth first bloomed upon her cheek. That rose has not faded yet; it will never fade. In her neighborhood, she is the friend and benefactor. In the church, a devout worshipper and exemplary christian. Who does not respect and love the woman who has passed her days in acts of mercy and kindness—who has been the friend of man, and whose life has been a scene of kindness and love, a devotion to truth and religion? We repeat such a woman cannot grow old. She will always be fresh and buoyant in spirits and active in humble deeds of mercy and benevolence. If the young lady desires to retain the bloom of youth let her not yield to the sway of fashion and folly; let her love truth and virtue, and to the close of life she will retain those feelings which now make life appear a garden of sweets ever fresh and ever new.

"No Secret, Doctor."

"I noticed," said Benjamin Franklin, "a mechanic, among a number of others, at work on a house erecting but a little way from my office, who always appeared to be in a merry humor—who had a kind and cheerful smile for every one he met. Let the day be ever so cold, gloomy, or sunless, a happy smile danced like a sunbeam on his cheerful countenance. Meeting him one morning, I asked him to tell me the secrete of his constant happy flow of spirits. "No secret," he replied. "I have got one of the best of wives, and when I go home, she meets me with a smile and a kiss; and then tea is sure to be ready; and she has done so many little things to please me, that I cannot find it in my heart to speak an unkind word to anybody."

What influence, then, has women over the heart of man to soften it, and make it the foundation of cheerful and pure emotions! Speak gently, then; a kind greeting, after the toils of the day are over, cost nothing, and goes far towards making a home happy and peaceful. Young wives, and girls candidates for wives, experience, no doubt, may have already taught them this important lesson. And what we say to wives, we say also to husbands,—a loving word and kiss go very far with a woman.

Sunny Rooms.

Folks need sunshine quite as much as plants do. Men and women who have a fair degree of strength and the use of their legs can get out into the world, and get a glimpse of the sunshine now and then, and if they choose to do so, let them live in rooms with only a northern exposure; but if possible, let us secure rooms into which every ray of sunshine that falls in winter may enter for the little babies who are shut up in the house, invalids who cannot leave their rooms, and aged people who are too infirm to get out of the doors. Let us reflect for a moment that these classes of persons, if kept in rooms with only north windows, will suffer just as much from the absence of sunshine, as green plants would do in the same rooms, and their suffering is on account in proportion as a human being is better than a geranium or a fuchsia. Everybody knows how a bright sunny day in winter gladdens every one who is so situated as to enjoy it. Let us make some sacrifices, if need be, in order to give the feeble ones their measure of sunshine.

Every woman is wise enough and careful enough to secure for her house-plants every bit of available sunshine during the cold winter months. Great care is taken to get southern exposure for them. Indeed, if one can secure no other than a north window for her plants, she has too much love for these unconscious inanimate things, to keep them at all. She would rather leave them out in the cold to die outright, than linger out a martyr existence in the shade. —Laws of Life.

Inspiration of the Scriptures.—Seeing a man reject the inspiration of the Scriptures, while he maintains his belief in Jesus Christ and his redemption, I compare him to some one who has a costly perfume in a glass vessel; he breaks the vessel, thinking he can at the same time preserve the perfume, but loses all. Set aside the inspiration of the scriptures and all Christian doctrine will disappear. This is not a theory; I have seen it to be a fact; therefore the question is one of the greatest importance. I am not ignorant of the difficulties that are raised, but the plentitude of the divinity to be found in the scriptures is too great to be in the least prejudiced by them.

If a man has any religion worth having he will do his duty and not make a fuss about it. It is the empty kittle that rattles.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

From the Upper Cumberland Branch.

We are still trying to get along in the fear of the Lord. Our ministry has been confined to home services this fall and winter, except brother John Brindle and Zach. Hollinger, who made a trip to Virginia. Bro. Keller met with a misfortune in the fall. He had a barn burned by an unknown person. The writer has the charge of a suffering mother, which has demanded our services so far. May the Lord be our helper in all our afflictions and misfortunes. We have added a few to the church during the past fall and winter.—The church met in quarterly council on the 24th of December last, to council matters and subjects, and amongst other things the insurance question came up in this wise: Would it be wrong for the Brethren to form themselves into an Insurance Company for protection against fire? The council say no. This subject is to be referred to the District Meeting for adoption or rejection. The brethren here wish the brethren of Middle Penn'a. District to consider this subject in the fear of the Lord, and compare it with the gospel, and besides for the good of the church.

I will here propose a system.—Suppose the Middle Penn'a. District to form itself into a company, and this council to appoint a secretary, and each church appoint three brethren to assess or appraise the buildings, goods and chattels of each brother or sister that wishes his building, goods and chattels to be insured, and those valuations or assessments of buildings, &c., to be sent to the secretary appointed by the district council, and in case of fire let the church in which the loss occurs appoint brethren to appraise the loss and send it to the District Secretary to make a dividend on all assessed property; and each church to appoint a collector to collect the assessed amount, and the church in which the loss occurs to appoint a receiver to receive the said amount, and pay to the loser by fire. Any member that has his property insured who will refuse to pay his dividend to be dismembered from this Insurance Company, and not to affect anything concerning the spiritual kingdom.

Brethren, I have now introduced this subject to you, and I say for this church that if this will not be approved of at the next district council, this church will submit as we ever did. DANIEL HOLLINGER.

LEES SUMMIT, Mo.
January, 12th, 1871.

Brother Holsinger: I hope by writing a few lines to prevent others from being imposed upon as we have been, by a certain old woman who came to our house the 30th, of November. She claims to be a Mennonite. She gave her name here as Annie Hoover. She is tall, and spare, with rather dark complexion; about 65 years of age. Said she lived near Mechanicsburg, in Cumberland Co, Pa. Said she had 3 daughters; one was James Quinter's first wife; one was married to brother Emmert, in Lee county, Ill, and the other was in Council Bluff, Iowa. She complained of being unwell, so we did all in our power for her. She had access to the whole house, and made herself very familiar and troublesome. She was here 10 days; then went to Pleasant Hill, 12 miles from here. There she called herself Annie Snively. Her story there was entirely different from what she had told here. She had a pair of boots in her basket, at the latter place. From there she went to Holden in Johnson Co. and took stage to Mr. Walburns, in Cass Co. From there she got private conveyance to Dayton, in Cass Co. She told us the names of all the principal speakers among the Brethren in nearly every state.—About the time she left I missed a pair of splendid boots. Who can give a little history of her? I hope this may get down into Southern Missouri, where I think she has gone, in time for some one to give her a piece of good advice.

Yours fraternally.
RICHARD ARNOLD.

Brother Henry:—I would like the Companion to visit me another year. I don't see how I would get along without it; it makes me feel happy when I can hear from my brethren and sisters, both far and near, how they are striving to gain a right to the tree of life. The Lord has said: "He that has a right to the tree of life shall enter in through the gates into the city." Now, my brethren and sisters, let us be on our guard, for the Savior has said, "watch, for in such an hour as you think not the Son of man cometh," that we may be ready to meet him when he cometh in the clouds with great glory to collect his children home.

H. E. SLIFER.

Brother Henry: Brother John S. Newcomer wants the tobacco war to stop; but we say no: never, never, never, until it is placed along side of wearing hoops, soldier overcoats, frock and sack coats, shawls, dusters, wearing fine apparel, going without caps, &c, &c. See A. M. 1863, Art. 3; 1864, Art. 10; 1866, Art. 27. Place it along side of these, under the same rule of Matth. 18, and then we are willing for the war to close. Bro. N. says, also, "the Brethren will fight a goodly number out of their family company, and probably some out of the church." Is it possible that there are brethren that think more of their tobacco, than of the cause of Christ, and the salvation of their souls? The idea of some things being sinful against the body, and not the soul, is indeed a very strange doctrine. Tobacco is as much a sin against the soul as the wearing of hoops, soldier's over coats, &c, yet they are made a test of fellowship under Matt. 18, and tobacco which is worse than any of them is to be let go free. Place it along with them, and then judge with mercy and long forbearance and we are satisfied.—But it is sometimes the case that our most excessive tobacco users are the most tenaciously opposed to superfluities about the apparel I know a case where a number of young sisters were turned out of the church for wearing small hoops, when at the same time they proposed to their brethren, old and young, who sat there in judgment against them, that if they would quit using tobacco they would quit wearing hoops. But nay, say they, the "tobacco question is not under consideration to-day; you must either get out of the church or out of the hoops." O, consistency, where art thou! Make us all equal, and give justice, and we are satisfied. Nothing is nicer under the sun than to see a body of brethren, old and young, dressed cleanly, neatly, modestly and comely; free from all extras or superfluities, joined together in holy reverence to God. And what is more obnoxious and fetid, than to smell the breath of others made odious by the fumes of tobacco smoke, and the amber flung around in different places.—My brethren, let us all be equal, not some punished, and others go free, for this reason. On last year, your humble brother labored hard to get a query from home through the District, to the Annual Meeting. Brother Henry, I have a word of reproof for you. A few numbers ago, you referred to the discussions over our tobacco query, at the last Annual Meeting. Some did not like this, for if it had not been for you, the Annual Meeting would have granted the request of the query, which was to make the use of tobacco, other than for medical and mechanical purposes, a test of fellowship, as in regard to slavery, during the war. God is moving in this matter, and for your folly in diverting the correct decision of the A. M., from our query, you have now got it hanging on your own shoulders, and a good deal of perplexity through your paper.

But, dear brother, as we expect to make an effort to have the A. M., reconsider the decision of our tobacco query, and grant the request of the same. We hope you will give us your aid, and we are satisfied.

We can't get from our mind the idea that brother Newcomer hints, that some of the brethren would leave the church, before they would give up their tobacco! How does that look in the face of the Savior's language: "He that forsaketh not father, mother, husband, wife, children, or lands," (and he might have said tobacco, and no doubt would, had it been in use, and as many slaves to it as there are now,) "is not worthy of me?" In the name of our holy Christianity, what would such brethren think if the sword of persecution were to sweep over our land! Could they give up their fine lands, barns, houses, and even their own lives for Christ's sake? I fear not, if they can't give up their tobacco. In Christ I love all the holy brethren, notwithstanding their tobacco. Brethren, bear with your humble brother.

Northern Ill's. District Meeting.

Brother Henry: Please allow me to inform the brethren, that the district council meeting, of Northern Illinois, will be held, the Lord willing at the Wadam's Grove meeting house, Stephenson Co., on Easter Monday. Preaching on Saturday evening, Sunday, and Sunday evening. And we wish a good and general representation of all the different congregations comprising said council, and also extend a general invitation to all our dear brethren and sisters.

We next call for special attention from the Elders, to the decision of last Annual Meeting, relative to the manner of Electing delegates to the Annual Meeting, as set forth in Art. 29, viz: "That each sub-district send two delegates to District meeting, who only shall be the legal voters to elect the delegates to the Annual Meeting."

Those coming by R. R., will stop at Lena, on the Illinois R. R., two miles from place of meeting.

By order of the church.

ENOCH EBY.

Dear Brethren: I will give you a little church news, which brother J. Miller, of German Settlement, had promised to send to you in full, having taken a transcript from our pass book, on the 30th, of last October; but as it has never appeared, and as we promised the members to have it published, I will endeavor to discharge the duty as best I can.

I left my home, on a mission of love, on the 12th, of September, and met Elder Samuel A. Fike on the 15th, in Preston county, West Va. Thence to Barbour county, and held a church meeting. Thence to Randolph county, and held three meetings. Then through Barbour, Upshire, to Praxton Co., where we held a Lovefeast, the first held by the Brethren in that county; had good order. Ten were added to the church before the Loveferst; five of these were baptized in Lewis county, within three miles of the Webster line, where the Brethren had never preached before. They all belong to the Praxton branch, organized by brethren Jacob M. Thomas and John L. Hook about a year ago. There are three speakers and two deacons, and 27 members, and there were good prospects for a large church.

Then returned to Upshire county, and baptized three; held a Lovefeast, and a number of meetings. Thence back to Barbour; baptized three and held two Lovefeasts—one where none had been held before. We attended the election of 3 ministers, 3 deacons, 4 promotions from first to second degree, and attended some 41 meetings in all.

We thank our brethren and sisters, for the love manifested toward us unworthy ones.

Query 1st. "What do the brethren understand by worshipping God in spirit and in truth?"

"God is a Spirit, and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth." John 4: 24.

The above is what the Savior said to the woman of Samaria, in his talk with her at the well, and my understanding of the text is, that to "worship God in Spirit" we must worship him under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, i. e., we must become subject to that Spirit which the Savior said should lead us into all truth. We must become obedient children, to obey the Lord in all his precepts, as far as lieth in our power. If the Holy Spirit dwells in our heart, we are subject to it, it has the control over us, we submit to all its teachings. Then we can worship God in Spirit, "and in Truth."

We cannot worship God in truth if we worship him contrary to his will. We must not come before him as did the Pharisees of old, who drew nigh unto the Lord with their mouth, and honored him with their lips, but their heart was far from him. We must come before him, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, obedient subjects to his will, then we can worship God in Spirit and in Truth.

Query 2. "Why do we hear of no Brethren east of Pennsylvania and Maryland? Are there none in Kentucky?

I would say I don't know of any existing in Kentucky. In New Jersey there is at least one congrgation that I know of. It sometimes appears to me that even as the sun rises in the east and sets in the west, (night following in the same way) even so may it be with the Sun of glory. That heavenly light sprung forth in Palestine, and now it has wended its way even to the Pacific ocean, nevermore to return—the night of Popular religion following hard after. So the plain, simple doctrine of the Brethren will not take any more because men love darkness rather than light. LEVI ANDES.

Gleanings from Subscribers.

"We have had the largest sheet of ice this winter, that I ever saw.—Much timber, and many fruit trees have been destroyed."

SAMUEL STRINE.

"The year 1870, with its ponderous records has gone with its predecessors down to eternity; 1871 is here, and it, too, will soon glide away; and a few more after it and this dispensation will have closed, for the end is nigh. Hence let us be watchful. The Lord help us to be ready."

PHILIP BOYLE.

"I am sorry that our periodicals cannot be united, so that we would have but one publishing office. Then also I could get more subscribers."

C. BUCHER.

In reading the Brethren's Almanac, I notice in the list of ministers the names of some who are not ministers. I also know of a number who are ministers, but whose names are not on the list. For instance, there are seven in our Flat Rock branch. This may not be your fault.

Fight the tobacco in a mild and reasonable way, for it is a great evil, expensive and offensive. We have a great work before us; then let us labor together for good, you through the Companion, and we on the walls of Zion." SAM'L H. MYER.

"I take great pleasure in reading the Bible and your papers. I cannot get to meeting, for there is no Dunkard preaching here. It grieves me that I cannot go. There are no other members of our society here that I know of. I do wish that some good ministering brother would move here, and establish a church. I believe there could be much good accomplished. I am getting along in years; am going on my sixty-third year, and my health is poor, but if God spares my life, I hope to be able to send you the money for the papers. I should love to hear you speak, but suppose it is impossible. O, may we meet in heaven where there will be no more sorrowing. PHEBE DAVIS.
Champaigne, Ill.

We have two subscribers at Rantoul, and five at Urbana, in Champaigne county. Perhaps they could pay sister Davis a visit. A blessing would no doubt result from it to both parties. Don't forget the visiting part of our religion, brethren and sisters.

Dear Holsinger:—I have often felt sorry that the number of Church papers is increasing. Now I am sincerely afraid it is not for the better. But I rejoice that simply an effort has been made by its editors to consolidate. We do verily not stand in need of quantity, but sorry to say, sometimes of quality. I am encouraged for I see a vast improvement. I do, however, believe more good could be done if we had only One Church paper containing all the good qualities of all. It is too expensive for every family of the brethren to have them all, and to have only part is not so satisfactory. And the more we read the papers the less we will read the Bible. Shall we neglect the Bible for the sake of Church periodicals? I know you answer in the negative, my dear brother, with myself. What should make us neglect

"The truest friend I man ever knew,
Who e constancy we've tried?
Where all were false, we found it true,
Our counselor and guide:
In teaching us the way to live,
It taught us how to die."

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Little Things.

"Little drops of water
Little grains of sand:
Make the mighty ocean
And the pleasant land."

No one should despise the small things of earth; for in the beginning when God created the heavens and the earth, he gathered together the atoms and elementary principles of life, and upon these he built and fashioned the world; rearing stone upon stone and particle upon particle, until "hills peep over hills, and Alps on Alps arise." But aspiring mortals, not content with the little odds and ends of life that fall to their lot unto wield work and worry to achieve some great deed, and carve high their name on Fame's glittering tomb. Not always by great deeds are men most renowned. "Some seeming, petty chance" or trivial act, in its bearing upon human good or ills often blazes out in after days with a lustre far surpassing the acts of kings or princes. Lay hold on the present opportunity, and do the duty lying nearest you—a duty performed in the right spirit and from proper motives, are jewels in your crown of glory. Improve the seeming "petty chance," for thereby you may reach the heart and turn an immortal soul from paths of sin toward the bright hereafter. Make life lovely and home cheerful, by little deeds of love and kindness, by smiles and pleasantness, by mutual forbearance and consideration of the wants, likes and dislikes of others. Work! yes work! employ each fleeting moment—behind us is the Past which comes not again—before us is the vast unknown Future, of which not a moment can be called ours. The Present alone we can claim, and of that we possess not the day when the sun is rising—not the hour in which the day promises most fair, but only the narrow plank—a moment—spanning the two great Illimitables. EMMA.

"I believe in a God." This is a great and worthy thing to say, but to acknowledge that just how and where he reveals himself—this is the one rare bliss of earth— Goethe.

Is it Well with the Child? 2 Kings 4:26.

However hard it may be to part with those little gems, and lay their bodies in the dust, it is a consoling fact to know, that all infants are saved. Hence, it is well with the child. I can sympathize with the bereaved parents, as I too have a little gem gone to the paradise of God, where joy is unspeakable and full of glory. Those little gems are not lost, but gone to represent our families in another world. We have the privilege of going to them, but they can never come to us any more. When we know we have some one departed from death unto eternal life, this should prompt us to serve God with all our heart, soul, might, and strength.

How sad and lonely is the mother, who has been called to weep the loss of her departed child. Oh! it is hard for her to give up that little, loved one, whose smile and childish glee, were the light and hope of her heart. As she lays its little body beneath the clods of the valley, and returns to her home of mourning, and there contemplates its empty cradle once gladdened by her bright eyed beauty.

Never speak of the Holy Spirit as "it." He is a person, and not a thing and he should therefore have the personal pronouns applied to him—he, him, his. This is the way we do which we may keep in the sight of his divine personality in our minds, and render unto him at least the verbal honor which is his due.

The Christian's Departure.

"Let me die the death of the righteous."—Numbers 23: 10.

Death is not only the common fate, but the common fear of living beings. It strikes terror alike to men and beasts. The smallest insect will put forth astonishing exertions to save itself from death. The most timid animal will struggle for its existence; while "skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life."

This principle, therefore, is implanted in living creatures, by the Creator, to impel them to preserve life and to shun death. So far it is instinct and is common to all classes of sensitive things.

But in man a higher element is brought to bear, which operates with widely different effect in the characters of the righteous and the wicked. The event, indeed, is common to both. "As the one dieth so dieth the other." But the difference is found in their future condition and final state. Here, it is easy to show, all are in favor of the righteous. To him death is attended with the following advantages:

1. Release from labor. Life is burdened with toil and care. "All things are full of labor; man cannot utter it." "For all his days are sorrows and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night." "And if by reason of strength our years be fourscore, yet is their sterngth labor and service." Death is the only relief. There is no work nor labor in the grave. There the wicked cease from troubling and the servant is free from his master. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, they shall rest from their labor."

2. Release from affliction. The Savior tells us: "In the world ye shall have tribulation," "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trials which are to try you." All experience tells us: "Many are the afflictions of the righteous."—But if our days are "evil" they are also "few." Soon "God himself shall wipe all tears from our eyes." "There shall be no more sickness, neither sorrow nor crying; for the former things are passed away."

3. Sustaining grace. This is a sore trial to the flesh. Men's hearts fail them in the contemplation of it. But when the trial comes, there is always grace to support it. "My grace is sufficient," says the Savior; and "as thy days, so shall thy strength be." "To the upright in heart, there arises light in darkness." "Yea, though I walk through the valley and shadow of death; I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff, they comfort me."

4. The consummation of faith. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen." But death is the end of faith and hope. The wicked cannot hope, the righteous need not. "For what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?" "He that hath the bride is the bridegroom; but the friend of the bridegroom which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly, because of the bridegroom's voice." It is not, now, "Go work in my vineyard," but, "come, thou blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom"—"enter into the joys of thy Lord." For him, truly, "to live is Christ," but "to die is gain." To remain with his friends is desirable, and natural; but "to depart and be with Christ is far better." If he is "in a strait betwixt two," he is prepared for either. If the "flesh is weak," the "spirit is willing;" so that, when the summons comes, he can cheerfully say: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of life."

Such are some of the cheering prospects which soothe the Christian's heart,—such the blissful realities that gather about his soul in a final hour. Only let us not forget to whom we owe these heavenly hopes, these blissful comforts. 'Tis,

"Jesus makes a dying bed, Feel soft as downy pillows are."

Wherefore let us "comfort one another with these words," while we "thank God through our Lord, Jesus Christ."

Known by Their Fruits.

The questions are often asked. "Who are christians? how can we tell?" The answer to this oftentimes is, "No one can tell; this matter must be left until the judgment of the great day, then the good shepherd will separate them one from another, and set the righteous on his right hand, but the wicked on the left."

If this is a question to be solved after death, what, then, did the Savior mean by his clear and pointed argument, recorded in the seventeenth chapter of Matthew? It means, "by their fruits ye shall know them." This is sustained by the following argument: "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"—Certainly that would be as unnatural as for water to flow up the mountain slope. The truth is, that "every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit." Most positively, "a good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." What, then is the conclusion? "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."

Where, then, is the uncertainty that is supposed to be involved in the matter? True we may not be able to determine in regard to all, for the want of a more intimate acquaintance. Time is a grand revealer of the intents of the heart. The true character may not be revealed to us, as was done to some of the prophets and apostles; yet there is, sometimes, a blending of spirit with spirit, an interpretation of spirit by spirit, that almost amounts to revelation.

Let us inquire again. How can we know the genuine from the spurious—the true from the false—the sheep from the wolf—the christian from the non-christian? Answer: "By their fruits." All are familiar with fruit trees. How do we know a good tree from a bad one? Not by its appearance, though that is sometimes most telling; not by the symmetry of its body and limbs, its foliage, nor yet by the beauty and fragrance of its bloom; the proof of character is not in all of these. What then? The fruit is the proof; nothing else.

What are men's fruits? First, their words; secondly, their actions; thirdly, their tempers.

1. Words are great things. They move the heart, sway the multitude, and convulse nations. They are "signs of ideas—are indexes to the heart." "From the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." What do you say of the man whose lips, seared with hot, burning blasphemies, give attendance to lies and slander, to foolish jests, obscenity? Is it a good tree? "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

2. Actions are greater things than words. They are said to speak louder, that is, more truthfully. They are more to be relied upon; they speak, they convey ideas and make impressions, they are as so many mirrors reflecting the real character of the man. We are known by what we do, better than by what we say. How long are you in deciding upon the man who cheats, defrauds, gambles, drinks, steals, breaks the Sabbath, oppresses the poor? But there are other actions, or rather, non-actions, but nevertheless a course of conduct. Among these are, not attending church, forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, not giving to the poor. "Who that hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Not letting his light shine: "Let your light so shine." Not coming out from the world: "come out from among them." Who dare say he is a christian, if he knowingly and willfully neglects these plain duties? Such are not the salt of the earth. Such are not the light of the world. "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." Not the forgetful hearer but the doer of the work is to be blessed. What a fearful thing, that there are so many deceiving themselves!

3. Temper is no less a test than words and actions. This relates to the inner life—the disposition of the soul—the passions and desires—loving and hating—pride, humanity, joy and sorrow. The apostle gives us this proposition: "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Ah! there it is: must have the spirit of Christ. This spirit is a fruitful spirit, and produces those graces or fruits which distinguish so clearly the true and genuine christian from the untrue and spurious. Here they are, look at them; they are precious graces: love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. This is the golden chain of these links that binds every true christian closely to Christ. Having these, we [illegible] the mind that was in Christ. If they [illegible] we will [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Lord's Prayer.

Our Father who in heaven art,
All hallowed be thy name;
Thy kingdom come, thy will be done
Throughout this earth the same.

Chorus.

O, hear my Savior,
O, come and bless thy people now
While at thy feet we humbly bow
O, come and bless them now;
Then we will sing thy sufferings o'er
And praise thee evermore.

Give us this day our daily bread,
Our trespasses forgive
As we forgive our fellowman
For many sins we receive.

Into temptation lead us not,
From evil us defend,
For thine the kingdom, power, all,
And glory without end.

Yoke of Christ.

"Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me." Matt. 11: 29.

In nothing are man's abilities more exerted than in the acquisition of knowledge. It is one of the fundamental principles of the human mind. This is observable by the many exertions that are daily made for its attainment. Men will violate the laws of health, and sacrifice their lives just to get a clear perception of that which is yet a little obscure. Hence they traverse the whole world, all for the purpose of gratifying their desire for knowledge. Yet in some cases we observe people exerting their abilities in a sphere that is infecting their intellects, and destroying their health.

This propensity to pry in the mysterious is exceedingly baneful to the intellectual powers, and in nothing is it more pernicious than in the christian discipline. How many who have realized the efficacy in religion, and were susceptible of comprehending its designs, are now departing from the true faith and have become imitations of false doctrines. And why is it thus? Just because they have tried the teaching of Jesus and find it to be of a condescending nature, and hence they pervert the Gospel to suit their own pharisaical disposition. May heaven forbid that we should ever fall into such a condemnable state.

An inordinate desire for the acquisition of knowledge, has caused as many dissenters as any other of the many fiery darts which Satan hurls at the human soul. It is one of his most methods of acquiring unto himself that time and talent which should be dedicated to the service of the Almighty.

The knowledge and information which we gather from worldly or material objects may be denominated worldly wisdom. This wisdom has a potent tendency to create in man a proud and ambitious heart. But the wisdom which your unworthy writer wishes to impart a few suggestions upon, is spiritual wisdom. This wisdom, if proper applications are made for its attainment, will make us wise unto salvation, and ultimately work out the happy results so beautifully portrayed in the history of divine revelation. This, then, is the wisdom we should most prefer. Yet when we compare the general exertions that are made for that of the former with the latter, it appears that men prefer worldly wisdom. Science, art and literature are daily studied with inexorable zeal, while the Bible, which contains the history of him who is worthy of all imitations, is confined to some old desk where the dust collects on its sacred lids, on which the owner's name and condemnation could be plainly written with legible letters. Such indeed are some of the lamentable facts. And it is to be feared that we, as the imitators of the sacred injunction of the meek and lowly Jesus are having our minds a little too much inveighed with the transitory things of this world, and thereby become delinquent in the things that pertain to our eternal peace and happiness beyond this terrestrial sphere.

God has endowed man with peculiar faculties, and the motives that enforce them are suited to the different capacities of men. We are to remember the Almighty as the giver of every good and perfect gift, and we as weak fallible creatures receiving blessings as an attribute of the divine Providence. And that we are held responsible for every talent entrusted to our care. This should induce men to consider in what way they make use of their talents. He who receives but one need not despair, but willingly go to work and improve that which we have, and thereby gain a few more; by so doing we may meet the approbation of the doner.

By the term talent we principally understand the different mental abilities with which men are invested. There are gifts which we receive from the hands of divine Providence, and the design in bestowing them is that we should glorify his name. This has been the principal design in our creation, and whatever other use we make of them will not justify us when we have to stand before the tribunal of Jehovah, to give an account of our stewardship here below.

Believing that we are the subjects of Christ's kingdom it becomes necessary for us to consider whether we are making an effort. Are we striving? Do we avail ourselves of the various means of grace we have access to? Do we show by our daily deportment that we are learners of Jesus? Or are we exerting our abilities in the acquisition of an earthly treasure, and thereby contaminate our souls with utter deception? Our sole object should be to expurgate ourselves from everything that has a tendency to lead us astray, that we may glorify God in our bodies and our spirits which are his, in a manner that will prove acceptable in his sight, endeavoring to put on the whole armor of God.

Also we are told to walk circumspectfully, not as fools, redeeming the time because the days are evil; being careful not to have fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness; but rather reprove them. Then comes that beautiful and pathetic admonition which is worthy of being inscribed upon the tablet of our hearts: Be ye kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another even as God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven us."

Let us console one another with these words, so that when death may issue its irresistible summons, that we may, with a solaced conscience, fall into the hands of angels to be borne into the paradise of bliss, where our voices may be sweetly blended together in ascription of praise to the Almighty.

Such is the prayer of your unworthy young brother,

"Behold the Lamb of God."

This language was proclaimed by the great Harbinger of truth, to the multitude at the time when the Savior came to the Jordan to receive the initiatory right into his priestly office. The forerunner says: "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" The Savior [illegible] him: "Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."

In many ways are we taught to behold him. Behold King Emmanuel born in Bethlehem of Judea. Lo, the wise men came from the East to worship him. Behold his star is seen! for thus it is written by the prophet: "And thou Bethlehem in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a governor that shall rule my people Israel."

We see him at the age of twelve years in the temple, asking and answering questions with the Jewish lawyers and doctors, deeply interested about the kingdom of God. And in the language of one of old, he truly "is a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." "And after three days, his mother said, why hast thou thus dealt with us?" His answer was: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" We behold him throughout his ministerial mission, doing good to both the souls and bodies of the children of men. There was no ostentatious principle ever harbored in his breast. He made himself of no reputation but condescended to the poorest classes of people as his associates. Lo for his good deeds we behold him accused, and condemned to death. "He was led as a sheep to the slaughter, and like a lamb, dumb before his shearers, so opened he not his mouth. In his humiliation, his judgement was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth." He was nailed to the rugged cross, and extended between the heavens and the earth, there to bleed and die. Lo, the veil of the temple was rent, the earth did quake, and the rocks rent. "And the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept arose. Behold, he is taken down and laid in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea. And on the morning of the third day, he burst the iron jaws of death, and came forth alive, mighty conqueror of death, hell, and the grave.

When we take a retrospective view of the transcendent scene that followed on the morning of the fortieth day from his resurrection, in imagination we can see him, leaving the house of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus, whom he had formerly made his associates. We see him move at an even pace, with slow but majestic step, on toward the hill of Bethany. He ascends the mount as a mighty king. The green hill-side is strewn with an awestricken multitude at beholding his glorious majesty. His person growing brighter and brighter — He ascends to the top of the mount and stands upon its apex alone. At the foot of the eminence sleeps the garden of Gethsemane: Jerusalem, with its towers, pinnacles, palaces, and gorgeous temple, glitters in the distance; and calvary, stretched with fresh Roman crosses, and the tall cypresses above the tomb of Joseph where he had laid, all visible. He surveys the scenes as a divine conqueror. Behold him turn to his disciples and say, "To-day I take leave of you, and ascend to my Father and your Father. You have been with me in my afflictions, and ye shall be with me in my glory. 'In my Fathers house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.' My friends, the gate of the tomb opens into the world of life eternal, to all those who love and keep my commandments. 'All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo I am with you alway even unto the end of the world. Amen." Lo, he is lifted from the earth; he ascends and still ascends, up into the middle air. His disciples stand there with blinded eyes and clasped hands, with awe and amazement, beholding their Lord and Master leave the earth; for his glory illuminates them, now above the brightness of the material sun. Lo! he is seen now in the far off blue depths of heaven, surrounded by his angelic legion, who have come to escort the Son of God to his celestial abode. Hark! we hear loud anthems of praises sung by his angelic host — sweetest chorus ever sung. "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in. Who is this king of Glory? The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord, mighty in battle. Lift up your heads, O ye gates, even lift them up, ye everlasting doors, and the king of glory shall come in." Psalm 24: 7–9.

We behold him enter into the temple and take his seat at the right hand of the throne of God, there interceding for us. "And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God! therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." O, magnificent work, to be made like unto the Son of God, our vile bodies fashioned like unto his glorious body! Magnanimous thought, indeed, beyond the comprehension of mortal man! O sinner, behold the Lamb of God! "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall recieve the gift of the Holy Ghost." You should behold him, by being buried with Christ in baptism: as Christ was buried so must you be. You should behold him by an ablution after the utterance of each name as given in the formula by the Savior himself; then rise to a newness of life, and "be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." Rom. 12: 2.

"Well" says one, "how shall we prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God?" Your unworthy writer can see no other way to prove it than by a literal performance of his holy injunctions according the law of the Lord; for the law of the Lord is a perfect law; and when that law is filled, then it is accepted and his perfect will. Yes, my friendly reader, you should behold him in the lovely ordinance of foot washing. I can truly say that I never attended to the ordinance in my life, without thinking of his excellent name. Yes, I remember that memorable night when the Savior was betrayed into the hands of sinful men. I have imagined that I could almost see him lay aside his garments and take a towel, and gird it on, and wash his disciples' feet. "So after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments and was set down again, he said unto them: Know ye what I a tooth for a tooth, but I say unto you, that ye resist not evil." "Blessed are the Lamb of God!" "Blessed are they that do his commandments; that they may have a right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

The Old Path.

"Thus saith the Lord, stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." Jeremiah vi. 16.

This language, although addressed to unrepentant and unbelieving Jews, who were doing violence to the doctrine of the Lord Christ, who hearkened not, nor inclined their ear to his words, but continued to walk in obedience to the counsels and imaginations of their evil hearts, who went continually backward, and not forward; for says the Lord through the prophet, "this thing commanded I them, saying, obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people, and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well with you." But stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart, they continue to offer their vain oblations and sacrifice to idols; rejecting the wholesome and life-giving counsels of the most high God, until forbearance, perhaps ceasing to be a virtue, calls forth the indignation of his fury upon them. "For thou hast forsaken me, saith the Lord; thou art gone backward and not forward; therefore will I stretch out my hand against thee, and destroy thee. I am weary with repenting." No wonder this pathetic exclamation: "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered you together, as a hen doth her brood under her wings, but ye would not!" Therefore vengeance criteth and speaketh not.

Is not this startling intelligence, uttered by holy men of old, through the inspiration of the eternal God, prospective prophetic, or is it not pertinently applicable to us in this highly favored age of the nineteenth century, who profess to have received Christ as the true Messiah, that was promised, and that we through him might live eternally? Upon the broad and comprehensive platform, outside of nearly the christian world stands united. Upon this one great fundamental truth we might all take the hand of fellowship, and glory in a united faith. But this is not all. All things now being made perfect through Christ, he is delegated with all power in heaven and on earth; he has become the author of eternal salvation to all who obey him. "By the authority invested in me, I have instituted a redemptive plan of salvation: and my apostles have I given instructions, and commissioned them to go into all the world and preach my gospel—and my other—to every creature: baptizing them in accordance with my formula, as laid down in my commission; teaching them to observe all things that I have commanded you; but do not teach for my doctrine the commandments of men." Here is the point of divergence, and separation. Right here immaterialism gains the ascendancy: so we think, relying upon God's great attributes of love and mercy, we will modify the way a little; we will insert some new planks in the platform of redemptive grace. Some of the timber is too knotty; it does not suit the progressive spirit of the age. Its surface is a little too rough: we'll pull it out and insert another more inviting one, that will be more in harmony with this fastidious taste of a discriminating world, who delight in worshiping and serving the creature more than the Creator, thereby changing "the truth of God into a lie," not giving the significance he has ordained. God grant that the prophetic language of Jeremiah may be doubly instilled into our hearts: that we may appreciate its vital significance. Let all who profess to have taken upon themselves the whole armor of God, and have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine once delivered to the saints, for our instruction in righteousness and true holiness, stand in the way of those who, through indifference, to the first principles of the doctrines of Christ, dissent from them, and teach others more palliating to the carnal mind, less humble in their attributes, and more likely in their saving efficacy; and while doing this pray we not never offer to stand in the ways of the Lord, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way and walk therein, that we may find rest for our souls. And having sought peace and found it through a crucified Redeemer, redoubling toward the edification and redemption of our souls; may we stand in the gate of the Lord's house, and proclaim there this, and say: "Hear ye the word of the Lord, all ye of Judah, that seek to enter in at these gates to worship the Lord." "enter ye in at the strait gate, for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat. Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of Heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven." "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me." "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. And as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do." "If ye love me keep my commandments. He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me."

This, then, is the evidence of the genuineness of that love we profess toward God: implicit faith, in obedience to his holy demands and precepts—that we do virtually love him in the sense he has required it. He has made this a test of our fidelity toward him, that we may secure his friendship, which should be the highest aspiration of heaven. Whilst misplaced confidence in man has ruined many, implicit confidence in God, acting in pure fealty to his laws and ordinances, has never failed in receiving reciprocation in its fullest, saving sense. The nearer we approach him, the more fully we realize the fact that he is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother, confirming and sanctifying his truth to our advancement in the divine life. "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." Stand in his ways; for "all his ways are ways of pleasantness, and all his paths are paths of peace." "His word is a lamp to our feet, and a light to our path," to guide us into that straight and narrow way that leadeth to everlasting life. But we must not diverge to the right nor the left, but stand in the ways, see and ask for the old paths in which our sainted ancestors have trod; which we have every reason to believe was the good way that led them safely into that haven of eternal rest, prepared for all who love and serve him faithfully, by walking blamelessly in all the laws and ordinances of the Lord; who stand in the ways and proclaim the great, fundamental principles pertaining to Christ's kingdom, accept of his redeemership, with all the saving efficacies resulting from the perfecting of all things in him. Bow in humble submission to the divine authority invested in him, by virtue of which, he has become the author of eternal salvation to all who obey him. Hearken to the voice of the trumpeters, set as watchmen upon the tower of Zion to proclaim the acceptable word of the Lord, who shun not to declare his whole counsel; but be careful not to hearken unto the uncertain sound of those who lie in wait to deceive by calling your unconscious souls into uncertain security, by ignoring many of the essentialities necessary to secure your salvation. Seek your peace through the merits and mediation of a Crucified Redeemer. It is the way, the truth, and the life; and in him is no darkness at all. He comes to you in this sublimely inviting language: "Come unto me, all ye that are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, and ye shall find rest for your souls." My dear, unconverted friend, let me assure you from the earnest convictions of my heart, that there is no spiritual rest outside of Christ. The fleeting delusions of this world are all subject to decay, and will not stand the test when you are called upon to pass over the Jordan of death. But the hydra-headed monster of sin and iniquity, will raise his formidable dimensions in the way between you and your eternal deliverance, giving you a foretaste of the interminable woes that await you in the depths of irretrievable ruin. Oh! then, will you not come to Christ, and live? Ask him to direct you in the old paths, marked out in his redemptive plan of salvation; to endow you with meek and submissive spirits, that may lead you into humble and implicit obedience to all his holy and righteous demands. Accept in faith all the saving efficacies he has instituted for your redemption, in their fullest and most significant sense; that they may be made to subserve to the edification and eternal salvation of your souls. "Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, wherein is the good way;" and when you get therein, walk circumspectly, and ye shall surely find rest for yur souls. P. S. NEWCOMER

Love is the essence of Divine law

For the Companion.

"Love thy Neighbor."

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Matt. 22:39.

This is only one, out of many verses in the Bible, which teach us to love every body. But some will ask, "how can we love every body?" We don't know every body, and besides, of those we do know, some are good, and kind, and pleasant: and we do love them, of course: but others are ugly and hateful, and we cannot possibly love such."

There are two kinds of love: one is the affection which we feel for our relations and particular friends; the other is a feeling of kindness and good will toward all men. There should be no one of whom we could not pleasantly think. There should be no one for whom we would not, if we had the opportunity, do a favor. This kind of love is called charity, and is beautifully described in the thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians. It is the rule of mind which forbids all anger, all resentment of injuries, all disgust and contempt for those less favored than ourselves; it forbids all envy of others when they have anything we have not; all pride and ostentation, when we have things which others have not. It forbids selfishness, a determination to have our own way, and a desire to get and keep every thing we can. It makes us generous, gentle, forbearing, patient, humble, and self-denying. Oh, it is a blessed state to be in!

Benevolence is like a sweet and healthful atmosphere; full of the delicious perfume of flowers, and of all that is harmonious and delightful. It is God's sunshine streaming down from heaven; filling us with joy and peace, and blessing every body who comes within reach of the celestial influence. It is like the music of the angels: low, and sweet, and beautiful.

To have this love is to be like God; for "God is love." To have this love is to have heaven begun in our hearts below. This love in our hearts is the very best title to those mansions of rest, where all the blessed angels and redeemed spirits move forever in perfect harmony.

Brethren, let us pray that this love may be shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost. Some may ask, "Can we love wicked people?" Why you. Dont not God love sinners? We can find many things in you they are wicked. We can pity them because they are unhappy; for wicked people are always miserable unhappy. We can work them to become good, so that they may enjoy all that a good God has provided for their happiness: and that will make us anxious to pray for them, and so help them in every way we can, to become better.

Do you not think this is a good deal better than standing all from wicked people, and hating and despising them? Do you not think it will make ourselves much happier? Yes, that is the way God feels. It was that love that made him willing to give his dearly beloved son to die for sinners. It is this that makes him so patient, and so long-suffering toward us: and it is this infinite perfect love, which makes him so supremely happy.

Oh! let us try to be like God, and we shall be always happy ourselves, and shall make all around happy also.

How to Prevent a Divorce.

When the senior John Trumbull was Governor of Connecticut, a gentleman called at his house requesting to see His Excellency in private. Accordingly he was shown into his sanctum sanctorum; and the Governor came forward to meet Squire W., saying, Good morning, sir; I am glad to see you." Squire W. returned the salutation, adding as he did so, "I have called on a very unpleasant errand, sir, and want your advice. My wife and I do not live happily together, and I have been thinking of getting a divorce. What do you advise, sir?"

The governor sat a few moments in deep thought; then turning to Squire W., said, "How did you treat Mrs. W. when you were courting her? and how did you feel toward her at the time of her marriage?" Squire W. replied, "I treated her as kindly as I could, for I loved her dearly at that time."

"Well, sir," said the Governor, "go you home and court her now just as you did then, and love her as when you married her. Do this in the fear of God for one year, and then call on me again." The Governor then said, "Let us pray." They bowed in prayer and separated. When a year had passed away, Squire W. called again to see the Governor, and grasping his hand, said: "I have called, sir, to thank you for the advice you gave me, and to tell you that my wife and I are as happy as when we were first married. I cannot be grateful enough for your good counsel."

"I am glad to hear it, Mr. W., and I hope that you will continue to court your wife as long as you live."

The result was that Squire W. and his wife lived happily together to the end of their married life. Let those who are thinking of separation in these days "go and do likewise."

"Unto Whom Much is Given," &c.

I have seen Laura Bridgman, whom God sent into this world without sight, hearing, or the power of speech. She could see nothing, hear nothing, ask nothing. To her the very thunder has ever been silence, and the sun blackness. The tips of her fingers, and the palms of her hands have been her eyes and tongue. Yet, that poor, sickly girl knows much of the world, and language, and numbers; of human relationship and passions; of what is, has been, shall be, and should be; of sin, and death, and the grave; of God, and Jesus, and Heaven. And all this has gone through the poor child's slender fingers, darkly feeling the fingers of another; and thus she tells her hopes, and fears, and sorrows. And if she thus grasping so blindly for the Saviour, finds him, and rests her weak hands on his lowly head—that blessed head, that leans lowly enough even for this—oh how will she rise up in judgment, Matt. 12. 41—42, and condemn, with utter overwhelming, you, O, sinner! upon whose very sense is pouring the knowledge of God, while your eyes read his holy word, and your ears hear a thousand times over those tidings of great joy, even a glorious gospel of a blessed God.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. 6.

PASSOVER.

The attentive reader has observed that we are also treating the feast of unleavened bread under the head of Passover. This is done, not because they are in reality the same, but because they meet in point of time, and because the feast of unleavened bread is sometimes "called the Passover." "Now the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover." Luke 22: 1. "In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, ye shall have the passover, a feast of seven days: unleavened bread shall be eaten." Ezek 45: 21.

It is proper, in this connection, to notice that the law relating to the future observance of the Passover was, after its first appointment, somewhat changed; but this change related principally to the places in which the passover should be sacrificed and eaten, and was not commanded until a short time before the Israelites entered the promised land.

In Num. 9: 1, 3, we read: "And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the first month of the second year after they were come out of the Land of Egypt, saying, let the children of Israel also keep the Passover at his appointed season. In the fourteenth day of this month, at even, ye shall keep it in his appointed season: according to all the rites of it, and according to all the the ceremonies thereof, shall ye keep it." Here we observe no change. But "there were certain men, who were defiled by the dead body of a man, that they could not keep the passover on that day; and they came before Moses and Aaron on that day. And those men said unto him, we are defiled by the dead body of a man, wherefore are we kept back, that we may not offer an offering of the Lord in his appointed season among the children of Israel? And Moses said unto them, stand still, and I will hear what the Lord will command concerning you. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, speak unto the children of Israel, saying, if any man of you, or of your posterity, shall be unclean by reason of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, yet he shall keep the passover unto the Lord. The fourteenth day of the second month, at even, they shall keep it, and eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs. They shall leave none of it unto the morning, nor break any bone of it: according to all the ordinances of the passover they shall keep it. But the man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbeareth to keep the passover, even the same soul shall be cut off from among his people: because he brought not the offering of the Lord in his appointed season, that man shall bear his sin. And if a stranger shall sojourn among you, and will keep the passover unto the Lord, according to the ordinance of the passover, and according to the manner thereof, so shall he do: ye shall have one ordinance, both for the stranger, and for him that was born in the land." Num. 9: 6–14.

From the foregoing we learn that persons, who were unclean or in a journey at the proper time for observing the Passover, were commanded to keep it on "the fourteenth day of the second month at even." This is all the difference from the original appointment that is noticeable in this connection. But in the fortieth year of their wanderings, on the first day of the eleventh month, when Moses delivered his long farewell address—recapitulated the law, and delivered a written copy of the law to be deposited in the Ark, in reference to the future observance of the passover, he used the following language, found in Deut 16: 1–8: "Observe the month of Abib and keep the passover unto the Lord thy God: for in the month of Abib the Lord thy God brought thee forth out of Egypt by night.—Thou shalt therefore sacrifice the passover unto the Lord thy God, of the flock and the herd, in the place which the Lord shall choose to place his name there. Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it: seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith, even the bread of affliction; for thou camest forth out of the land of Egypt in haste: that thou mayest remember the day when thou camest forth out of the land of Egypt all the days of thy life. And there shall be no leavened bread seen with thee in all thy coasts seven days; neither shall there anything of the flesh, which thou sacrificedst the first day at even, remain all night until the morning.—Thou mayest not sacrifice the passover within any of thy gates, which the Lord thy God giveth thee; but at the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place his name in, there thou shalt sacrifice the passover at even, at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt. And thou shalt roast and eat it in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose: and thou shalt turn in the morning, and go unto thy tents. Six days thou shalt eat unleavened bread: and on the seventh day shall be a solemn assembly to the Lord thy God: thou shalt do no work therein."

From the foregoing it is very clear that the time for celebrating the Passover was to remain precisely the same as that first appointed; but there was to be a change in regard to the place for sacrificing, and for eating the Passover. Two points, at this juncture, call for special attention. 1. What is meant by "the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place his name in"? 2. What is to be understood by the phrase which the Lord thy God shall choose"? Some suppose that both clauses refer to the same place, and therefore contend that the Passover was to be both slain and eaten at the temple. This is a sad mistake, and leads to seriously erroneous conclusions. There is as much difference between "the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place his name in," and "the place which the Lord thy God shall choose" as there is between the temple and Jerusalem; which shall now be satisfactorily proven.

In Deut. 12: 10, 11, we read: "But when ye go over Jordan, and dwell in the land which the Lord your God giveth you to inherit, and when he giveth you rest from all your enemies round about, so that ye dwell in safety; then there shall be a place which the Lord your God shall choose to cause his name to dwell there; thither shall ye bring all that I command you." That this place was not to be chosen as soon as they should cross the Jordan, is evident from the expression, "when he giveth you rest from all your enemies round about." After they had crossed over Jordan, at Shiloh, about twenty-five miles north of Jerusalem, Joshua divided western Canaan to the nine tribes and a half. Here, also, he fixed the tabernacle of God, and it remained here more than three hundred years. We may conclude from this fact, that Shiloh was the place which the Lord chose at first; but because of their wickedness it was rejected, as it is said by the prophet Jeremiah: "But go ye now unto my place which was in Shiloh, where I set my name at the first, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel." Jer. 7: 12. In 1 Sam., 4th chapter, we have an account of the battle between the Hebrews and Philistines, when the former were defeated, and the "ark of God" was taken, and the Lord "forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which he placed among men." Ps. 78: 60.

We pass on to the time of King David. When he had rest from his enemies, he purposed in his heart to build a house for the name of the Lord—"a house of rest for the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and for the footstool of our God, and he made ready for the building." But God said unto him: "Thou shalt not build a house for my name, because thou hast been a man of war and hast shed blood." "When thy days be fulfilled and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, * * * he shall build a house for my name." "Solomon thy son, he shall build my house and my courts." (Compare 1 Chron. 28: 1—6 with 2 Sam. 7: 1—13.) David "died in a good old age, full of days, riches, and honor; and Solomon his son reigned in his stead." (Chron. 29: 28.)

Soon after Solomon succeeded to the throne of his father, he said to Hiram, king of Tyre: "Thou knowest how that David my father could not build a house unto the name of the Lord his God, for the wars which were about him on every side, until the Lord put them under the soles of his feet. But now the Lord my God hath given me rest on every side, so that there is neither adversary nor evil occurrent. And, behold, I purpose to build a house unto the name of the Lord my God, as the Lord spake unto David my father, saying, thy son, whom I will set upon thy throne in thy room, he shall build a house unto my name."

Solomon built the house—the temple, and he solemnly dedicated it to the Lord. 1 Kings 8. He built it "for the name of the Lord God of Israel." 1 Ki. 8: 20. The house was called by the name of the Lord. (Ver. 43.) The Lord said: "My name shall be there." (Ver. 29.) The house was built in the place—"the city"—which the Lord had chosen; for Solomon said: "If thy people shall go out to battle against their enemies, whithersoever thou shalt send them, and shall pray unto the Lord toward the city which thou hast chosen, and toward the house that I have built for thy name." Vers. 44, 48.

After the dedication of the temple the Lord appeared to Solomon, and said to him: "I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication, that thou hast made before me: I have hallowed this house, which thou hast built, to put my name there forever; and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually." 1 Kings, 9: 3. It is very clear, therefore, that the place which the Lord chose—chose to place his name there—was the city which he chose—the city of Jerusalem; but the place which he chose to place his name in, was the temple—the house of the Lord.

The command in reference to the place for sacrificing the passover, was: "At the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place his name in;" but the temple was the place the Lord chose to place his name in; therefore at the Temple was the place to sacrifice the Passover. But they were commanded to roast and eat it in the place which the Lord should choose; and, as Jerusalem was the place—the city which the Lord chose, Jerusalem was the place in which to roast and eat the Passover.

The time for the observance of the Passover remained the same; and we have no intimation in the law, that the manner of keeping the Passover was to undergo any material change. The command was: "according to all the rites of it, and according to all the ceremonies thereof, shall ye keep it;" and as there is no command, or grant, to dismiss any of its rites or ceremonies, it is evident that no change was intended, except what would naturally and necessarily follow from the place in which the Passover was to be kept: this might affect the selecting of the victims, and the disposing of the blood, &c. It is also to be observed that only the males were bound by the law to keep the Passover; and this would necessarily affect the grouping into companies. "Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall choose: in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks and in the feast of tabernacles." Deut. 16: 16. Ex. 23: 14—17; 34: 23.—For a particular account of the ceremonies during the feast of unleavened bread, see Lev. 23: 9—14.

Our Affliction.

For the past six to eight weeks we have been more brashy than usual; and during the past week were altogether laid up, and since our last paper have suffered severely. The family becoming alarmed, called in the physician, who told us there was nothing alarming about the case: only worn out, over-worked, must have some rest. Accordingly we were commanded to abstain from mental labor, until we were strong enough to bear it. At present we feel quite well, nevertheless we are still under restraint, both from within and without. Next week we hope to take the editorial chair again.

Visit to Maryland.

Under the blessing of God we expect to meet the brethren and friends of Maryland during the present month. Our arrangements are to arrive at Hagerstown on Friday evening, February 17th, and to return to Waynesboro, Pa., by Saturday evening, Mar. 4th, where we remain over Sunday, and then return home. Elder Graybill Myers will be our leader, and if we are at all able to travel, we shall make the trip, by the recommendation of our physician, though we should not be able to preach. We can see our brethren, and they us, and encourage one another, and make acquaintances, which they and we have long desired.

Elders J. H. Wolf, and Andrew Cost, will receive applications and make the appointments so as to give the best satisfaction to the brethren, and in accordance with the above outline. Conveyance should be furnished for brother Myers, as he is now obliged to use a crutch and a cane. For ourself we ask especially, protection from cold and wet.

Brethren and sisters will you ask the Lord to help this projected visit of love? Do.

Almanacs.

All who have Almanacs on hand, and not paid for, will please return to us all they think they will not have sale for, as soon as possible. They will be needed here.

Answers to Correspondents.

John Fritz. You have a credit by 75 cts about the time referred to. We will send the Companion to H. E., till Vol. 7, No. 11.

Adam Hollinger. The money you speak of is all acknowledged in the list of moneys received. Did the Hymn Books not come to hand?

D. Hiser. Debate on Immersion was sent Jan. 13th. Hope it has come to your hand ere this.

J. H. Worth. The money came all right.

George Wolfe. We mailed two, Almanacs to S. Broadhurst, on the 4th of Oct. which leads us to suppose that your favor came to hand. We will send the Hymn Book and also the C. F. C. for 1871 to S. C. and charge you with the balance.

Alma M Cronse. All right now, we believe: the Post Office Order, came to hand.

Lewis M. Kob. The money order was received, and we are now sending the C. F. C. as requested.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of Church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writers must send in their articles as early as possible, in order to secure a place in the following issue. Essential communications must be written legibly, and concisely. All communications intended for publication should be written on one side of the sheet only.

Brother Henry: By your permission, I will try and give your readers a sketch of a visit to the church in Clarion.

On the evening of the 6th of January, in company with brother Samuel Brallier, took the cars at Johnstown for Etnaville, arriving at the latter place about 7 o'clock p. m. Put up at the Everet House for the night. After being accommodated with supper, bed and breakfast, early the next morning we took the train for Alleghany Junction, where we arrived about eight o'clock. After waiting a few minutes, we took a seat in the cars on the Alleghany Valley Rail Road for Emlenton in Venango co., arriving about noon. After waiting a few minutes at the station, we started for the house of brother Harmon Snyder, who lives in Clarion co., where we arrived about 2 o'clock. After taking dinner, we went to brother Joseph Disler's; remained with him and family over the night. Early next morning, we took a seat with brother Disler in his sled, for Easton, where we had a meeting in a school house. After meeting we took dinner with friend Veters, and family. From here, brother Disler took us to Joseph Wood's: meeting in a school house in the evening. After meeting, we went home with friend Wood. Next morning we went to brother George Shirley's. Meeting in the evening at the Brethren's new meeting house. After meeting, went home with brother George Wood, a worthy Minister among the brethren, in the Clarion church.

By conversation, we learned that brother George has a great deal of work to do in the ministry, only having one assistant, and he living in the extreme end of the congregation, therefore we ask of the ministering brethren, east and west, to remember the church at Clarion; for the fact is, the labor is great, and the laborers are few.

Next evening, brother Wood took us in his sled to the meeting-house [illegible], where we met the congregation the second time. After meeting, we went home with brother Shively. Next evening, meeting at the same place, which was our last meeting in that neighborhood. Next morning brother Shively took us in his sled to brother Harmon Snyder's. Meeting in the evening in the German Reformed meeting-house. Stayed all night with brother Snyder. In the morning visited brother Samuel Eshleman and family. Brother Samuel's companion is confined to her room, and most of the time to her bed, but seems to be satisfied with her lot.—Before taking our leave of the family, we were requested to have a season of prayer, upon which a chapter of scripture was read, and a sweet communion in prayer was held. After this we took our last leave of the family, probably for the last time in this world, went to brother Snyder's, took a seat in his spring wagon and went to the Methodist church, near brother Disler's, in Venango co., where we had our last meeting with the brethren and sisters of the church at Clarion. The meetings were well attended, with good order, good attention, and we hope with good effect.

After bidding the brethren and sisters farewell, we started for home: stopped with brother Samuel Knaus and family for the night. Next day brother Knaus took us to Emlenton, where we took the cars for home, at which place we arrived about ten o'clock p. m., and found our families well, for which God be praised.

Dear Companion:—After employing a hard & laborious week, with our Compass and carpenter tools, and by which we obtain our food and raiment; still awaiting your arrival, but alas! the fleet wings of time are rolling us on to the Judgment, and without seeing the friendly columns of the second number Jan. 1871. But we are assured you will come; we know you have never failed yet; we know that you are a constant friend to lovers of truth; and feel assured that you would have been with us, unless an accident had happened you, or some such fiend violently stopped you on the way.—So we will not find fault with you but wait patiently your arrival.

This morning finds us blessed with the many mercies of God in sparing our unprofitable lives; and putting us in possession of a meditative thought, (though weak it may be,) upon the Lord's day, the first day of the week, which should be kept holy and in memory of the resurrection of the son of God; and in memory of the great sabbath of rest in eternity beyond the grave.

Great God this sacred day of thine
Devoted to the Soul's exalted powers;
Gladly I now to thee resign
These solemn consecrated hours.
O may my soul adoring own
The grace that calls me to thy throne.

Almighty God, thy piercing eye
Can every secret thought explore;
May every power my bosom fly,
And, where that all intruder move,
O may thy grace my spirit move,
And fix my mind on heavenly above.

The Spirit's powerful aid request,
And bless the word with its divine
Engage the ear, and warm the heart,
Then shall the day indeed be thine.
Then shall my soul along with thine
The grace that calls me to thy throne.

ANDREW STRICKLER.

Brother Henry:—I hope through the Companion to encourage the brethren and sisters throughout the brotherhood, by telling of Zion's borders being extended, and her walls strengthened.

A request was sent to brother John Nicholson, by this arm of the church, that he would pay us a visit, which was complied with. He arrived here on the last night of the old year, and preached one night in the little village of Oakland. Then in the Brethren's church near by, where he continued to preach night after night, for two weeks, with great zeal, to a large and attentive congregation, and we were made to rejoice to see nine precious souls constrained to forsake their unrighteous thoughts, and turn to the Lord who would have mercy, and to our God who abundantly pardons; for the Lord has said through his prophets that he would pour out his spirit upon us, and would make known his words amongst us; and I think we can truly say that he has verified his promise to us through our beloved brother in the Lord, who has preached to us in its purity the Gospel of God's dear Son, which we trust has left many good impressions, and shall be the means of great and lasting good: for we think it has been seed sown in good ground, which will yet spring up and bear fruit to the honor and glory of God.

Our beloved brother has our prayers and the well-wishes of the church in general; hoping that he may yet accomplish great good in the work, and in the resurrection morning may appear with rejoicing, bringing many sheaves with him, which may add many stars to his crown.

Brother Holsinger: Having recently become a reader of your paper, I find that your columns are open for contributions, and discussions to some extent, at least. We do not purpose entering into any controversy with any one, but would express our satisfaction with your paper thus far, especially as it is anti-tobacco, and anti on all subjects calculated to impede the progress of true holiness, and vital godliness in the Brotherhood, and in the world. This is right, and, dear brother, falter not in your undertaking, until the desire of your heart is fully realized. But I am digressing from my object. I took up my pen to give you some church news.

I left our home on the morning of the 2nd, of Dec., to visit brother Calvert's congregation, for the purpose of holding a few meetings. The meeting had commenced before we arrived. The people were attentive and patient, for the accommodations were not the best. The place of holding the meeting, was a small school-house, and most of the time densely crowded. But the Lord was with his people. Their hearts were warmed with his love. The word preached was blessed to the converting of souls. The meetings continued about one week. There were twenty-two applicants for reception into the church, two of which were not recieved, for reasons known to the church.

The church was much built up; many hearts were made to rejoice in seeing their children come to Christ, and be made to obey his holy commandments. For which object let us all continue to labor and to pray.

Your unworthy brother in Christ.

Dear Brethren [illegible]: Having a little leisure, I will give a short report of my visit so far. Arrived at Hummelstown, Dauphin county Pa., about 2.20 P M., on the 19th, was met by brother Abraham Belsbaugh, and conveyed to Spring Creek Meeting-house; where we had three meetings: attendance small. Thence conveyed, by Elder Jacob Hollinger, to the Conawago Meeting-house. Also three meetings here: attendance good here, except the first night, which was owing to heavy rain. Thence conveyed, by brother Joshua Hoffard, to the Annville Meeting house, Lebanon county. Snowing all day: quite an unpleasant trip. This evening had but a small congregation: but the two succeeding meetings were well attended and quite interesting. The forgoing nine meetings were in the Spring Creek branch—Elder Hollinger's district. The members generally enjoy good health, and are zealous in the one thing needful. I enjoyed myself very much in sharing in their kindness and hospitality; and enjoyed good health, too, since I left home, only yesterday I took a spell of headache, owing, I suppose, to having taken cold on Monday, travelling some 13 miles with the wind and snow right in the face; but to-day I feel quite well again. I expect to be conveyed by brother Samuel Wiphil, this afternoon, to Mastersonville, Lancaster county.

Daniel M. Holsinger.

To all who may see this: Greetings.

Brethren in Christ: I see my name and address in the list of ministers, in the Brethren's Almanac; and as I do not wish to be considered what I am not, nor desire to be, I desire to give notice that that report is incorrect. My office is of an humbler kind. But would say, (since none of our ministers are reported in said list) that if any brother should come in those parts, and call on me, (which such visit I shall be received with welcome, and kindly greeted as many can testify. And should any to long be directed to me, for our address here to be my residence are as then [illegible] disposal, and I will see that it is attended to, at least, until they and their addresses are properly reported.

Brother Holsinger: Please ask Brethren's Periodicals to copy this correction. It is of importance; and as the error is yours, I hope you will see to it, to be corrected as much as possible.

Brother H. R. Holsinger:—I have been a subscriber for the Companion for one year; which, I presume, has very nearly expired. I received a prospectus to solicit subscribers, and have obtained five, including myself, for the Companion, and two for the Youth, as you will see indicated in the list. As your valuable paper had never been introduced in this part of God's moral vineyard, and in consequence of there being but few brethren and sisters in this neighborhood, you will observe I have not got very much territory to work in, unless I can obtain some that are not brethren; of which I obtained one. I have come to the conclusion, let what may be introduced into a community, people must become acquainted with it, before we can expect a large circulation. so I think it is in regard to the Companion. After it has once been fairly introduced, and the people become acquainted with its designs, and the doctrine it teaches, there will be no trouble to obtain subscribers.

W. W. Hoover.

Brother Henry: Since there is war declared, and I stand off and am looking on, it is a query in my mind whether I am justifiable without helping a little; for since I was a slave and am now liberated, I feel like giving my experience, while in bondage, or under the influence of tobacco. It is over two years since I quit the use of it. I can now go to bed and rest, without pain, where before, when a slave, I had to shift my head from side to side to find ease, and was full of misery, all through my body.

As I can do no fighting and as there is some expense connected with every war, therefore I send you nine names and $18.00, for your valuable paper, for which I suppose I would be entitled to a [illegible] we see that you have such able officers under you.

We feel encouraged since brother Belshaugh has made another move on the enemy's right wing, which is encouraging to the opposite party.

Written in love to the cause and the brethren in bondage to the world.

Negligence of Duty.

Dear Brother Henry: I feel like dropping a few thoughts for the Companion. Perhaps it may do some good; if not, I hope it will do no harm. Dear brethren and sisters, my heart has often been made sorry to see our dear brethren and sisters so negligent of that privilege and duty that we owe to God, our Heavenly Father, that devolves upon the followers of Christ, to assemble ourselves for the worship of God. We often see our dear brethren and sisters staying at home when there is preaching close by, and we fear they have no real excuse. But we sometimes hear them say, it is too cold, sometimes too far, sometimes too hot, or the weather too unfavorable, or we have not got time. Oh! dear brethren and sisters, let us be more earnest in the cause of our profession, and serve our God more and more; for the time will come, when he will call for us to leave the shores of mortality; then we will have no excuse to make. But we often see our dear brethren and sisters engaged in the things that pertain to this world. We see them going to market, through cold or heat, rain or snow, early and late, perhaps in order to get the highest prices — These things are carnal. We sometimes hear it said by the brethren and sisters, "preaching lasts too long." Oh! dear brethren and sisters, do we get tired of the worship of God in a few hours? I have often thought if we were so carnal that we could not sit under the sound of the Gospel more than one or two hours at a time, how would we be, if we would be so happy as to get to Heaven? Could we be satisfied in the immediate presence of him whom we have not seen? Oh brethren and sisters, let us not be weary in well doing; and not be so easily provoked, when our poor ministers have to stand to declare the word of God to a dying world. And when they are led by the Spirit of God they perhaps are not under their own control. So let us not neglect the assembling of ourselves, as the manner of some is, but hold out faithful to the end is the prayer of you unworthy brother.

A Letter

FROM A MOTHER TO HER DAUGHTER IN THE FAR WEST.

My Dear Hettie. I often thought I would try and write something for the dear Companion, as I have been a reader of it for a long time; but feeling a delicacy to attempt, have put it off until now. I often think of you and your family, that you are so far separated from your friends by the ties of nature, and deprived of that great privilege of hearing the gospel proclaimed to you, as we do. But it filled my heart with gladness, to hear you say you could enjoy yourself very much, and also your husband, in reading your Bible and the Companion. I am glad to hear you both love to read it so well. I hope you may soon see the time that you can enjoy the pleasure of hearing the gospel preached in its purity. I knew you loved to read the Companion, that is one reason why I had it sent to you; and I want you to let your neighbors have it to read, and try to get some subscribers, as it is a good messenger. I find it as a welcome messenger in our house. The children all try to get it first, when it comes. You are no farther from the kingdom of heaven than you were here. You said you saw in the Companion what a good communion meeting we had in October in our new meeting house, and how glad you would have been to have been with us. Yes, I thought of you often during that meeting, and all other meetings of the house of worship. Yes, we miss you there, and you and the family also. We miss you; and as hymning is one of your beautiful lines you once loved to sing so much; but you are not forgotten. If you were a thousand miles farther, we still remember you both, and your two dear little ones. Oh, Hettie, try and raise those little ones up in the admonition of the Lord. Yes, I was very much affected to hear of your affliction by the ague, but be of good cheer, for it is good to be afflicted: and we know that he that lays the afflicting hand upon us and lays us low, can raise us up again if we put our trust in him. Yes we can do each other no good in our afflictions; but if we go to our Savior in a right and acceptable manner, he will hear and answer our feeble petition. Oh! amid all our afflictions and trials, temptations and sorrow, let us keep close to the Savior, and try to walk in his footsteps as near as we can. And try to live that we may dread the grave as little as we can.

We have a hope beyond the grave, that if we meet no more in this world of sorrow, we will in heaven, where parting is no more. Yes, now we are parted and scattered abroad.— We must pray for each other, and trust in the Lord.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Fayette county, W. Va., December 13th, of Scarlet Fever, VIRGINIA M. HOLIDAY, oldest daughter of brother Abel and sister —— Holiday; aged 5 years and seven days.

The subject of this notice was a remarkable little girl. Religious impressions seemed to take hold of her mind in a peculiar manner. She, upon several occasions, told her mother she wanted to be baptized. When asked why, she said because the "Good man wanted her to be." She would ask her mother when she thought she would go to heaven. Her mother would tell her when she came to die. Then she would say she wanted to die so she could go there. When taken sick she said she was going to die; and in twenty-four hours from the time she was taken sick she died. It made her smile to think she was going to die; and just before she died, she broke forth in a childish song, but in death her voice was hushed on earth. Too gentle and pure for this world of vice, so an angel from heaven, as with a mighty swoop, took the little lamb from earth, and landed it in Paradise. Weep not, Father and Mother, for little Virginia; but look up, as through God's promises, and see, you have a bright jewel in heaven—one songster in the choir throng in the celestial world. Onward move, in the path of duty, that, when your souls plume their pinions, you may mount up to that world on high, and meet with dear ones gone before.

In the Waterloo congregation, Black Hawk county, Iowa, January 19th, LEWIS P. STRAYER, son of brother Solomon and sister Harriet Strayer; aged 6 months, and 24 days. Funeral service by J. A. Murray, from 2nd, Kings, 4th, and 26th.

C. P. L. ROBERTS.

In the Big Creek Congregation, Richland Co., Ills., Jan. 15th, Sister NANCY FORNEY, daughter of brother Michael and sister Rachel Forney, aged 19 years, 2 months, and 17 days. This truly is another warning to the young, for sister Nancy, was a hearty looking young woman; not many had a better prospect of a long life, than she had.

This was the first time that brother and sister Forney, were called to see one of their family pass the pains of death. Though it seems hard, yet not many have been blest like they, to live to that age, without a death in the family. Brother MICHAEL being 67 years old the day sister Nancy died; they have also seen all their children gathered in to the fold of God but one, and we pray that he will not be long without

She united some of her companions in the church and were both buried. She left her father, and her mother, and her brothers and sisters, to her luck, and bade them farewell to meet her in glory. She had not been in the church quite one year, yet thanks be to God that she made the start when she did. She has left a bright hope for her weeping friends. They need not weep as those who have no hope, oh! what a blessed hope this is! May God help us all to prepare for heaven. Disease, was Typhoid Fever. Funeral by the writer, from Rev. 14:12, 13, to a large congregation of sympathzing friends.

J. B. ALLENWORTH.

In the Yellow Creek congregation, Bedford county Pa., Jan. 10th, sister CATHARINE SNIDER, widow of brother Samuel Snider, who died Dec. 31, 1866. She leaves 8 children, (one a member of the church) to mourn their loss. We hope their loss, which is deeply felt, is her eternal gain. Age, 55 years, 4 months, and 8 days. Funeral occasion improved by the Brethren from Hebrews 9:27, 28.

In Memory of Our Beloved Sister Umstead.

BY SUDIE M. THOMAS.

Again doth toll the funeral knell,
That doth of mortal parting tell,
And hearts are sad and drear;
Because a loved and loving one,
Has gone to rest,—her victory won—
And left us weeping here.

Oh! kindred heart, cease thou to weep,
She now enjoys that holy sleep,
Free from all toil and care
No sufferings there, no grief or pain,
Our loss is her eternal gain,
With saints and angels there.

While a sojourner here below,
She sought whence living wates flow,
And found that crystal stream,
That emenates from Jesus' throne,
And quencheth every thirsty one,
Who doth the cross esteem.

Like Mary, that dear one of old,
Her love for Jesus oft was told,
By Godly walk and fear,
And all who knew her plainly tell,
She loved her Lord and Master well,
Her Savior ever dear.

Do those who loved her, miss her here?
Let this blest thought their bosoms cheer,
Your sorrow is her joy;
For Jesus saith "those that love me,
Shall heaven and its glories see,"
Where not can bliss annoy.

Dear Brother, art thou weeping here,
The loss of thy companion dear!
Look to that bleeding Lamb;
Oh! cast on him thy every care;
He'll kindly ail thy burthens bear—
Thy griefs and sorrows calm.

No doubt have we, at parting-day
You mourn the loved one passed away,
And ponder by-gone o'er;
But let this ever comfort thee,
The saints shall all united be,
On Canaan's peaceful shore.

There loved ones meet and never part;
There Jesus calms the contrite heart,
By his omniscient love;
There by and by the just shall meet,
To worship at Immanuel's feet,
In that bright world above.

Oh! there the white robed angel throng,
Shall join the everlasting song,
Praise God the great I AM;
Until the heavenly arches ring,
With exultation to our King,
The blessed, bleeding Lamb.

Born in Sin.

We often hear it said that we are born in sin, or that we are born sinners. I fail to find the fact recorded in the word of God. I suppose the inference is drawn from Paul's writing to the Romans, (5: 19,) where he says: "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous."

The Pharisees told the man that was born blind, "thou wast altogether born in sin, and dost thou teach us? And they cast him out." But Christ told the apostles that neither this man had sinned nor his parents; showing at once that the Pharisees were wrong. Who will look at a little child, laying asleep in its cradle or on its mother's lap, when sweet innocence is beaming from its countenance and dare say there is sin there? Has not the Savior blest them, and said, "of such is the kingdom of heaven," and "except a man become as a child he cannot enter" therein? Can sin enter into heaven? No, certainly not. Children are fit subjects for heaven, and therefore are without sin—cannot be born in sin. It follows, therefore, that we are not sinners till we commit sin. We must be old enough to know the law before we can commit sin. "For sin is the transgression of the law."

About the first law to children is to obey their parents. It is first the duty, however, of the parents to "not provoke their children to anger," and to "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." As soon as children learn that it is their duty to obey their parents, and don't do it, they commit sin. As soon as they learn other duties, and fail to do them they sin more; for knowing to do good, and doing it not, is sin. It is then, after we have become sinners, that we can be made righteous through the blood of Christ. He has not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance.

It is supposed that Adam was the disobedient one, through whose disobedience many were made sinners, and Christ the obedient one, by whose obedience, many shall be made righteous. True, had Adam eaten of the tree of life, instead of the forbidden fruit, sin would never have come into the world; and very likely we neither; because it was after the transgression, that it was told Eve: "In sorrow shalt thou bring forth children." Hence we might say, that as by one man's disobedience many were born into the world, and inherited the inclination to run into sin, so by the obedience of one, (Christ,) many shall recieve remission of their sins, that they may have committed, by obeying that obedient one, and thus become righteous. JOS. L. MYERS.

Service of the Master.

Christians acknowledge Christ to be their master, and are pledged cheerfully to obey him; but sometimes find difficulty in knowing what to do. They would work in the Lord's vineyard, but do not discern any work ready for their hand. We suggest twelve paths of usefulness open to them.

1. They can persuade neglecters of the sanctuary to attend to it.

2. They can themselves be regularly present at the prayer-meetings of the church.

3. They can be teachers in the Sunday school.

4. They can converse with their impenitent neighbors and friends, on the subject of religion, and endeavor to lead them to Christ.

5. They can drop an encouraging word in the ear of their pastor.

6. As Christians, they can speak often one to another on the things of the kingdom.

7. They can visit the sick, the afflicted and widows in their affliction.

8. They can help forward the good cause of temperance and benevolent enterprises generally.

9. They can aid some worthy young man who is just [illegible] for the ministry.

10. They can [illegible] and will furnish a large Home Missionary society.

11. They can imitate Christ, and show in their daily deportment what Christ wishes them to be. It is the best preaching in the world.

12. They can subscribe and pay for several copies of a good religious pariodical and send them to some poor families who cannot afford to take it.

In these twelve ways—not to mention others—they can acceptably serve Him whose professed friends they are, and be blessings in their day and generation.

The Interpretation of a Dream.

FRAGMENT OF A LETTER TO A VERY YOUNG SISTER.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

"We have dreamed a dream, and there is no interpreter of it.—Do not interpretations belong to God? Tell me them I pray you."—Gen. 40: 8.

"The dream is certain, and the interpretation sure."—Dan. 2: 45.

The true state of man, as dominated by sin, never so distinctly and terribly reveals itself as in sleep. Reason and will, the leading gifts of Infinite to finite being, are guilty of decking the life with many a false color, which sleep strips off. The nature which has attained to a sanctity that keeps the devil out of its dreams, is "pure as God is pure." A redeemed sleep is "a consummation devoutly to be wished." We are delivered from the dominion of sin, just so far as the free play of the soul in sleep is prompted and directed by the Divine life in us. The passions, self-seeking, foul imaginations, base desires, corroding jealousies, and polluted currents of thought, which conscience, or a sense of propriety, constrain to wear a mask in the waking state, become, very often, the predominant features of our dream-life. What we would be ashamed to do, and tremble at the thought of being, in our responsible hours, is done, oftentimes, without compunction when "sin that dwelleth in us" sways his cepter over mind and member. It requires a wonderful absorption of our whole being into the Divine, while awake, to preserve our sleep from what is low and sordid and sinful. A dream that is stained with what would be criminal when awake, should make any Christ-loving soul wrestle "with strong crying and tears" for increased sanctification. The soul that can habitually bask in the Divine peace, and lave in the crystal fount of purity, in its dreams, to which the sin-hating, holiness-coveting believer aspires every hour of his waking life, has a blessed evidence that what is deepest and constitutes most truly the personality, is "hid with Christ in God."

One of the most weird and startling poetic effusions of Lord Byron, begins in this wise: "I had a dream which was not all a dream." So with yours, mine, and whose not? Something precedes every dream which enters into it, either as its origin, or giving it a marked feature; and something follows that will make us more like or unlike our dream. Few persons imagine how much they are truly themselves in their dreams, and what significance and solemnity attach to our night-visions. They help us to learn what we are better than our waking state.—Were it not for the restraints of grace and the sense of propriety, we would be as vile, as heartless, and selfish in fact, as we seem to be in our dream characters.

Your dream was indeed frightful, and is the vehicle of a solemn lesson, not only to you, but to all who may hear of it and the interpretation thereof. You "saw a dream which made you afraid, and the visions of your head troubled you." No wonder that your schoolmates trembled when you related it to them. In your dream you saw the Prince of Hell emerging from some place of obscurity, and, with dreadful aspect, attempt to seize you with his fiery trident. Not succeeding, he struck his fatal hook into the dress of your dearest schoolmate, dragging her away to his abode of darkness and woe. The tenor of the unfortunate victim, the consternation of those that escaped, the frightful mien of the devil, combined to make a scene which caused "fear to come upon you, and trembling, which made all your bones to shake, and your hair to stand up." Satan is doubtless after you with his hook. He is "the enemy of all righteousness,' and has a fiery dart for every soul, poison for every cup, a snare for every foot, an opiate for every conscience, a lure for every inclination, and a silk-covered yoke for every will. He generally hooks his captives in their dress. Your dream is not all a dream: it is a sad, fearful reality. If you interpet the visions rightly, you will perhaps miss more than one of your schoolmates whom satan has dragged away by striking his hook into their ribbons and crinoline. There are millions of fashion-slaves on earth in whose dress satan has fastened his hook, and instead of being alarmed of their perilious condition, they laugh, and dance, and carol as if their fiendish leader were conducting them to Heaven in place of Hell. In many instances no grander opportunity is presented to the old Red Dragon for plying his hook, than at church.

There he is nearest at home. There the varieties of costume which he has devised, congregate in the name religion, making his work shorter and surer, and keeping his hook ever full of those who call themselves christians, while they are the devil's puculiar property. If you see any of your schoolmates put on airs because of any article of apparel, or manifest any unaesiness in close fellowship with those whose only default is a patched or rent garment, you may rest assured that satan's hook holds them fast, that they have already made an idol of their bodily decorations, and unless they be emancipated from the bondage of pride, they will eventually be dragged into the pit "where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." There is perhaps no soul among the lost who had not satan's hook in its dress on the way to perdition. Pride in dress is one of the earliest sins. The first lofty, self-pleasing thought invites the approach of satan. The first feeling of egotism springing from personal appearance, is the entrance of the devil's hook into our dress. It is amazing that Christ-loving parents, who pray and weep much for the salvation of their children, are so reckless in the dressing of their little ones, fostering a passion, and giving it expression, which will make them the early captives of satan, and may seal them to the service of fashion till Abaddon's hook drag them to the realm of damnation. This dress-worshipping, which so often ends in the loss of the soul, is generally implanted on a mother's knee. Unintentionally they give satan the first invitation to appropriate the affections and services of their children. While the arch-fiend stands waiting with his hook, they are getting ready a place to fasten it. O be wise, mothers in Isreal, and offer not your children a play to the hook of the devil, and the horrors to which it leads! "The interpretation is sure."

I hope you will never forget your dream. A more important and impressive lesson you could not have been taught through the medium of the holy ministry. It is a stern call to that lowliness and renunciation of self which characterizes all the followers of Christ. Uniformity of dress is no more a cardinal element of Christianity than uniformity of feature is essential to human nature; but simplicity is inseparable from christian discipleship. "Holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners:" this is the character and manner of our Great High Priest. "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing: and I will receive you;" this is the counterpart in the saints. There was once an embryo devil in Heaven, for the great insurrection originated there; but no germ will be carried back to Paradise regained that can possibly be developed into opposition to God. "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's Book of Life." The adornment that fascinates the sense is the most common and fatal illusion by which satan populates the regions of dispair. For no other aberration do sinners and pseudo-christians frame so many excuses. The devil's hook is in their dress, and they would fain make us believe it is the Shepherd's crook. Let not pride tempt you to exchange sinplicity for gaudy embellishments; neither suffer simplicity to decoy you into the pride of "voluntary humility." Satan has his hook in many a plain dress, and always in a fashionable one. "Be not high-minded, but fear." "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble." "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." "Be clothed with humility." "Hate even the garment spotted by the flesh." Memorize and exemplify those comprehensive words in 1 John 2: 15, 16, 17. If you heed the Apostle's loving admonition, satan will never get his hook fast in your garments. Regard your night-vision as the voice of God, warning you to beward of the prowling foe. Keep your fingers in the print of the nails in Christ's hands and feet. If the enemy shows you his hook, show him the cross. Remember your dream and the interpretation thereof. Keep the devil's hook out of your dress.

An old divine has somewhere said: There is majesty implied in the name of God. There is an independent being in Jehovah. There is power in the Lord. There is unction in Christ. There is affinity in Emmanuel, intercession in Mediator; and help in Advocate; but there is salvation in no other name under heaven, than in Jesus.—Gallaher's Letters.

The Sinners' Call.

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock: If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Rev. 3:20.

Let us suppose a case: A father builds a beautiful, large, and convenient house, in which he expects spend his time, and enjoy the comforts and blessings of life, while sojourning in this benighted world. When furnished, it is filled with such furniture as the state of the family would seem to require from time to time. Around this stately edifice, the plants, rare shrubery, sweet scenting flowers, ornamental evergreens of every shade, and delicious fruit trees, of every variety, such as the best nurseries the world can produce. In order to give the place a still more natural and attractive appearance, he puts it into grass, to give it a garb of verdure green, and then intersects it with magnificent walks, all terminating to a focus in front of his dwelling. Lastly, but not least, he orders his architects to construct a fine embelished fence, to protect himself and his rights from the invading foes without. I would here venture to say, that such a house, thus filled within, and surrounded without with the choisests gems from the vegetable kingdom, no one would for a moment hesitate to call a paradise upon earth. The father, after toiling day and night, expending his entire means and strength, all in order to procure a timely home to spend and enjoy the remainder of his life, saw fit to give the same to his sons, that they might together share the fruits of his labors. But no sooner had the son taken possession of the place, than he, through self-conceit and independence of position, forbids the father to enter the threshold of the door, notwithstanding he stands pleading with his tottering steps and feeble limbs, for admittance. The hope and relying dependence upon his once loving son, is, in part now gone, and he is cast upon the cold charities of the world. The father may continue to plead and knock, and unless the son hears and opens the door, he may sooner or later take his final leave, and give him over to "hardness of heart and reprobacy of mind." I believe every sane man and woman would at once come to the inevitable conclusion, that, after receiving such kind treatment at the hands of a kind father, and then thrusting him out of his house without a single cause, would almost be unpardonable: It would plainly manifest a spirit of inhumanity and unkindness.

Now this is precisely the sinner's case. "Behold I stand at the door and knock," is the language of inspiration. Unconverted man and woman, do you hear the voice of Jesus? If so, please open the door of your hearts and let him in. Open your hearts freely, and invite him; yea, pray him to come and take possession of your hearts that he may set your houses in order, heal your convicted hearts, and pardon all your past offenses, which, in the course of time, by living in open rebellion against a kind God, have accumulated like a mountain of sin in your sight. What a kind friend Jesus is. Every sinner needs such a friend, and a friend in need is a friend indeed. But the misfortune is, where Jesus knocks at the sinner's heart, he is perhaps in ninety-nine out of one hundred cases, thrust away and told "Go thy way for this time, at a more convenient season I will call upon thee." He goes away, perhaps, deeply mortified, and grieved at the thought of being thus rudely treated. Oh, wretched sinner, how cruel and unkind you are to the best of friends! It may be a long time before this good friend knocks again at your heart, and thus gives you another call; or, it may be the last call on this side the cold grave and a never ending eternity.

Dear sinner, just for a moment put yourself, in a natural point of view, into a similar position. Suppose you should call at your neighbor's house, and step up to the door and knock for admission into his house, with the happy anticipation of enjoying his pleasant society, but instead of kindly opening the door, and welcoming you in, he should say, "nay, go thy way; I have not time to receive you now. I don't like your company; the society and strain of things around me affords me more gratification" &c. You would at once come to the conclusion never to call at your friend's house any more, and turn sadly away with sore disappointment. I believe every person who arrives at the age of acountability, gets at least one call, however transient his stay in this life; for God does not leave himself without a witness. Some people may get a multiplicity of calls. The question might here arise with some, how can we know when God calls? We answer, every time we are brought to a sense of our duty, or whenever we are made seriously to reflect upon God's arrangements as portrayed in the Gospel pecially asregards our final destination in the spirit world.

God calls in various ways to the sinner. He may call through the reading of his word. Men sometimes take up the Bible, and persue its sacred pages, merely for the sake of curiosity, or for argument's sake; and in this way become posted in the mild and peaceful principles of the religion of the cross. This, then, affords means for serious consideration, in private as well as public—more so in private. After having obtained a knowledge of the Bible, the mandates of high heaven do not cease to echo and re-echo upon the mind of man, until he is brought to a sense of his duty and a call is effected.

Again, God calls powerfully through the ministry. In the Savior's dying words, we have language like this: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." And the Apostle Paul, previous to his departure, gave his son Timothy his ministerial charge in these words: "Preach the word; be instant in season; out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with long suffering and doctrine." Undoubtedly the Savior knocks more frequently at the sinner's heart through the effectual preaching of the word, than in any other way. In fact, the promulgation of the Gospel and the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom can only be accomplished through the successful preaching of the word. In short, every soul that is so fortunate as to acquire a correct knowledge of the scriptures, either by reading or through the preaching of the Gospel, and feels the soothing power of the same, is, in a certain measure, called of God. But again, in the death of our fellow men the Saviour takes frequent occasion to knock loudly at the sinner's flinty heart. Perhaps a kind father or mother, brother or sister, or some other near and dear member of the family has been snatched away by death's cold, resistless hand; and what, oh! what would be my fate, if the icy hand of death had been laid upon me! The deepest emotions of the heart are stirred; and thoughts of the most serious cast pervaded the mind. At this juncture the language of the heart is, "I perish with hunger" upon these barren mountains of sin and folly.

The Savior calls in many ways, as stated before, but I forbear, and shall not particularize farther at this time; but I would say, by way of concluding, to those who are yet outside of the ark of safety—who have yet neglected that great salvation—who have not chosen that good part with Mary of old, when the power of God is manifesting itself in your midst, and the arrow of conviction is sent into your heart, and you are called, for God's sake don't resist or stifle the convicting influence of God's spirit.—If you do, you grieve the Spirit, and thus jeopardize your soul in the anticipation of heaven and its blssed associations. Let us, one and all obey God's calls; so that when we come to leave this stage of action, and cross the cold Jordan of death, we may be so unspeakably happy as to land upon the sunny banks of final deliverance, where parting shall be no more.

Who Shall Stand?

"If thou, Lord, shouldst mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand?"—Ps. 130: 3.

The Psalmist, David interrogates the Lord with a subjunctive. He realizes that, if the Lord would fully exact for all iniquity, no one could stand. When he looked around him and beheld the wickedness of his fellowman, their worship of idols, their scorn and derision of the true worshipers, he was led to believe that none could be able to stand; hence he exclaims: "If thou, Lord, shouldst mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand?"

In searching the scriptures, we find similar questions relative to our qualifications. "Thou, even thou art to be feared: and who may stand in thy sight when once thou art angry?" Ps. 76: 7. "But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? Mal. 3: 2." "For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Rev. 6: 17. Thus a few questions have been advanced in reference to who shall stand, which can easily be answered in favor of the righteous and humble followers of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. "And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" 1st Pet. 4: 18; showing unto us that it is the righteous that are saved, though scarcely, signifying through many trials and afflictions; and they are the only ones who shall be able to stand. When we look around us and behold the wickedness that is perpetrated, both in church and state, we are led to believe, that many would not be able to stand. So much dissention in church; coldness and lukewarmness in members who compose that body. If the Lord would mark their iniquity, how many would be able to stand? The man who attends the card table, or gambling room, or partakes of the maddening and intoxicating bowl, or profanes the name of his God, if the Lord would mark your iniquity, would you be able to stand? The lady who enters the ball-room to engage in the lively dance, thus destroying her health and morals, if the Lord would mark your iniquity, would you be able to stand? Those who follow every idle fashion of the world, till modesty is put to the blush, impoverishing themselves or families, if the Lord would mark your iniquities, would you be able to stand? A question we might ask one and all; if the Lord would mark our iniquities, would we be able stand? A question of great magnitude! Who can answer? If we could see all the iniquities that have been marked against us during the past year, from which we have just emerged, we would perhaps exclaim, Lord, have mercy on us, we are not able to stand. Perhaps we have not worshiped the Lord as fervently as we should; not lived as humble as becometh christians.—Perhaps we have not been prayerful enough—not administered to the wants of the poor or sick, as we should have done. Perhaps we have not loved our neighbors aright, or our God supremely. Thus when we take a retrospective view of the past year, we find that many times we have come short of our duty, which may be marked against us as iniquity, if we do not repent of it. Then let us sue for pardon, renew our covenant, and try, by the help of God, to live more devoted to him and his cause the ensuing year. Let us arouse from this lethargy of soul, gird on the whole armor of God and fight valiently the battle of the Lord. This frail body of ours may cease to have vitality long ere the close of this year; and we shall be called to give an account of our stewardship while here below. Then let us strive to live for God, and him only serve, that, when the "angel shall stand upon the sea and upon the earth and swear that time shall be no longer," we may be able to stand before the Lord and hear that welcome plaudit, "well done, thou good and faithful servant. enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

"Let your light shine," Matt. 5.15.

Light, we are aware, is a delightful medium. Its motion is quick—said to be eleven million miles in a minute. It renders other bodies visible. After God had formed the heaven and the earth, "darkness was upon the face of the deep; and the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, let there be light; and there was light. And God saw the light, that it was good; and God divided the light from the darkness. And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night." Gen 1:2-5. On the fourth day he made the Sun, Moon, and Stars, to be the means of communicating this light to our world, and all other things tending to give or receive light, as windows, eyes, candles, &c., are called lights.

The word of God, says the psalmist, "is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path."

Christ was described by Simeon, "A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel."

The passage at the head of these lines was addressed to the disciples, on the mountain and makes the followers of Jesus bear a very important part in the world's preservation; for through them light must be transmitted to the world. By their lives, by their conversation, by all their intercourse with their fellow men, they are to walk as "children of light;" and Solomon informs us that "the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." "The shining light;" Sending forth effulgent rays, that will illuminate the path around us. What benefit will a traveler, on a stormy night, derive from the lights that are shining within the dwellings, when the curtains are closely drawn? Within, all may be mirth and song; but without, the storm must beat mercilessly, and he is unconscious of the light within.

Allow me to illustrate again.

A young man in ——— hired with a farmer (a stranger to him) for the summer. Several weeks passed, and one Sabbath morning, the family prepared to go to meeting. The young man said he also would go, and to his great surprise his employer was the preacher. Did that man's light shine? Methinks it was covered with the bushel of worldly cares. We might also fear the char on that candle will eventually extinguish it, if it is not kept better trimmed.

Many have a light, but it scarcely shines in the home circle; and I fear the consequence will be in that circle, thick darkness. A lamp kept constantly burning, we all know, requires frequent filling and trimming: and how necessary that we fill our vessels daily with the oil of true grace, that God's lamp in us may be kept continually burning, and the light bright, illuminating far out over the world! What better way to illume the family circle, than by rearing an altar on which to offer morning and evening sacrifice? And if we consider God as our stay, and that from Him cometh every good and perfect gift;" if we consider Jesus the mediator of the new covenant; if we consider the saints as "children of God;" if we consider our relations to one another, our necessities, our duties, we will not neglect this important duty.

We must also allow the enemy no advantage, in our observance of the first day of the week. Although we know the old covenant has passed away, and the law of Moses is no longer binding, still, as we celebrate one day of the seven as the Lord's day, should we not render him due reverence "by refraining from doing our pleasure on his day, but call it a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and honor him not doing our own pleasure, nor speaking our own words?" And is not one seventh of our time a small portion to devote to the promotion of his cause?

The mariner, seeking the shore, looks eagerly forward to the light-house. There it stands, eight or nine stories high. The evening comes on—the lamp is lighted, and "far, far at sea, it sends its effulgence, and the waves phosphoresce and flash the brightness on. So it is our duty to shine, to kindle lights upon our features that will send light abroad, and by frequent communion with God, we become partakers of his glory; like Moses, who was with God on the mount, forty days and nights, and when he came down, we are informed the skin of his face shone.

Let us, as individuals, endeavor to put lights in the windows, that all passing by us may see, through that light, "a mansion in heaven, a crown, robe, and palm" which the Savior has gone to prepare:

> "Then on, perseveringly on, brother,
> Till from conflicts and suffering free.
> Bright angels now beckon you over the [stream;
> There's a light in the window for thee."

It is also the privilege of Zion, for her "righteousness to go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof, as a lamp that burneth. "And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness and all kings thy glory, and thou shalt be called by a new name which the mouth of the Lord shall name. Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God. I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day or night. "Ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence. Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the high-way; gather out the stones: lift up a standard for the people."

"Behold, the Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him.—And they shall call them, The holy people, the redeemed of the Lord: and thou shalt be called, Sought out, A city not forsaken." Isa 62.

Brother.

"Brother!" Beautiful word; and how pleasant when kindly spoken! How much of true love is bound up in those seven letters!

What a relationship it expresses! It is the name of him who is our equal; our father is his father; our mother is his mother. The love which cares for us cares for him: and the eyes that weep when we sorrow, weep also when he sorrows.

How doubly sanctified was that word from the lips of "Him who spake as never man spake!" What a savor of sweetness attends it in every sentence in which Jesus used it. He has given a dignity and glory to it, brighter than that given to field and flower, when the sun removes the veil of weeping clouds from before his face, and looks down in the splendor of his beauty.

Brother! Generous epithet! Every man should speak it lovingly to his fellow: but how much more the Christian! Who should utter it as he does to his brother Christian? The term is his peculiarly; God has given it to him; and will he not use it? Is the poor Christian afraid or ashamed to apply it to the rich one? is the rich one too exalted to call an humble man by so levelling and yet so sweet a title! And is it so? Children of our Father, who are going to the same glorious home—to live there together forever—refusing or neglecting to call one another by their heavenly name!

When that word from the lips of a Christian brother enters my ear, it touches my heart like holy music, and its sweet intonations are treasured up as if they were sounds by angels spoken; and I learn to love him more. It is not thus with you, brother?—Simple Speech.

Fasten your hold on Christ. Having him, though my cross were as heavy as ten mountains of iron, when he putteth his sweet shoulder under me and it, my cross is but a feather.

Adam Clarke when asked by a young preacher how to preach, replied "Go and study yourself to death and then pray yourself alive again."

"Why Stand ye Here all the Day Idle."

Is there nothing for you to do; or has no man employed you, that you sit idle by with folded hands indolently wishing and waiting for the world's best gifts? "Get thy spindle and distaff ready, and the Lord will send you flax," is an old adage full of truth. There is work everywhere, and it lies all around you—the far distant fields may seem more enchanting, and toil sweeter and the reward surer to our longing eyes, but even these thorns and thistles will choke, and noxious weeds poison the fair heritage. Since the decree: "by the sweat of thy brow shalt thou live;" man goeth forth and toileth until the evening; yes, beareth the burden and heat of the day.

The world owes us nothing, it pays as it goes, the labor of our hands feeds and clothes, and ministers to the wants of the unfortunate and destitute in our own or other lands. No one lives for himself alone—the good done here, widens in ever increasing circles until it "breaks in whispers on the other shore."

"Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate:
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

If Satan finds mischief for idle hands to do, it behooves us all to employ every moment, that little sins may not creep in and destroy the growth of years, the labor of many an anxious moment.

Whatever thou doest, do with thy might, for the Lord will accept no careless offering from the hand of indolence or indifference. First fruits alone will God receive from his creatures. Talents rightly improved and time usefully spent will in the end yield an increase, whose influence will weigh in the day of reckoning.—Then—

Tarry not toilers, the end draweth near,
The goal is before us, we've nothing to fear.
The Master will say, for the race is soon run,
Come home faithful servant, thy work is well done.

"For Charity Shall Cover the Multitude of Sins." 1 Pet. 4: 8.

Charity; what is charity? We can term it nothing more or less than love. It was nothing more than charity that moved the Father to send his only Son into the world, that we through him might be saved. It was nothing more than charity that made our Savior willing to be extended on the cross, and to suffer the ignominious death. And it was charity that caused him to rise again. And it was charity that caused the Apostle Paul, with many others to labor so earnestly in the cause of our Lord and Master, and we must acknowledge that through them a multitude of sins was covered.

And again; is it not charity that holds the church together? We think it is, and thus many sins are covered. And we might bring it nearer home to ourselves. If charity abides between neighbor and neighbor, it will cover a multitude of sins. It is charity that makes home pleasant, and if charity abides there it will cover a multitude of sins. So where charity rules, sin is covered. So dear readers let us try and have our sins covered with charity; if not we may try to cover them with sometings else.

The True Magnet.

Here is a simple illustration practically applied, and worthy to be pondered by those who would "preach not themselves, but Christ Jesus our Lord." It is from that veteran minister, John Angell James:

"The power of the magnet gains nothing from the gelder's or the graver's art; its attraction lies in itself, and is diminished by foreign accretions. So it is with the greatest of all magnets, of which Christ spake when he said: 'And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me.' We may draw men to ourselves by genius, eloquence, eccentricity; but we can draw men to Christ only by the attraction of the cross."

Never in the presence of your child make individious comparisons of its behavior with that of other children; nor present to them any human example to follow, only so far as that model follows Christ the perfect Example.

How sordid is the love of gold. The base passion is beneath even the contempt of the saving power of truth as the worldly-minded. Milton describes Mammon in heaven as failing to see Deity himself, having his eyes always fixed on its golden porches.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. 7.

PASSOVER.

In the introduction, in stating our position, we assumed, that the legal time for killing the Passover, was on the fourteenth, day of Nisan, from the ninth hour till sunset, the close of the day; and that the law required the Passover to be eaten in the night of the fifteenth day, which immediately followed the close of the fourteenth. We will now proceed to establish our position.

The command was: "And ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month; and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening," or as in the Hebrew according to the marginal reading, "between the two evenings" Ex. 12:6. The day of the month on which the Passover must be killed, is definately stated to be "the fourteenth day of the same month:" that is, of the first month, the month Abib or Nisan. In this there is no room for controversy. "In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover." Lev. 23:5. "And in the fourteenth day of the first month is the passover of the Lord." Num. 29:16. But the precise time in the fourteenth day, in which the Passover must be slain, is a point, as was shown in the introductory remarks, that is much disputed. As the fourteenth day had its beginning at sunset the close of the thirteenth day, and as it was evening after sunset, there was an evening—the evening of the night—in the beginning, of the fourteenth day; so also, there was an evening—the evening of the day—in the afternoon, the close of the fourteenth day: it is evident therefore that there were two evenings—the evening of the night and the evening of the artificial day—in each natural day. The question then arises, if the Passover was to be killed "in the evening," and if there were two evenings in each day, in which of the evenings was it to be killed? Some say, just after sunset the close of the thirteenth, in the first evening of the fourteenth day; others, just before sunset the close of the fourteenth, in the second evening of the fourteenth day. The latter is our position.

In support of this position we could quote from many good authors; but as it has already been shown that authors are divided, we do not see that the testimony of a thousand authors could be of any real service to us in disposing of this controverted point. This, however, cannot be said of ancient history, written by those who knew the facts as they existed. We therefore shall make use of the testimony of Flavius Josephus, in THE ANTIQUITIES OF THE JEWS, and in THE JEWISH WARS. The edition which we use is that published by Lippincott, Grambo & Co., Philadelphia, Pa., A. D. 1852. THE JEWISH WARS was first published about A. D. 75, and THE ANTIQUITIES OF THE JEWS, about A. D. 93.

In ANT. Vol 1, B. 3, ch. 10, §, 5, Josephus says: "In the month Xanthicus, which is by us called Nisan, and is the beginning of our year, on the 14th, day of the lunar month, when the sun is in Aries, (for in this month it was that we were delivered from bondage under the Egyptians,) the law ordained, that we should every year slay that sacrifice, which I before told you we slew when we came out of Egypt, and which was called the Passover; and so do we celebrate this passover in companies, leaving nothing of what we sacrifice till the day following. The feast of unleavened bread succeeds that of the passover, and falls on the 15th day of the month, and continues 7 days, wherein they feed on unleavened bread."

Josephus here testifies that the law ordained that they should every year slay the sacrifice of the passover "on the fourteenth day of the lunar month." When he says: "leaving nothing of what we sacrifice till the day following," he means through the night, till the next artificial day. This expression is used in the same sense in the scriptures; "And David smote them from the twilight even unto the evening of the next day." 1 Sam. 30:17. Acts. 4:3.

We will now hear what this eminent Jewish historian has to say in reference to the particular time in the fourteenth day in which they slew their sacrifices at the feast of the passover: "So these high priests, upon the coming of the feast which is called the Passover, when they slay their sacrifices from the ninth hour till the eleventh hour, but so that a company of not less than ten belong to every sacrifice, (for it is not lawful for them to feast singly by themselves,) and many of us are twenty in a company." Vol. 2, B. 6, ch. 10, §, 3. He fixes the time for the slaying of the sacrifices "from the ninth hour till the eleventh." This could not mean from the ninth hour till the eleventh of the night, or natural day; for it must be "at the going down of the sun," (Deut. 16:6.) and that would have been just so many hours after the sun had gone down; for at sunset they commenced counting the hours of the night, and of the natural day, which was reckoned from sunset to sunset. It must, therefore, mean "from the ninth hour till the eleventh" of the artificial day, or from the middle of the afternoon on, completing the service before sunset, so as to be certain to have it on the day appointed—the fourteenth day. Here is the sum of the testimony of Josephus as regards the time for killing and eating the Passover: They slew "their sacrifices from the ninth hour till the eleventh" in the end of the fourteenth day; and, as they left nothing of what they sacrificed "till the day following," that is, till the next artificial day, it is certain that they ate the passover on the night of the fifteenth, which had its beginning at sunset, the close of the fourteenth day.

We will now pass from the testimony of history, to the teachings of the Bible, and will fully establish the correctness of our position by this infallible witness.

1. The law said: "Thou shalt sacrifice the passover at even, at the going down of the sun." Deut. 16:6. This could not apply to the first even, at the commencement of the fourteenth day; for this first evening did not set in until the sun had gone down—it began at sunset; we must, therefore, of necessity, apply this to the evening in the end of the fourteenth day, "at the going down of the sun," or as the sun was going down toward the western horizon. As they were commanded to sacrifice the passover at the temple, and as many victims were required, it was necessary to begin early in the evening, even at the ninth hour; for the passover must be killed on the fourteenth day, which ended at sunset.

2. The law also said: "The whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening." It has already been stated that the marginal reading, which no doubt is the proper rendering, is, between the two evenings." This cannot mean between the two evenings" of the fourteenth day; for the first ended at midnight, and the second began at noon, or midday; no time between these two evenings could be "at the going down of the sun." In fact no part of the natural day, except the afternoon, could be "at the going down of the sun;" so it is certain that, whatever may be meant by the phrase, "between the two evenings," it must be applied to some part of the afternoon. We understand it to mean midway between the beginning of the evening of the day and the beginning of the evening of the night following: the former began at noon; the latter, at sunset; and midway between these two beginnings, would be the middle of the afternoon, or the ninth hour of the day, according to the Hebrew computation. This would be at the going down of the sun; and, indeed, right at the middle of its going down, and therefore they could with the greatest propriety call this point "between the two evenings." and speak of it as being "at the going down of the sun." So the Hebrews understood it, and so they obeyed this command, as Josephus says, "from the ninth hour till the eleventh."

It is reasonable to suppose that the phrase "between the two evenings" means about the in one place as in other. In Num. 28: 3, 4, we have the following language in reference to the continual burnt-offering: "This is the offering made by fire, which ye shall offer unto the Lord; two lambs of the first year without spot day by day, for a continual burnt-offering. The one lamb shalt thou offer in the morning, and the other lamb shalt thou offer at even." Here the marginal reading for "at even" is "between the two evenings." So far as our knowledge extends there is no difficulty in determining, the time of the evening sacrifice; and it is assigned to the middle of the after-noon—the ninth hour of the day. In connection with the offering of the evening sacrifice they made confession, and offered solemn prayer and praise to God. 1 Chron. 16: 40, 41; Ezra 9: 4, &c. On this account it came to be called "the hour of prayer;" and we read in Acts 3: 1 that "Peter and John went up together into the temple, at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour." "Between the two evenings," the time of the evening sacrifice, was the hour of prayer; but the hour of prayer was the ninth hour; therefore, "between the two evenings" was the ninth hour of the day—the middle of the afternoon. Our premises in this argument being true—and we challenge refutation—our conclusion is unavoidable and incontrovertible.

3. Although we might now leave this point, with a thorough conviction that every careful and candid reader is persuaded of the correctness of our position, that the passover was to be slain in the second evening of the fourteenth day, and consequently to be eaten on the night of the fifteenth day, yet, to place the matter beyond all doubt, we will bring forward one more argument.

It is certain that the Passover must be eaten in the night which immediately followed the killing of it. It is also equally certain that the Hebrews left Ramesses on the same night in which they ate the Passover. Both of these facts have already been clearly proven; and we do not know that any doubts are entertained upon these points. Now if we can show, as we certainly can and will, that they left Ramesses on the fifteenth day of the month, the conclusion will be inevitable that they ate the Passover on the night of the fifteenth; and if they ate the passover on the night of the fifteenth, it is absolutely certain that they killed the passover in the evening, "at the going down of the sun," in the afternoon of the fourteenth day. In Num. 33: 3, we have this conclusive scripture: "And they departed from Ramesses in the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month; on the morrow after the passover the children of Israel went out with a high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians." If this scripture does not prove that the children of Israel left Ramesses on the fifteenth day of the first month, nothing ever was proven, nor ever can be proven by scripture. But it was by night. "For in the month Abib the Lord thy God brought thee forth out of Egypt by night." Deut 16: 1. It was therefore on the night of the fifteenth day of the month. But they left Ramesses on the same night in which they ate the Passover. For this reason the command was, 'And thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in hand; and ye shall eat it in haste." They did as they were commanded; at midnight the first-born of Egypt, both of man and beast, were slain; Pharaoh rose up in the night, and called for Moses and Aaron by night and urged them to go; and as "the Egyptians were urged upon the people that they might send them out of the land in haste," they borrowed jewels of silver and gold, and raiment, and "took their dough before it was leavened, their kneading troughs being bound up in their clothes upon their shoulders," "And the children of Israel journeyed from Ramesses to Succoth." Ex. 12: 28—37. Here is the argument:—The Hebrews left Ramesses on the fifteenth day of the first month; but they left by night; therefore they left on the night of the fifteenth day. Again, they left Ramesses on the night of the fifteenth day; but they left in the same night in which they ate the passover; hence they ate the passover on the night of the fifteenth. Once more, they ate the passover on the night of the fifteenth day; but they must kill the the passover on the fourteenth day; and as they ate the passover on the night which immediately succeeded the slaying of it, it must follow as the only legitimate conclusion, that the passover must be killed in the second evening, the close of the fourteenth day, "between the two evenings," after the middle of the afternoon, at the going down of the sun; or as Josephus has it, "from the ninth hour till the eleventh hour" of the day.

Having now shown the legal time for killing and eating the Passover, we will proceed to show the legal time for the observance of the feast of unleavened bread. This was a feast of seven days; and it was instituted at the same time the Passover was. The language of institution is: "Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses; for whosoever eateth leavened bread, from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel. And in the first day there shall be an holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be an holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you." Ex. 12: 15, 16.

That it was a feast of seven days is abundantly testified:" Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread; (thou shalt eat unleavened bread seven days, as I commanded thee, in the time appointed of the month Abib: for in it thou camest out from Egypt; and none shall appear before me empty.") Ex. 23: 15. See also Ex. 13: 6, 7; 34: 18; Lev. 23: 6; Num. 28: 17; Deut. 16: 3, 8.—Many other texts might be cited, but these are deemed sufficient both as to number and perspicuity.

One prominent design of the feast of unleavened bread was, to commemorate the departure of the Hebrews from Egypt. This was clearly stated in connection with its apppointment: "And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; for in this self same day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt; therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations by an ordinance forever." Ex. 12: 17. It will be observed from an examination of this text, that the day on which they started on their long journey, is spoken of as being the day in which the Lord brought their armies out of Egypt, as though they had performed their journey in one day. The day of their departure is spoken of in the same manner in Ex. 13: 2, 4, "And Moses said unto the people, Remember this day, in which ye came out from Egypt, out of the house of bondage; for by strength of hand the Lord brought you out from this place; there shall no leavened bread be eaten. This day came ye out in the month Abib."

As of the first day of their journeying it is said: "This day came ye out," so the first day of the feast of seven days which was commemorative of their departure, is, by way of eminence, styled "the feast of unleavened bread." Hence we read in Lev. 23: 6, "And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord." It is clear, therefore, that the fifteenth day of the month was the first day of the feast of unleavened bread. As the fifteenth day set in at sunset the close of the fourteenth, the feast of seven days began at the close of the fourteenth day, and ended at the close of the twenty-first day. Therefore it is said: "In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even." Ex. 12: 18.

An Appeal.

And when an appeal is made, it is generally said; "To whom it may concern." This appeal does not particularly concern those of our readers who have paid their subscriptions in advance.

In looking over our account book, we find that there are charges entered to the amount of over fifteen hundred dollars. Well we are right glad to have that much to fall back upon. Now our appeal is this: That as much of that amount be paid as possibly can be, by the first of April, and as much sooner as convenient. Nearly all is charged to agents, and the agents cannot send the money until it is paid to them, or at least most of them cannot afford to do so. Now friends, will you not see to it that your subscription will be paid to the agent who sent your name, before the first day of April next? If you cannot pay all, pay part of it, which will help us along. If not paid by that time, we will be obliged to loan the money at a high rate of interest.

We have made this appeal in good earnest, and hope we shall not need to repeat it.

New cash subscribers will also greatly aid us in making ends meet. Back numbers furnished to January first.

Our Charity Fund.

Some time since we announced that we would keep an account of free copies sent to the poor, and those sent at reduced rates, as well as of the contributions received for that purpose. We now submit a brief statement of the account.

If brethren and sisters wish to assist us by reducing the above balance, as well as in contributing to the wants of others, there is still room on the debtor side of our book. All contributions to this fund will be published, and the donor may select his own signature. The latter five on the above list, except one, were in response to brother A. J. Correll's request, that some brother or sister pay for the paper for the sickly sister, whose name he had sent us. So it has been more than seven times paid for. We have placed it in our regular charity fund, which we hope will be satisfactory, as there are many other cases perhaps fully as needy, among those to whom the paper is being sent.

Reserved Copies.

We have opened a list of names for copies of the Companion to be reserved at the office and bound at the end of the year. The bound volume will cost about 2.25. Those wishing to enter this list will please send in their subscriptions at an early day.

Answers to Correspondents.

SAMUEL ULRICH. There is a balance of 75 cents in our favor.

M. A. F. KIRSEY. You are right.

SAMUEL CRIST. Your letter with the dollar did not come to hand, at least we have no account of it.

S. A. MOORE. No report came to this office from you. Send it along.

J. W. HARSHBERGER. We have no account of having received $1.50 from you. We do not doubt that you enclosed it, but it did not reach us. The C. F. C., is being sent to you now.

S. BOLLINGER. Send the Almanacs back to us. We will try to dispose of them.

TUNE AND HYMN BOOK. The work is progressing slowly. Will not likely be ready before June or July. There is still room for favorite tunes. Give the name of the tune, the title of the book in which it is found, the page, and the No. of the hymn to which it is suited. Send promptly, as it will not be long until the work will have been compiled.

BOOKS. We are out of several kinds of books advertised for sale. Customers will please have patience until we can secure a supply.

A. LEEDY JR. Is there an A. Miller and an A. B. Miller, at Antioch, Ind?

PHILIP BOYLE. We found all as you stated; and we hope all will be right now.

ANN E. HOKE. Thank you for the explanation. Your paper is paid for to Vol. 7, No. 37.

SARAH WEIDNER. Your Companion was addressed to Nevada, Story county, Mo.

JOHN H. MILLER. Peggy M. Teeple has paid for the Companion to No. 25; but we have no account of any order for books. When was the money sent, and how much? and what books were ordered?

PETER WOLFE. Your proposal is acceptable.

H. BEELMAN. It will receive due consideration.

LEWIS LEREW. Brown's Concordance costs 60 cents, postage prepaid.

J. J. HERSHBERGER. You sent us five dollars; how is it to be applied.

C— B—— All came in good order.

JOHN G. [illegible] The Visitors were received.

D. H. MILLER. We are square.

DAVID HILDEBRAND. You have credit by $10.00, seven, at one time three, at another. Is it right?

S. T. BOSSERMAN. J. A. Cotners time, according to books, is expired. Shall we send on?

JOHN CRIST. John Renner, at Golden city, Jefferson county, Colorado, is a subscriber to the Companion. Perhaps he could give you the desired information.

A. G. SUMMY. It was our mistake; hope all will be right now.

M. BESHOAR, Sr. There is $1.15 commission coming to you.

J. A. B. HARSHBERGER. Your name is on the list for the Youth's —— Possibly the first number was not sent. We now send it.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Dying Infidel's Sermon.

Father M., of Massachusetts, who recently died in faith, was once called to the dying bed of an aged infidel of his acquaintance. The good old man had long prayed for his old friend, but his entreaties had ever been met by the infidels arguments and scorn. As he approached the bed, he saw that his mind was in agony. The man confessed himself a sinner, and that he was not prepared to meet death.

Father M. asked him if he had prayed?

"No; I can't pray. I have continually refused mercy, and it is now refused me. I have tried to pray, but my lips will not move."

"Are you willing that I should pray for you, then, and let your heart's desire go up with my words?"

"No, you cannot pray for me; others have tried it, but could not. You may kneel, but it will be useless."

And the aged saint knelt at the bedside of the agonized sinner.—Those lips had daily moved in prayer for half a century. That tongue had daily brought the name of sinners before God's throne; but, strange to say, all his faculties of speech seemed paralyzed now. Mercy was a word he could not speak; and for the first time, prayer was impossible.

"Now," said the infidel, as Father M. rose from his knees. "I want to preach at my own funeral. When you have closed the other parts of the service, I want you to come down from the pulpit and place your two fore fingers on my lips, and say, "This soul is sealed for hell!"

"You must spare me from such a commission. It will frighten the people."

It is my dying request, and I feel that you must do it. Let others take warning by my death. I cannot excuse you."

So father M. at his funeral, after he had finished the sermon, came down from the pulpit, and, approaching the coffin, laid the tips of his fingers on those marble lips, and, with tears streaming from his eyes, stated the man's dying request, and pronounced the words;

"THIS SOUL IS SEALED FOR HELL!"

O, my reader, whether Christian or not, be admonished.

If your peace is not made with God, remember that your soul is following that infidel's and will ere long be sealed. Your lips can move in prayer now. The time may come when this, the greatest of all earthly privileges, will be in vain. Christian brother, remember that soul's—the souls of your friends, relatives and neighbors—are daily going down to hell; and no small share of responsibility is lying at your door. May God help us to feel the importance of that infidel's sermon!—Christian Observer.

Truth Exclusive.

There are truths in religion of such vital importance that departure from them must destroy the soul. The holiness that the Gospel came to foster, is the effect of truth received in the love of it. And this truth is in its own nature harmonious and one. Truth cannot contradict itself; nor in science or art can there be two opposed and warring truths.—So is it also in religion. The singleness of truth constitutes the basis of its exclusiveness. It claims for itself, exclusively and without rival, the faith and obedience of mankind: a claim that is exclusive because it is just, and that could not be consistent without requiring thus the rejection of all error. These exclusive claims are often misrepresented as involving the most odious intolerance and illiberality. But in truth there is no more a possibility of the existence of several true religions, than there is of the existence of more than one God. From the one Jehovah there can emanate but the one truth—developed indeed, in different degrees at different ages—in Judaism the bud, in Christianity the expanded flower—but essentially, and in all ages, the one unchanged and unchangeable religion, revealing for man the sinner, salvation, through an atonement and Mediator of divine appointment—Wm. R. Williams.

The World Without a Newspaper.

At a meeting of the Urban Club, Mr. G. Linnæus Banks, in the course of a most effective speech on proposing the toast of "The Press and Edward Cave," dwelt upon the debt we owe the enterprising printer of St. John's Gate, for imitating the system of Parliamentary reporting, and closed his remarks with the following startling and suggestive home thrust:

"There are people—hard-hearted, matter-of-fact people—who affect to despise both newspaper influence and newspaper writers. I should like such people to have a momentary glimpse, if it were possible, of the mere business world as it would be, if all newspaper facilities were annihilated. Extinguish all the light which the Press has shed upon the wants and interests of society; let all the information it has gathered from all parts of the world, and scattered among its readers, be forgetten; let all the intelligence it has imparted, all the enterprise it has awakened, all the ingenuity and energy it has stimulated, be cast into oblivion; and in what stage of advancement may we suppose the mercantile world would be found? Would not the unfortunate English traders fancy himself transported back into the dark ages? But if such the commercial, what then the social and moral aspect of society? Let any one reflect an instant upon the gigantic power for good or evil exercised by even one ably conducted journal, and then tell me, if you can, of any other human agency that is at all comparable to it?

Fear of Death.

Above all things, the fear of death should be valiantly combatted. "To love life without fearing death," said Hufeland, "is the only means of living happy and dying at a good old age."

People who dread death seldom attain longevity. If death presents itself to us under a repulsive and terrifying aspect, it is solely owing to our habits and prejudices having perverted our feelings. Montaigue justly said that it is darkening the room, the faces full of grief and desolation, the moaning and crying, that make death terrible. Civilization, by investing death with the most lugubrious associations that it can conjure up, has also contributed to rendering it a hideous spectre. It is the reverse with the patient. In nine cases out of ten, death is not only a relief, but almost a sense of voluptuousness. Sleep daily teaches us the reality of death.—"Sleep and are twins," said the poets of antiquity. Why, then, should we fear death when we daily invoke its brother as a friend and a consolation? "Life," said Buffon, "begins to fail long before it is utterly gone." Why, then, should we dread the last moment, when we are prepared for its advent by so many other moments of a similar character? Death is as natural as life. Both come to us in the same way, without our consciousness, without our being able to determine the event of either. No one knows the exact moment when he goes to sleep, none will know the exact moment of his death. It is certain that death is a pleasurable feeling. Lucan used to say that life would be in-supportable to man if the gods had not hidden from him the happiness he would experience in dying. Tullius Marcellinus, Francis Saurez, and the philosopher La Mettrie, all spoke of the voluptuousness of their last moments. Such are the consolations which philosophy presents to timid minds that dread death. We need not say that much higher and loftier consolations await the christian who is firm and steadfast in his faith, and has before him the prospect of ternallife.

Weise kan zum Herrn Christum.—Ein deutscher Prediger fand eines seiner Gemeinde glieder eines Tages in grosser Betrubniß. Was fehlt Bruder? frug der Prediger. Ei, der Bose war an mir, war die Antwort. Und was hat er gesagt: "Er sagt, es sei alles umsonst, daß ich Gott diene, es gabe keinen Himmel noch Hölle, keinen Heiland brauche man nicht, es sei alles lauter Einbildung und Betrug, die Bibel sei ein Fabelbuch. Da hat er mich schon heute den ganzen Tag geplagt."

"Und was hast du ihm geantwortet?"

"Geantwortet? Ich wußte daß solches nichts hilft, denn er ist mir viel zu schlau zu Argumentiren. Ich habe blos zu ihm gesagt: Gehe hin zum Herrn Christus; dann ist er davongangen."

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Holsinger; By the mercies of God, we were permitted, according to previous arrangements, to hold sweet fellowship, with our brethren and sisters in the south part of this county, on Saturday and Sunday last, and to listen to words of exhortation, and the Gospel of Christ; Brother David Wolfe being the laborer on this occasion. Three discourses were given and the eager multitude gladly listened. to the word of God. Many going their way saying within themselves. and with one another, "It was well for us to be here, and hear the truth as it is in Christ Jesus." We sincerely trust much good may yet be done in this community, and the word of God run and be glorified by many dying and dependent mortals.

I send you eight names for the Companion, each for one year, commencing Jan. 1-t. 1871. This is a sufficient evidence of its endorsement. We are here without a shepherd, save the great Shepherd of all. A visit from ministering brethren would be thankfully received. May the Lord grant that we may so live that all may be worthy to enter into the Haven of eternal rest and felicity, is my desire.

Your's in love and the hope of eternal life, through Christ our Lord. Farewell.

PETER WOLFE.

REBERSBURG, PA. }
Feb. the 1st 1871. }

My first report was mailed at Mastersonville, Lancaster county, where I arrived on the evening of the 18th of January, accompanied by brother Samuel Gibbel. In this branch Elder Philip Ziegler is the housekeeper. Here we had six meetings, mostly well attended; at four of those meetings, brother Jonas Price of Hatfield Pa., and brother William Hertzler of Dauphin county, were in attendance. On the afternoon of the 27th, we all visited the family of Elder P. Ziegler, the old sister being somewhat afflicted, so that she could not attend meeting. We had a very pleasant time—a time, I trust that will not soon be forgotten. On the afternoon of the 28th, was conveyed to the Tulpehocken branch, by brother George Bucher. Here Elder John Zug is the housekeeper. Attended four meetings in this branch; three in company with brother Solomon Seiber of Juniatta, and brother Isaac Bartow of Perry county. The weather being fair and the roads good, the meetings were well attended in this branch. Tuesday afternoon visited the family of Elder J. Zug and had quite a pleasant time. On the evening of the 30th, conveyed by brother John Witters to Myers's meeting house Lebanon county, in the Little Swatara branch. Here Elder David Markey is the housekeeper. Had three meetings here, well attended and excellent order. From there conveyed by brother Benjamin Garber to Ziegler's meeting-house, Berks county, same branch, one meeting A. M. The members generally enjoy good health, and manifest much love and christian courtesy.

My health generally has been good. Owing to having taken cold I had the headache a few days: and afterwards a hoarseness that caused labor very hard. But at this time hoarseness has nearly left me, and I still try to take courage for the future, by trusting in the promises of the Gospel.

DANIEL M. HOLSINGER.

Report.

Received of the White Oak church, Lancaster county, Pa., by the hand of Jacob Stehman, for building our church, $43,00.

Accept our most heartfelt thanks, dear brethren, for your kind remembrance of us who are struggling to plant the banner of peace here in the South. Now, dear brethren will you add your prayers to the substantial aid you sent us? The of fectual fervent prayer of the righteous man, availeth much."

If the editor of the Companion will permit us, we will state our circumstances.

We have a very healthy climate, and a good country, but devastated and impoverished by the late war. We have a little church organized, but have no place of worship of our own. Our members are poor, and to the poor we wish to preach the gospel, but without a place of worship, our efforts are crippled. Owing to these circumstances, the church held a council some time ago, and concluded to send an appeal to the various churches, where they might hope to obtain some aid. The following is a copy of the appeal:

"BELOVED BRETHREN: We, the Brethren of Oakland Congregation, Tenn., have no meeting house or other place of our own for preaching or practicing the ordinances, and being too poor to build a house without aid, and too far removed from neighboring congregations of the Brethren to avail ourselves of their churches, we look to you as instruments in God's hands to aid us in building a meeting-house for the spreading of the gospel over this part of the south.

Any aid your bounty and generosity may remit to either of the subscribers will be thankfully received.

By order of the Church.

S. Z. SHARP, Elder.
J. W. BYRNE, Deacon.

Brother Henry: I will say that our little number of brethren is still increasing slowly. Our increase, this season is eleven. One of them was buried in a channel cut out of the ice, although the ice was about six inches thick, he was very calm and cheerful; the Lord blesses his means of grace, so that cold weather is warm to those that sincerely repent. Our prospects are good for more soon. Our church appears to be at peace. JOHN J. COVER.

Brother Henry: In the C. F. C., No. 2, Queries, it is asked: "What king do we read of in the Bible, whose height was as the height of the cedars, and his strength as the oaks; yet the Lord destroyed his fruit from above, and his root from beneath?" In Amos 2:9, the Amoriteswere those people, and Sihon was king of the Amorites.

I neverhad taken the Companion until 1871. I am well pleased with it with but one exception, and that is the Tobacco. I think, brother Henry, you might fill the pages with something worth more to the dying soul, than tobacco. I don't use it myself, I am against the use and also the abuse. Some brethren will use it to extremes, while others will write to extremes, and two wrongs will never make one right. I will admit it goes hard to meet a brother with the kiss of charity, when he has his mouth, lips, and beard all bespattered with tobacco- Brethren we are to make ourselves lovely. We read in Phil. 4:8, "whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." I believe that tobacco certainly grows to be made use of in some way, for when God created the heaven and the earth, God said: "Let the earth bring forth grass,the herb yielding seed," and God "saw that it was good." Can any one give sufficient proof through the C. F. C., that God did or did not create the tobacco in the beginning? I think we ought to bear with each other brethren.

JOSEPH E. BOWSER.

Dear Brother: As I did not get to meeting to-day, and have not been for some time,our nearest place of meeting being four miles, I feel somewhat lonesome, and thought I would write for the Companion. I love to read its columns, and to hear from the brethren and sisters, in so many parts of the country. It is but a few years since I have joined in with the Brethren; but I love the brethren and sisters, and love to meet them in the house of worship. We all have a work to do; we all have to work out our own soul's salvation; therefore let us go to work at once, for we do not know how soon we will have to meet our God, and if we are not prepared, what will be our end! Let us ask God to give us new hearts, praying hearts, hearts fully resigned unto his holy will, that when we come to die, we can say:

"Come welcome death, the end of fear,
I'll gladly go with thee."

Sinners, why stand ye here all the day idle? Have you nothing to do? Have you no soul to be saved? Have you no God to meet? Then why do you not try to make heaven your home?

Dear brethren and sisters: perhrps some of you have friends, who were near and dear to you, who have gone to try the realities of another world unknown to you, and you are trying to meet them in heaven. I have two little sisters, who were dear to me, gone to heaven, and my heart's desire is to meet them there, and I hope also to meet my dear brethren and sisters in the Lord. It is my prayer.

MARGARET J. BURKHART.
Nolo, Pa.

Brother Henry: I herewith send you a little church news, with extracts from letters that I think would not fail to be of interest to the readers of the Companion. About ten days ago I received a letter, requesting me to come to a council meeting on Saturday the 28th of January, which was about twenty miles distant. Accordingly, on Friday afternoon, the day before the meeting, I started and went about 12 miles, and stopped for the night. Next morning took our leave, and went on our way to brother Samuel Bowman's, the place of meeting, where an election was to be held for a minister. On arriving, a number of members had already collected, among them Eld Jacob Metzger.—Soon after Eld. F. P. Loehr, from Mich., and Eld. Joseph Cripe, from Marion county Ill,, arrived. The result of the meeting was, the election of Jacob Snell to the ministry; a brother much beloved. Had a very pleasant meeting. Had public services at night. Brother F. P. Lœher led out in the ministration of the word. After meeting, went home with brother Jonas Umbaugh, and was pleasantly entertained for the night. Next morning all went to the same place to meeting, where we tried to preach to the people; followed by F. P. Lœhr, who had been preaching for the brethren about a week. Good attention, good congregations,and brethren all alive.—At 15 minutes before 3 a. m., took our leave of the family, and started off a distance of 18 miles, where ElderSamuel Murray was preaching. Arrived at about 30 minutes after 6 p. m. There was a large congregation present at this meeting. Bro. D. Bonebrake handed me some letters, and told me to take them home with me, and read them, and then let him know by letter what I thought of them, which I did, when I at once saw his anxiety for me to read them. A part of these letters will be of interest to the readers of the Companion. Here they are:

TROY, Doniphan, Co,, Kan.)
July 25th, A. D. 1870. (

Dear father and mother, it is with great pleasure that I seat myself to write you a few lines, to let you know how we are getting along. We are all well at present. We have had another death in our family: a little boy four months old. And the old man Ilnur died last April Hope this may find you all well. Well, now, pap, I will tell you that we have no "Dunkard" church here. The people in our neighborhood belong to the Christian New lights: and we have been telling some of them about the "Dunkard" church, the way they do, and their doctrines, and the way they take the Lord's supper; and they would have us write to you to come out to see us this fall, and bring a "Dunkard" preacher with you Some say they would go a hundred miles to hear a "Dunkard" preacher, Sarah and I want to join the church, and we don't want to join any but the "Dunkards." If you will bring a good preacher, I think that there would be one of the largest meetings that has ever been in Kansas. Some have never seen a "Dunkard" and they are anxious to hear one preach. Now, pap, the New Testament says, go ye, therefore, and preach to all nations; and if the "Dunkards" want to follow the New Testament, they must send a preacher to preach to this people; for there never has been a "Dunkard" preacher here yet in Doniphan County, Kansas. You won't treat us in a God-like manner, if you don't come and bring a preacher with you.—Write as soon as this comes to hand, and let us know how soon you will come. Now do come as soon as you can, for the people want to see that meeting. Don't forget,to write. No more. We remain your affectionate children.

Mr. G. P. Simpson says he wants you to be sure and come, and bring a good preacher along. I must say once more, that you must come as soon as you can.

GOLIAS BONEBRAKE.
SARAH BONEBRAKE.

Dear brethren, think of children five or six hundred miles from home—far off in the wilderness—out of Christ, and death doing his work in their family. with such vehement appeals to a kind father to come and see them, and bring a preacher with him, as they desire to unite with the church. They, of course, don't know that there are "Dunkard" preachers close to them. There are brethren Joseph Besloar and Geo. Witwer, the brethren Sells, with brother Harper, and others that we might name in western Missouri; as also brethren living nearest in Kansas. The address of Golias Bonebrake is Troy, Donephan Co., Kansas. The address of the father, Daniel Bonebrake, is Huntingdon, Indiana.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Waste Places of the Earth.

What different events have transpired on the same spot! we must all exclaim. Where once the sea gull perched on Plymouth rock, a company of devoted Puritans landed, and through hardships and trials succeeded in planting a colony, which has extended, and now embraces many hundred miles, known as the Eastern States. Where once the stealthy step of the wolf and panther, was heard over the autumn leaves, and the smoke from the Indian wigwam arose, the busy population of New York city now sweeps along. Where once the Western Reserve was considered the far West, and a few adventurous settlers availed themselves of their right of possession, a populous portion of the country now causes no remark. Where once to remove to California, was to leave home and kindred and bid them a final farewell for a journey through the Isthmus, enterprise has built a rail-road through the heart of the country, which connects the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. Where once the impenetrable forest was tracked by the Red man, civilization has removed the forest, and built thriving cities and towns. An instance of this, Bourbon, where only thirty years ago solitude was scarcely undisturbed, to-day takes its place among other Western towns. Has school privileges with the older cities of the East. Its college lately established, to be second to none in the country. Where once a band of seven, came to this country, settling at Germantown, in their humble efforts to do good, they have spread, till nearly every state of the Union contains some disciples.—Where once these unpretending followers of Jesus saw no benefit, but much injury arising from education, (as some who have possessed learning used it only for the furtherance of Satan's kingdom (which check has kept the church pure,) yet now we see them endeavoring to establish an institution where their own children can be educated, nurtured in the church's protecting arms, believing that the times demand a wider scope of knowledge to confute and confound error.

Where once stood the great temple, now stands a Mohammedan mosque. Where once stood the Son of God, "When after six days he taketh with him Peter, James and John into Mount Tabor, and was transfigured before them;" Napoleon brought to bear his deadly weapons of warfare, upon thirty seven thousand Turks in the valley below.

Where once, the Vandoise valley was the scene of much confusion and blood-shed, and the trembling peasant scarcely dared to send forth a hymn of praise to the Creator, lest his hiding place should be discovered to his persecutor, the peaceful hamlet and the village church now rear their heads in undisturbed repose. Where once Dr. Judson and wife toiler over the tropical sands of India, endeavoring to proclaim the Gospel, many have obeyed the call of other missionaries, and more than one church stands as a monument of their untiring zeal. And so in almost all countries the way has been opened for the entrance of the light of divine truth. But men must be prepared to do this.

It is sometimes said that the Apostles were illiterate men. This seems to be true of them at the time they were called, but they were with the Master three years, and learned from him. And so after his ascension when a man was needed for a great work, a great man was required, he was provided by God, says some one, as in the case of Paul. Very true, but the days of miracles are past, and the Lord requires human agencies, and has put it into the hearts of men to provide them for his work. Let us then in any undertaking that has for its object the aggrandizement of the human family, and the glory of the Lord, "Come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

The Resurrection.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

How soon do we get beyond our depth when we occupy ourselves with "the mystery of godliness!" The simplest feature in the life of Christ runs into the fathomless abysses of the Godhead. Every word he uttered as a man was, in some sense, the voice that broke the silence of Eternity, and ushered the universe into being. His name is "Wonderful," and his life is replete with Marvels. He was "God over all, blessed forever," whether in the swaddling bands of infancy, the agony of the cross, or on the Throne of Universal Empire. The evidence of Divinity is strongest where to sense he is the weakest. "He was conceived through weakness, yet he liveth by the power of God." No state can be more helpless than that of death, which is the wages and culmination of sin; and the power that redeems itself from this ultimate issue of evil, must be Omniptent. The love that constrains to die for a sin-smitten, hell-threatened race, must be combined with power to exhaust the utmost penalty of violated law without losing capacity to emerge from the deepest under-swell of penal woe, and take his place on the Mediatorial Throne as the World's Redeemer.—The power of Jesus, as "the Resurrection and the Life," is a doctrine than which none yields sweeter comfort to the child of God. Whatever our blessed Saviour has been to the church, and to each individual member of it since his ascension to glory, has been by virtue of his resurrection. The All-power, in heaven and on earth, which was requisite for the recovery of sinners to holiness and to God, must be exercised through a glorified human body. "Emmanuel" has become a word in which all the appellations of God, and all the terms of salvation find their true meaning in the scheme of reconciliation. "God with us" is an everlasting verity, whether we be lost or saved. God in our nature is as true in relation to the sinner, as the saint. Jesus could not take on himself a body exempt from the wages of sin, and, consequently, not exempt from the causes that naturally issue in death. Herein lies all the sinner's hope. That "Christ died for our sins, according to the scriptures," is our anchor as fallen beings; that he "could not be holden of death," is the ground of the "hope that maketh not ashamed." For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life," that is, by his resurrection-life. Rom. 5: 10. What he gains for us by his death, he now lives to plead and apply. "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and beheld, I am alive for evermore." The life of Jesus is the substance of the Bible, the life of life, and the bliss and glory of Heaven. The quickening of the slain Lamb in the rocky tomb of Arimathea was felt by the progenitor of the race, by patriarchs and prophets, by the elect in all ages of the world. He will judge the quick and the dead, in the resurrection state, but the righteous only will rise as he rose. All that sleep in the dust will hear his voice, and come forth, but he is in a peculiar sense "the Resurrection and the Life" to those who constitute the bride. "He is risen," are words of Divine majesty and sublime import to all who "have tasted the powers of the world to come."—With such a guarantee, what is more reasonable than that the heirs of grace should "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Every obstacle that lay in the way of salvation, has been removed, and the conqueror of Satan, sin, hell and death, now sways the sceptre of Universal Dominion, as our elder brother, our sympathizing high Priest, God forever enshrined in our glorified humanity the fountain of our hope the Conservator of our interests, our strength and confidence in weakness and peril, our security in temptation, our light and stay in dark providences and the pledge of our ultimate triumph over sin and death. Such a Redeemer can never be baffled by any machinations of Satan. The powers of hell have marshalled all their forces, made their mightiest onset, and met with a signal overthrow in the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. They can never approach the saint with such panoply and advantage as that with which they assulted the Godman. Every regenerate soul is vitalized by the resurrection-life of Jesus, and has all the resources of Deity at his command against the wiles of the devil. If it is a vital concern to the believer that Jesus is risen, the advantage is co-extensive with all the love and sympathy and faithfulness and power that exist in the Divine human Mediator. He has no attribute or qualification that He holds not at the disposal of those who have been "baptized into His death," and rose "in the likeness of his resurrection."—No petition will be accredited in the court of Heaven that comes not with the signature of a living Savior.—The blood that congealed in death for sin, must be applied by the authority and power of him who retouched the life current with the underived life of Deity, and rose from the dead by his inherent power. It was necessary to show us what he can do, and to inspire us with confidence that what he can do, he will.

From first to last we are dependent on Jesus as he is, and where he is. All that that he has been went with unbroken history through the grave, and was made the exhaustless reservoir of grace in the glorified Being. There could be no living Savior, had there not been first a bleeding sacrifice on the Cross; and all the humiliation of the manger, the life of toil and derision and dejection, and the dreadful tragedy of Golgotha, had been in vain, but for the resurrection. In his life he provided a righteousness which would satisfy Infinite Justice, in his death, he sustained what was equivalent to our penalty, in his resurrection he exhibited his omnipotence and the validity of his claims as "Lord of lords," and now occupies the Throne of Heaven dispensing the spoils he gathered from the time he vocated his Father's bosom, until he returned with the approbation of the Trinity, and amid the acclamation of Heaven's principalities and powers. The chief of sinners has the same place at the Throne of Grace as he who has no other stain on his soul than a single vagrant fancy.—The felon on the cross found no less efficacy in the prospective atonement than the child-saint of ten years now does through faith in a risen Savior. His resurrection connects with every stage of the new life, and is the source whence the first tremulous pulsation is derived. "He is exalted to give repentance." Without conviction of sin, there can be no "repentance unto life," and without the function of the Holy Spirit, there can be no conviction; and it is the Savior's own declaration that "if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you." This same agent was, first of all, to "convince the world of sin;" and this conviction must spring from a saving apprehension of the resurrection-power of Christ. And in order to make this doctrine the means of such power to the soul, it must include the antecedents of the Redeemer's resurrection-state. A knowledge of sin derived from a Spirit-directed contemplation of Jesus on His Throne, will lead to the brink of hell, from which the soul was snatched by the death of Christ. This begets such loathing of self, and horror of sin and desire for deliverance that the sinner receives in a sense the nails of the cross into his own hands and feet, in his acknowledgment of sin's doom, and his appreciation of sin's atonement. Here the soul emerges from what is termed the body of death, into a life whose activities he is conscious spring not from anything inherent, nor from anything beneath him. He has taken hold, by faith, of the terms that involve sanctification, which is a greater matter with the properly illuminated soul than forgiveness.—The faith of the elect, from the first dawn of light and first thrill of joy, to the full blaze of eternal day, and the unrestrained rapture of finished redemption, is faith from and faith in a risen Savior. Thus argues the Apostle: "if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." "If Christ be not raised, ye are yet in your sins." Oh, what tremendous issues depend on a living faith in a living Redeemer. If we look back by faith into the open tomb of Emmanuel, and up to the Throne where the once shrouded Nazarene now reigns, and strive to make the radiation of his risen life in our daily walk the supreme object of our existence, we may look forward with blessed assurance to the august event of "the first resurrection." To the true believer, the great day which is to unseal the grave of every saint, wears an alluming aspect. Oh the direful calamity of lying down in the grave with a seal on ear and eye which the dread phenomena of the second advent cannot break. One sin clinging to us through the dark valley, will fold us in a shroud which "the voice of the arch-angel and the trump of God," the flaming heavens and the shuddering earth, the warring elements and the thunders of Jehovah cannot unwrap. But "there is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." "They shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy."—"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Glorious destiny! The resurrection of the body! "This corruptible must put on incorruption." The earthly tabernacle which death dissolves, shall be rebuilt, and be embellished with the perfect excellences and eternal glory of the Godman. He shall change our vile bodies, that they may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Wonder of wonders! "Awake, and sing, ye that dwell in the dust." The blessed jubilee day of creation is not far distant. Soon shall we greet the saints of all time, in glorified bodies. Do we "love his appearing?" Do we long for the coming of his kingdom? Are we "looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God?" Do we study his providences, meditate on his law day and night, and make it the great end of life to be holy as he is holy, and take his great purposes upon our deepest sympathies, and offer ourselves as instruments for their accomplishment? Oh, brethren, is the amen of our inmost souls ready to rise to our lips, in answer to these questions? If his resurrection-life control us not in our affections, conversation, and actions, we cannot share his reign. His life on earth was but an episode; his heart and home were in Heaven. If our strongest attachments and profoundest delights are in things perishable, we have not the spirit of Christ, and no title to the inheritance of the saints. The power that is to issue in a glorified body, must transform the life continually until it be consummated in the resurrection. This consideration should have a mighty influence in correcting all polluting personal habits, and in guarding our relations to the world. Our love to Jesus, our desire for holiness, and constant fear lest we come short of the joys and glories of the resurrection morning, should be sufficient to overcome all indulgences and practices incompatible with the solemn thought that we are to be temples of the Holy Ghost. A right view of the manger, the cross, the mercy-seat the Judgment throne, would soon purge the church of every voluntary habit that defileth it. I aim my remarks at no one in particular, but simply plead for that purity of life which christianity demands, and which is to culminate in a body like unto the glorified humanity of Jesus.—"He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above." "Mortify your members which are upon the earth." Regard every artificial appetite as hateful to God, and hurtful to the soul. Die rather than be enslaved by any form of sensual indulgence. "Walk in newness of life." "Be ye holy, for I AM HOLY."

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. 9.

PASSOVER.

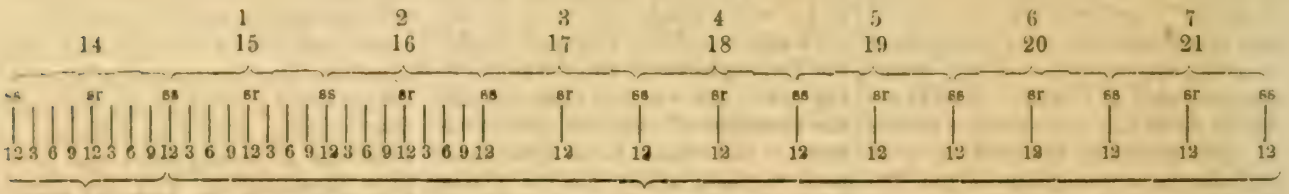
Diagram No 2, includes eight full days from the beginning of the fourteenth day, to the end of the twenty-first day of Abib, or Nisan; and it is intended to illustrate the Passover and feast of unleavened bread. These eight days are called "the days of unleavened bread." Acts 12: 3; 20: 6. Josephus in one instance calls them "the feast of unleavened bread." He says:

"So the Hebrews went out of Egypt while the Egyptians wept, and repented that they had treated them so hardly. * * * But as they went away hastily, on the 3rd day they came to a place called Baal Zephon, on the Red sea; and when they had no food out of the land, because it was a desert, they ate of loaves kneaded of flour only warmed by a gentle heat, and this food they made use of for 30 days, for what they brought with them out of Egypt would not suffice them any longer time; and this only while they dispensed it to each person to use so much only as would serve for necessity, but not for satiety. Whence it is, that, in memory of the want we were then in, we keep a feast for 8 days, which is called the feast of unleavened bread. Vol. 1, Ch. 15, B. 2, § 1.

But Josephus did not understand, that the feast of unleavened bread proper consisted of eight days, for we have heretofore quoted his language where he says, "The feast of unleavened bread succeeds that of the passover, and falls on the 15th day of the month, and continues 7 days, wherein they feed on unleavened bread."

We shall now proceed to speak of these feast days in order, and hope the reader will be mindful to refer to the diagram, as by so doing the services of the several days will be more firmly fixed in the mind in their proper time, order, and connection.

DIAGRAM NO. 2.



EXPLANATION. The figures 14, 15, 16, &c., signify the days of the month; and 1, 2, 3, &c., the days of the feast of unleavened bread. The ss marks sunset; and sr sunrise. Between ss and sr is night: and between sr and ss is day. The figures 12, 3, 6, 9, 12, &c., show the hours of the day and night.

As this diagram is on a small scale, the reader should also refer to Diagram No. 1.

The first day represented in the diagram is the fourteenth day of the month Nisan. On this day they were required to kill the Ptssover: "And ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month; and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening." Ex 12: 6 "And they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month."—2 Chron. 35: 1.

On the fourteenth day of the month they must put away the leaven out of their houses, and eat unleavened bread at even, the close of the day: "In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, till the one and twentieth day of the month at even." Ex. 12: 18. Another argument, to prove that the leaven must be removed on the fourteenth day of the month, will here be introduced. The fifteenth day of the month was the first day of the feast of unleavened bread. Throughout the seven days of this feast, there was to be no leaven found in their houses, nor seen with them in all their quarters. "Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses." Ex. 12: 19. "Unleavened bread shall be eaten seven days; and there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen with thee in all thy quarters." Ex. 13: 6. Since then, there was to be no leaven found in their houses, nor seen in all their quarters, during the seven days of the feast of unleavened bread, and the fifteenth day was the first of the seven days, it must be clear to the mind of every one, that the leaven was removed before the fifteenth day set in; for, on the day of its removal, it must be both found and seen. As an item of interest upon this point, we give the following quotation from Newman's Bib. Ant pp 375, 376

"Exceedingly great care was taken to have every particle of the leaven cleared from the houses before the time of the passover began. The law on this subject was very strict, and to make sure a proper observance of it, the most diligent pains were considered necessary. As early as the beginning of the 14th day, that is, the night before the feast, there was a general search made all over every house with lighted candles, not leaving unexamined the smallest corner or hole where it was possible for leaven in any shape to be lodged. The next morning before noon, all that could be found was carefully burned, or thrown into the water, or scattered to the wind; and every one, as he thus put it away, was accustomed to repeat the established form of execration. 'All the leaven that is within my possession, which I have seen or which I have not seen, which I have cast out or which I have not cast out, be it as though it were not: be it as the dust of the earth." Thus was every house purged for the celebration of the pass over; and after this it was not considered proper even so much as to make use of the word leaven, lest the thought of it should pollute the mind. The unleavened bread, which was now prepared for use, was baked in the form of thin cakes, full of holes, to keep them from the slightest fermentation, unseasoned with salt, and made only with water, without any sort of oil; in some cases the higher class of people had them enriched with sugar and eggs, though even such bread was not allowed on the first day of the feast, but only on those that followed."

From the fact that the most important service connected with the observance of the Passover, namely, the killing of the victims, fell on the fourteenth day of the month, it was spoken of as the day on which they kept the passover, although it was not eaten until that day had closed. See Lev. 23: 5, Num. 28: 16, Chron. 35: 1. And because on the fourteenth the leaven was removed and the unleavened bread baked, the passover sacrificed, and all the preparations made for the feast of unleavened bread, it, the fourteenth day, was called "the day of the preparation;" (Math. 27: 62, Lu. 23:54,) and "the preparation of the passover," John 19: 14. From the same considerations, in connection with the fact that the law enjoined the eating of unleavened bread at even, the close of the fourteenth day, (Ex. 12: 18,) it was called the day of unleavened bread," (Lu. 22: 7) and "the first day of unleavened bread." Ma. 14: 12. Let it be remembered by every reader, that the fourteenth day was "the passover of the Lord," the day on which the passover must be killed in the evening the close of the day, the preparation day, and the first day of unleavened bread. The precise time for killing the passover was heretofore shown to have been from the ninth hour to sunset, the close of the fourteenth day.

In the diagram, the second day represents the fifteenth day of the month, which was the first day of the feast of unleavened bread. It has already been shown that this feast was of seven days continuance, and that it was designed to commemorate their departure from Egypt. It has also been shown that in Egypt they ate the passover on the night of the fifteenth day, and that they left Egypt in the morning, or latter part of the same night. It is not necessary here to repeat the arguments by which these facts are established; but the facts themselves are stated, that the reader may have a clearer view, and a more systematic arrangement of them. It is proper, however, to notice in this connection, that as the time of their deliverance is particularly mentioned as a part, at least, of that which was to be commemorated, it was necessary to observe the same time. The language of inspiration is, "In this selfsame day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt; therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations by an ordinance forever." Ex. 12: 17. "Thou shalt therefore keep this ordinance in his season from year to year." Ex. 13: 10.

As the fifteenth was the first, it is plain that the twenty-first was the seventh day of the feast. Both of these days were holy convocation day: "And in the first day there shall be an holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be an holy convocation to you: no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you." Ex. 12: 16

Nevin observes: "Soon after it became dark, that is, with the commencement of the 15th day, the passover table was spread, and surrounded by its little company in all the houses of Jerusalem." Bib. Ant. P. 377. Thus the passover feast served as a solemn and impressive introduction of the feast of unleavened bread. This meal was so different from their ordinary meals, as to excite the curiosity of children, and induce them to ask what was meant by it; and it is said with reason, that, if the query was not presented by a child, some other person brought it forward. Then followed an account of its institution and an explanation of its design. This was rendered all the more impressive from the consideration that the great deliverance which they recounted, was wrought on the same night of the same month. Thus it was a memorial to them indeed in the fullest sense of the term, having the same service that they had in Egypt, and that in the same night. Ex. 13: 26, 27.

We will here ask of the reader to call to mind the following facts: The passover was sacrificed on the fourteenth day, but it was eaten on the night of the fifteenth; the fourteenth day was "the first day of unleavened bread," but the fifteenth was the first day of the feast of unleavened bread;" on the fourteenth day the leaven was sought out, found, seen and put away out of their houses, but on the fifteenth day, no leaven was to be found in their houses, nor seen with them in all their quarters; the fourteenth was "the preparation day," in which the work preparatory to the feast must be done, but the fifteenth was "an holy convocation" and they were allowed to do "no manner of servile work therein"—it was a rest day,—a sabbath.

The day following this sabbath, was the sixteenth day of the month, and is represented by the third in the diagram. This was the second day of the feast of unleavened bread; and it, too, had its special services. On this day the priest was required to wave the sheaf—the first-fruits of the harvest. The law relating to this service is found in Lev. 23, 10–14, which reads as follows: "When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof. then ye shall bring a sheaf of the first-fruits of your harvest unto the priest; and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you: on the morrow after the sabbath the priest shall wave it. And ye shall offer that day when ye wave the sheaf, an he lamb without blemish of the first year, for a burnt-offering unto the Lord. And the meat-offering thereof shall be two tenth-deals of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the Lord for a sweet savour; and the drink-offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of an hin. And ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the self-same day that ye brought an offering unto your God: it shall be a statute forever throughout your generations in all your dwellings."

This offering of the first-fruits of their harvest, was a grateful acknowledgment of the goodness of God, who gave them rains and fruitful seasons: it was also typical of Christ the first-fruits from the dead. Until this offering was made, they were not allowed to eat in any form, either green, parched, or baked, of the new fruits.

From this day also they commenced to count the seven weeks, or forty-nine days, which intervened between the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, and the day of first-fruits, the feast of weeks, afterward called Pentecost, because it was the fiftieth day after the first day of the feast of unleavened bread. See Lev. 23: 15–20, Num. 28: 26–31, Deu. 16: 9–12.

Our space forbids a particular notice of the remaining five days of the feast, but we will briefly refer to the law partaining to sacrifices and offerings throughout the feast. It required them on every day of the feast to offer for a burnt-offering, two bullocks, one ram, and seven lambs of the first year, and a kid for a sin-offering, with their respective meat-offerings and drink-offerings; and silver trumpets were to be blown over the burnt-offering, as it lay upon the altar. On the second day after the sheaf was waved by the priest, it was to be threshed, and the barley dried and ground, after which a homer of the meal was to be taken, heaved, and waved with oil and frankincense; then a part of it was to be burned on the altar, with a lamb of the first year for a burnt offering, with two tenth deals of fine flour for a meat-offering, and a fourth part of a hin of wine for a drink offering. Lev. 23: 6, Num. 9: 9–14; 28: 17–25.

The importance of the feast of the Hebrews, and their influence over their civil, social, and religious relations, can be seen only by remembering that but few copies of their law were written, and that they had not the advantages of spreading intelligence throughout the land by steam and lightning which we have to-day.

Answers to Correspondents.

S. Bollinger. We do not advertise the Lexicons by the dozen, but will send you a dozen for $7.80, and Tuck (Pocket book form) at $10 75, or a half dozen of each for $9.25.

Nachusa. You failed to give us your name. We received no money by the hands of Wm. C. Dysort, to our knowledge. Please write again stating the particulars.

Reuben Young. According to our books we owe you 61 cents. You failed to give Allen Rhode's address. We are sending the paper to Camden.

James S. Switzer. We have no club rates, but allow our agents 10 per cent on all amounts sent us for their trouble.

David Frantz. It was your mistake; you had not sent his name. The paper is now being sent to him.

Tillie Fiant. Through a rush of business, your list did not receive the attention it deserved. The names were not entered on the subscription book. We have done so now, and sent back Nos. We beg pardon.

D. A. Lichty. Our books say that you owe us $10 62.

John Brindle. We have sent the Almanac as you ordered.

John Forney Sr. We do not remember anything of having a letter from you at the time you mention; neither do our books give any account of one from you. Quite likely it was lost.

Daniel Yount. The price of the C. F. C., and P. Y., is $2.25. Your money was therefore 75 cts, short.

S. A. Walker. That makes it all right.

Aaron Michael. We have no account of having received $2.30 from you in the time specified. We do not agree to bear the risk of money sent by mail unless the letter is registered, for any amount above a dollar Your letter may yet come to hand, or may be returned to you, unless it was appropriated by some dishonest official.

Jer. M. Messemore. The subscription of Julia A. Messamore expired with last year, having paid 65 cents, and commenced with No. 29. Other errors have been corrected, and money credited.

S. W. Bollinger. B. C. can have it for 75 cents. We have credited you with 25 cents. Your item of correspondence suffered delay on account of having been written on the back of the sheet containing your business note. Always write matters of that kind on a separate slip.

Isaac Young. We do no bookbinding of our own. We get our volumes bound, for single volume 75 cts, two volumes together, about $1.25. More than two volumes could not well be bound together. You could no doubt get your work done near home for the same price. Brother H. J. Kurtz could no doubt give you profitable information.

S. P. Brumbaugh The check for $15.00 came to hand, and is credited to you. It was overlooked in the moneys received Jacob Mack. Your subscription expired with the year 1870.

Jacob Beeghly. We received a letter some time ago containing $5.00 ordering the paper to be sent to J. J. Harshbarger but did not notice your name on the envelope, so we gave Harshbarger credit for the money, but have now transferred it to your account. We have entered your name on our book for the Pious Youth.

J. R. Frick. Your subscription is now paid to No. 26.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MORAL GEMS.

"A Word fitly spoken, how good it is."

We may lose Heaven by NEUTRALITY as well as by HOSTILITY.

When a believer prays, he is not alone,—there are three with him: the Father, seeing the secret, His ear open; the Son, blotting out sin, and offering up prayer; the Holy Ghost, quickining and giving desires. There can be no true prayer without these three.

To "resist the devil" successfully, one must always act on the contrary with him; that is, he must believe the opposite of what he says, and do the opposite of what he suggests.

Dear anxious soul, why do you keep away from Christ? You say Christ is far from you; alas, he has been at your door all day.

He that negotiates between God and man
As God's Ambassador, the grand concerns
Of judgment and of mercy, should beware
Of lightness in his speech. 'Tis pitiful
To court a grin, when you should woo a soul;
To break a jest, when pity should inspire
Pathetic exhortation, and to address
The skittish fancy with fictitious tales,
When sent with God's commission to the heart!
So did not Paul.

For men to judge of their condition by the decrees of God which are hid from us, and not by his Word, which is near us and in our hearts, is as if a man wandering in a wide sea in a dark night, when the heaven is all clouded above, should yet resolve to steer his course by the stars which he cannot see, but only guess at and neglect the compass which is at hand, and would afford him a much better and more certain direction.

The Bible should be the text-book or foundation of all intellectual and religious training, for whenever its blessed doctrines and precepts are embraced, treasured in the heart, and carried out practically in every-day life, there true grace prevails, true wisdom shines, and what things soever are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report. To verify the proof of this assertion, instance Scotland. Her "rich and poor, bond and free," at morn and eve assemble around the family hearth; the verses are sung, the chapter read, and prayers sent up to heaven. Hence the children, like Timothy of old, know the Scriptures from their youth.—Every man and woman and child read the Bible and write their own name. Hence comparatively speaking, you find no Scotchman in the almshouse, penitentiary, or state-prison.

One of the Savior's most delightful discourses, second only to the sermon on the Mount, is that delivered at Jacob's Well to but one listener—and that one, a poor, despised Samaritan woman. It encourages the heart of a minister, of course, to be able to preach to multitudes—often it fosters vanity and pride. But let him not count it condescention, when the occasion calls for it, to speak the truth of the Gospel to solitary listners, or "two or three," gathered together in the name of Jesus. For, he that converts but one sinner from the error of his way, saves a soul from death, and hides a multitude of sins.

Though holy in himself, and virtuous.
He still to sinful men was mild and piteous;
Not of reproach imperious or malign,
But in his teaching soothing and benign,
To draw them on to heaven, by reason fair
And good example, with his daily care.
The love of Christ and his Apostles twelve
He taught—but first he followed it himself.

"One should think," said a friend to the celebrated Dr. Samuel Johnson, "That sickness and the view of death would make men more religious." "Sir," replied Johnson, "they do not know how to go about it. A man who never had religion before, no more grows religious when he is sick, than a man who has never learned figures can count when he has need of calculation."

"Wicked men stumble at a straw in the way to heaven; and climb over great mountains in their way to hell."

A good woman who had been to the house of God was met on her way home by a friend, who asked her if the sermon was done. "No" she replied, "it is all said; it has yet to be done."

Garrick showed Dr. Johnson his fine house, gardens, statues, pictures, etc., at Hampton court. "Ah! David David," said the Doctor, "these are the things which make a death-bed terrible."

The greatest thoughts, it has been said, spring from the heart; but the maxim is far more true with respect to the noblest actions.

In the judgment-day there will be a fearful reckoning against soft, white hands as well as against hard, black, hearts.

Crime in New York.—Judge Barnard, in charging the Grand Jury of the Oyer and Terminer Court, said: "I presume that from this time onward this court will have to be in an almost continuous session until such time as a generation shall have passed away, so that the vast majority of men now engaged in the commission of crime shall either be incarcerated, run away, or dead. I use the word generation, because history tells us that after every great war, it requires a generation to clear out the bad men that have grown bad as camp followers, swindlers and robbers."

Do little things as if they were great because of the majesty of the Lord Jesus Christ, who dwells in thee; and do great things as if they were little and easy, because of his omnipotence.

"When a stranger treats me with want of proper respect," said a philosophic poor man, "I comfort myself with the reflection that it is not myself he slights, but my old shabby coat and hat, which, to say the truth, have no particular claims to admiration. So if my hat and coat choose to fret about it, let them: it is nothing to me."

Charity.—The best charity is not that which giveth alms, whether secretly or with ostentation. The best charity—that which "worketh no evil"—is the charity that prompts us to think and speak well of our neighbors. Even if they be openly condemned, and that with warrant, it is a noble charity in us not to gall their wounds by multiplying knowledge of their offences.

If you do but take and pierce God's word, and do but stay upon it as the bee doth on the flower, and will not off till you have something out of it, this will make you rich in knowledge

Which?

"Which shall it be? Which shall it be?"
I looked at John—John looked at me—
(Dear patient John, who loves me yet
As well as though my locks were jet)
And when I found that I must speak,
My voice seemed strangely low and weak;
"Tell me again what Robert said?"
And then, I let my head
Fall on his breast:

"'I will give
A home and land while you shall live,
If, as it seems, from out your seven,
One child to me for aye is given.'"
I looked at John's old garments worn,
I thought of all that John had borne
Of poverty, and work, and care,
Which, though willing, could not spare;
I thought of seven mouths to feed,
Of seven little children's need
And then of this.

"Come, John," said I,
"We'll choose among them as they lie
Asleep:" so walking hand in hand,
Dear John and I surveyed our band.
First to the cradle lightly stepped,
Where Lillian, the baby, slept,
A glory 'gainst the pillow white;
Softly the father stopped to lay
His rough hand down in loving way,
When dream or whisper made her stir,
And huskily he said, "Not her—not her!"

We stooped beside the trundle-bed
And one long ray of lamplight shed
Athwart the boyish faces there,
In sleep so pitiful and fair.
I saw our Jamie's rough, red cheek—
A tear undried. Ere John could speak,
"He's but a baby, too," said I,
And kissed him as we hurried by.

Pale patient Robbie's angel face
Still in his sleep bore suffering's trace,
"No, for a thousand crowns, not him,"
He whispered, while our eyes were dim.
Poor fading Dick, our wayward son,
Turbulent, reckless, idle one—
Could he be spared? Nay, he who gave,
Bade us bring him to the grave;
Only a mother's heart could be Patient enough for such as he;
And so, said John, "I would not dare
To take him from her bedside prayer."

Then stole we softly up above,
And kissed our Mary, child of love.
"Perhaps for her 'twould better be,"
I said to John. Quite silently
He stooped o'er each fair head that lay
Actors her cheek in wilful way,
And shook his head. "Nay, love, not thee."
While my heart beat audibly.
Only one more, our eldest lad,
Trusty and truthful, good and glad—
So like his father. "No, John, no—
I cannot, will not, let him go."

And so we wrote, in courteous way,
We could not drive one child away;
And afterward toil lighter seemed,
Thinking of that of which we dreamed;
Happy, in truth, that not one face
We missed from its accustomed place:
Thankful to work for all the seven,
Trusting the rest to One in heaven.

The Lord Will Provide.

In some way or other the Lord will provide;
It may not be my way,
It may not be thy way;
And yet in his own way
"The Lord will provide."

At sometime or other the Lord will provide;
It may not be my time,
It may not be thy time;
And yet in his own time
"The Lord will provide."

Despond, then, no longer, the Lord will provide;
And this be the token,
No word he hath spoken
Was ever yet broken.
"The Lord will provide."

March on then right boldly, the sea shall divide,
Thy pathway made glorious,
With shoutings victorious,
We'll join in the chorus,
"The Lord will provide!"

Comfort in Privations.

A philosophical old nonagenarian finds these comforts in growing old White-headed grumblers should take notice:

I have become very deaf. What a blessing! There is such a lot of silly talk I cannot hear, such scandals, etc.

My eyes are failing. How fortunate! I do not see a tithe of the folly and wickedness that is going on around me. I am blind to faults that would provoke me to censure.

I have lost my teeth, and my voice is not very audible. Well, I find it no use babbling to folks who won't listen, so I save my breath for better purposes. I don't show my teeth where I can't bite. I venture on no tough meat.

My taste is not so discriminating as in days of yore, and the good is that I am more easily satisfied; don't keep finding fault, am contented and thankful. A nice palate is a plague to get rid of.

My joints are rather stiff. Well, if they were ever so supple, I do not want to go and see the sights, hear concerts, make speeches, nor carouse at feasts.

I am not so strong as I was; but for what do I need to be stout? I am not going to wrestle or fight with anybody. My morals are generally improved.

THE SEED AND THE FRUIT.—A young man who recently committed suicide in Indiana, ascribed his downfall to the influence of the "vilest kind of novels," which he was allowed to read when eight or nine years old. "If good books had been furnished me," he says, "and no bad ones, I should have read the good books with as much zest as I did the bad ones. Persuade all persons over whom you have any influence not to read novels," was his parting message to his brother. The chaplain of Newgate prison in London, in his annual report to the lord mayor, referring to many fine-looking lads of respectable parentage in the city prison, says that he discovered "that all these boys, without one exception, had been in the habit of reading those cheap periodicals which are now published for the alleged instruction and amusement of the youth of both sexes."

If three men were to have their legs and arms broken, and were to remain all night exposed to the inclemency of the weather, the whole country would be in a state of the most dreadful agitation. Look at the wholesale deaths on the field of battle, ten acres covered with dead, and half dead, and dying; and the shrieks and agonies of many thousand human beings. There is more of misery inflicted on mankind by one year of war than by all the civil peculations and aggressions of a century. Yet it is a state into which the mass of mankind rush with the greatest avidity, hailing official murderers in scarlet and gold, and cock's feathers, as the greatest and most glorious of human creatures. It is the business of every wise and good man to set himself against this passion for military glory, which really seems the most fruitful source of human misery.

A Visit to Carroll Co., Mo.

Agreeably to previous appointment, Elder Peter Overholtzer came to the house of the writer on the 26th, day of January last, where he expected to meet Elders George Witwer and Daniel D. Sell, to accompany us on a visit to Carroll Co. The last two named brethren however failing to meet us, we set out, leaving my house at 7 o'clock, and reached the house of our friend Dennis T. Davis, at sundown. On the evening of the 27th, we reached our destination, brother William Kneppers. On the morning of the 28th, all the members living in this settlement, so far as known, except three, met at the house of brother Knepper's in church council; and finding that they number some 13 members, living here remote from any organization, they favored an organization. Whereupon their letters being presented and read, it was revealed that they had already one deacon among them, namely, brother Wm Knepper. The unanimous voice however was, to appoint a brother to the ministry, and another one to the visit, which resulted in the choice of brother Richard Morris to the ministry, and brother Henry Capler to the visit. Their congregation is designated as the Grand River, Carroll Co., congregation. We had an appointment for public worship at the same place that evening, after which we went home with brother Henry Cayler. On the morning of the 29th, (Lord's day) we filled an appointment at the school house in that vicinity, and after meeting, accompanied brother Richard Morris and family, to their home, took dinner, and met again at the schoolhouse in the evening, where we again found a large house thronged with an eager and waiting audience. After services we repaired for the night, with brother Daniel Loro and family to their house. On the morning of the 30th, there was an appointment for us at the house of our old brother Frederick and sister Michaels', from Wabash, Ind. Here we met at eleven o'clock; but owing to the thaw and rain the audience was not large. Another appointment for that evening at the school-house in that vicinity, had been well published, and was equally well attended. Better order and attention than was manifested at all these meetings, cannot be desired. From this, our last meeting here, we were kindly and comfortably received and entertained for the night by our friend Clayburn and sister Ray, of whom we took leave on the morning of the 31st, and arrived safely at home that night, where we found all well.

We wish to tender our heartfelt thanks to all our dear brethren, sisters, and friends, for their kindness and hospitality which they bestowed upon us everywhere we went. And for all this, praise we God, to whom all praise belongs.

Answer to B. F. Koons.

In Companion No. 3, page 46, brother B. F. Koons requested that some brother give his views as to how long Noah preached to the Antediluvians, and how long he was engaged in building the ark. Now the Bible does not inform us how long he preached, nor does it directly tell us that he preached at all; but the Apostle Peter terms him "a preacher of righteousness," see 2 Pet. 2: 5, from which we infer that he preached, but as to how long, we must be contented to remain in ignorance. Neither are we informed how long he was engaged in building the ark. Brethren sometimes preach that he was one hundred and twenty years in building it; but where they get this information from I don't know; certainly not from the Bible; for the Bible tells us that the Lord commanded Noah to make an ark of gopher wood &c., and that he should come into the ark, he, and his sons, and his wife, and his son's wives with him. Now we find that "Noah was 500 years old; and Noah begat Shem, Ham, and Japheth." Gen, 5: 32. Now if we suppose that his sons were married at the age of 25, then Noah must at least have been 525 years old when the command was given him to build; and as he was 600 years old when the flood came upon the earth, so, if we subtract 525 from 600 we see that he could, at the outside figure, not have been engaged more that 75 years; and it seems to me very unreasonable that he should have been employed that length of time in constructing it; and I doubt very much whether he was. But let us not trouble ourselves about this, but let us hasten to enter the ark of the New Testament, the church af Christ, which is the antitype of Noah's ark, and hold out faithful unto the end, and we will be admitted into the golden city.

DANIEL SNOWBERGER.

New Enterprise, Pa.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: I wrote last from Rehrersburg, Berks Co., on the 1st inst. At that time, I had attended four meetings in the Little Swatara branch. Afterward I attended five more, on the southern side of the Blue mountains, and three on the northern side, all belonging to the same congregation. In this branch the annual meeting is to be held this year. The following are the names of the ministers of this branch: Elder David Merkey, John Pfoutz, Samuel Gettel, south, and Joshua Struphar, and George Smith, north of the mountains. On the 2nd, inst., I was conveyed by brother John Hertzler to the house of brother John Merkey; the place where our next A. M. is to be held. We took a hasty survey of the location and advantages of the premises, in view of said meeting, and as there is scarcely a place to be found against which no objections can be raised, it is not claimed that this is free from disadvantages, but on the whole, I consid er it will answer the purpose very well, if the arrangements and preparations will be properly carried out, of which I have no fears.

On the evening of the 5th, had the last meeting in this branch, in the United Brethren church at Pine Grove, Schuylkill county. Next morning at 7 A. M. took cars at Pine Grove, and landed at Palmyra, Lebanon Co., about half after nine; but being one train in advance of what the brethren expected, no one waited my arrival, so I made my way to the house of Elder John Etter, house keeper of the Big Swatara branch. In this branch attended five appointments. On the 7th, a funeral came in, in connection with the appointment at the West Hanover meeting-house. I was told this was the eleventh funeral attended to at that house since New Year. Scarlet Fever is quite prevalent in this locality. In a general way I found the members well, since my last manifesting much love and christian courtesy. My health during the last week has been quite good; the hoarseness has wore off again, and my voice as good as usual. God be praised for his goodness. To-day I leave Dauphin for Franklin County.

DANIEL M. HOLSINGER.

Dear Companion: I have recently returned from a tour in Ohio, which may be published if you please.

I left home on the 10th of January, and stopped first in the Canton congregation, in Stark count., O.—Had some interesting meetings.

Then passed on to the Chippewa congregation, in Wayne Co. Then to the Mohiccon congregation, same county. Then to Black River congregation, Medina Co. Then to Maple Grove congregation in Ashland Co. Then to Ashland congregation, same county. Then to Loudonville congregation, same county.

We held a number of interesting meetings, and had the pleasure of seeing some added to the church.—May God awaken and draw many more. Amen.

I returned home on the 2nd day of February, and found all well.—Thanks to God for his goodness and mercy. My health has been rather delicate for some time, but I am now better.

affectionately yours,

J. WISE.

Brother Holsinger: After so long an abscence I again take my pen to contribute a few lines to the columns of the Companion. According to previous arrangements with Elders Peter Overholser of Caldwell Co., Mo., and George Witwer, of Hamilton, Mo., we were all to meet with the brethren in Carroll Co., Mo., near Dewitt, for the purpose of organizing them there. But the day before I was to start, I was thrown from a horse, injureing my arm so badly and producing such pain that I could not go. It is with difficulty that I can hold my pen to write; therefore I mention this to let the brethren know the reason of my abscence. I hope the brethren had a pleasant time as well as, a profitable one. Brethren let us hear from you through the C. F. C. I have nothing of any note to write about our little flock here at this place; except that we are trying to do our duty as best we can, and trust the Lord for future prosperity.

DANIEL D. SELL.

Plattsburg, Mo

Dear brethren and sisters: My health has been very poor for several years, but more so for the last year. Part of the time I cannot lie in bed nor rest in any way. My complaint is mostly Spinal affections My physician, as good as we have in the West, recommended me to wear a brace; saying that if I would I could soon do my own work. This indeed would be of great advantage be-side the relief from my suffering, as I have to hire my work done. I therefore feel like asking a favor of the brethren, which is, to lend me fifty dollars, the cost of the brace, until I can pay it back. I would not ask it, but we settled here in the woods and had debts to pay. We made one payment on our little home this fall and we have one more, and then we will, if favored, be out of debt. Will not some brother, or more than one together, lend me the amount mentioned till I can return it?

We have but few brethren in this country, but we still live in hope that we may be blessed in a minister coming to our country. I hope some one may locate here. Any traveling through this section and wishing to give us a call, will stop at Easton Rapids, Mich., and there inquire for Leander Milbourn.

SARAH JANE MILBOURN.

Brother Holsinger: I am not ashamed nor afraid to say that I always was, and am yet, a very warm friend to the Companion; and must say I feel sorry to hear that some of our brethren think that $1.50 cts is too much for 50 visits of such good news as the Companion gives its readers; and that they would prefer a certain Baptist publication. We do not say but what said paper may be a good one, (we think it should be for the price, $2.00,) but still we beg leave to differ with those brethren as it being the cheapest paper of the two; so much so, that if the latter costs two dollars, and the Companion cost three times the amount it does, we prefer the Companion. We want to hear from the brotherhood. We think number 4, present volume, contains glorious news indeed—such as our brethren report from Sommerset county; twenty additions at one series of meetings. Good news indeed. Send along the Companion, we would like to hear more such good news, although we have given our agency to our brother David, yet we shall see that we get our share of names.

Your's in love.

FEB. 4th, 1871.)

Friend Holsinger: In reading the columns of the C. F. C. I noticed an article dated Jan. 12th, 1871, Lees Summit, Mo., and signed Richard Arnold, soliciting a little history of an old woman described by him. Five years ago this month, a woman answering the description come to my house, and said she was lost; said she lived in Bedford county, Pennsyl vania, said she had three daughters, one dead, one married to a "Dunkard" preacher near Freeport, Ill., one at home single: represented herself as a "Dunkard," and said Jacob Steel requested her to call and see how we were getting along. My mother-in-law being a sister to Jacob steel, and also a member of the same church, we kindly received her, and gave her all freedom (and more confidence than she deserved) and privilege of our house. She remained with us three weeks. She knew something of everybody and every place. We missed some small articles of clothing, when she left—suppose she made presents of them to other friends.—We believe her to be an imposter. She gave her name here Anna Nicodemus. With friend Arnold, I hope the old lady will get some good advice; I think I could remind her of several falsehoods practiced on us while here.

Your's truly.

Answer to Landon West.

Dear Brother: I have been looking for an answer to brother Landon West's querey on page fourteenth, present volume; and as the brethren are slow in answering said querey, I thought I would try in my weakness to give my views upon the subject.

The passage of scripture referred to reads as follows: "God is a spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." John 4: 24.

First, "must worship him in spirit." "It is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." John 6: 63. Also read the latter clause of Rom. 8: 9, "Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Now the spirit of Christ is an humble, obedient, and unassuming spirit, and always ready to do his Father's will. Unassuming, why? Because he said, "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God." Matt. 19: 17.—We further read that "the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith. Meekness, temperence: against such there is no law." Now, if we are thus minded, we worship in spirit. But how in truth? Why, worship agreeably to his word; for the Savior said, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." When we say agreeably to his word, we mean, keep his (the Savior's) commandments. In love

A. BERKEBILE.

Delta, Ohio.

Dear brethren and sisters: My third report was written in the house of brother George Smith, Dauphin Co. By him I was conveyed to the city of Harrisburg, where, while waiting for the train, I fell in company with brother John Reiff of Ind., with whom I had a pleasant conversation. At 1.55 P. M., took cars for Cauffman's station, Franklin Co. On the evening of the 10th, had meeting in the Antrim meeting-house, Falling Spring branch; 11th, A. M., at Hayde's meeting-house; thence to Price's meeting-house, Antietam branch, where we had three meetings. Thence to Snowberger's, where we had two meetings. Thence to the Amsterdam meeting-house, where we had a small meeting this forenoon, owing to the state of the weather, being snowy.

I found the members and friends mostly well, in this county. On the night of the 10th, lodged with brother Jacob Zarger, who has his parents living with him, having attained the age of 86 years, raised 7 children, all living yet. The youngest being now forty-seven years old. An extraordinary family! The old members are quite frail. On the 12th, visited Elder Jacob Price, who has been afflicted for some weeks, but now appears to be slowly recovering, and from present appearances, may soon be able to attend meeting again, if the Lord wills it so.

On the 13th, visited aunt Nancy Baker, at present confined to her bed. Her age is near 87 years.

My health has been good since my last. I am writing this in the house of brother Abraham Shockey.

H. F. Holsinger: The series of meetings at Spring Run, Mifflin Co., Pa., is now over. Public preaching was held in six different places; and at two or three places at one time. The word preached was with power, and effect. Those who engaged in proclaiming the good news—glad tidings, and giving saint and sinner a portion, were, Samuel Longanecker, Grabill Myers, Daniel Snowberger, Wm. How, Adam Beaver, George Myers, James Lane, and Christian Myers.

Correction.

Brother Henry: The information you gave to J. D. Mast is not correct. The house-keeper in the congregation where John S. Kline lives, is David Merkey, Bethel, Berks county, Pa., and where John L. Kline lives, is John Zug, Shaefferstown, Lebanon Co., Pa.

Queries.

Why do you omit the letter e in spelling the Savior's name.

WM. BOOKWALTER.

We omit it, because we have been taught to spell the name without it. Second, Because our judgment approves of it. Third, Because it requires less labor and is better.

Brother Henry: I should like for some brother to give an explanation of Matthew 7: 15, "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves."

T. GREY.

John 10: 9, latter part: "And shall go in and out and find pasture." Query: Is there any pasture outside the door or fold of God?

JOSIAH BEECHLY.

Did the Savior baptize personally?

JAMES ASHBROOK.

It is according to the Gospel, for a brother who is a private member to appoint meetings, and read a passage of Scripture, and exhort therefrom.

H. J. WEIMER.

Brother Henry: Could you or some one else give me the address of Brethren, Elias Steel, and Jacob Hochstetler. They both live in the state of Indiana. I have letters to be sent to these, and do not know their address.

CHEROKEE SEMINARY, TENN. /
Jan. 14th, 1871. (

Brother Hollinger: Although I have been rather negligent in my correspondence to you of late, yet I have by no means forgotten you, nor my duty as contributor to your paper.

My engagements of late have been such that I scarcely ever have any leisure time to write you, owing to the long continued feeble state of my health, and consequently neglect of my business, both secular and ministerial. I think this will be a sufficient apology for my protracted silence. But, as my health has, through the providence of God, considerably improved, so much so that I am again able to resume my business and also to engage in my ministerial duties, I, therefore feel that it is my privilege, and also my duty to write you something for the Companion.

On Friday morning before Christmas—by request of the Brethren in Blount County, Tenn., I took the cars at Jonesborough, in order to perform the visit.

Nothing worthy of note occurred on the journey. Arrived at Knoxville in due time. Knoxville is a considerable town, consisting of several manufactories, and machine shops, and a population of some 1500, or 2000 inhabitants. There are several very fine churches in the place. Almost every Denomination extant in our country, except the Brethren, and even to the Roman Catholics, have churches here

I visited this place about two years ago, and had meeting here, which, I believe was the first that the Brethren ever preached in the place. There seemed to be a great deal of curiosity manifested by the citizens in coming out to hear a "Dunkard" preach. When my discourse was ended, the Pastor of the church, who was a Methodist Minister, came forward and introduced himself to me, and requested me to make an appointment for the next day, and insisted that I should continue the meeting for some days; but as I had other engagements, I was obliged to forego the pleasure of so doing. From this circumstance I am inclined to the opinion, that notwithstanding the vanity and pride of a majority of the place, yet there might be much good effected by the Brethren, if they would more frequently visit such places. And, really, these are the very places where the doctrine which the Brethren preach, needs most to be promulgated,—"for how can they call on Him in whom they do not believe, and how shall they believe on him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent?"

I left Knoxville on the evening train for Maryville, and arrived at the latter place at 5 o'clock, where I was met by bro. J. W. Byrne, and shown to bro. S. Z. Sharp's who lives in the neighborhood of the place, where we had an appointment for a Conference meeting.

The weather being extremely cold we thought it not prudent to have any meeting on Saturday; but as there was an appointment for meeting at Carpenter's Camp ground on Sunday—which place was some six miles from Maryville—we left Bro. Sharp's in the evening, to go to bro. John Bowman's, who lives in the vicinity of the Camp-ground where we had an evening meeting. Owing to the extreme coldness of the weather—it being decidedly the coldest we have had in this latitude for a number of years,—we did not have a very extensive "turn out" on the occasion.

On Sunday morning bro. Sharp and myself, accompanied by several other Brethren and Sisters, set out for the "Camp ground." We arrived at the place of appointment in good time, and found a considerable number of persons assembled, and awaiting our appearance with apparent anxiety. This is another point at which the Brethren had never preached, except bro. Sharp a few times. The people received us very kindly, and seemed very much interested in hearing "the word of truth," which we endeavored in our imperfect way, to expound in their hearing.

We reasoned with them for four successive days and nights, on the proposition "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Paul to Timothy.

It is not my intention to enter into an elaborate treaties of the proposition which we had under consideration on the occasion, but only to advert to a very few remarks on the last clause of the proposition, or rather, the last proposition of the subject, "rightly dividing the word of truth."

We remarked that we believed that a very large proportion of the discensions in the Christian world, were mainly attributable to our lack of understanding of the word of God, and our lack of understanding, was in consequence of our failing to read the word intelligently, and our failing to read the word intelligently, was in consequence of our want of understanding its proper arrangement and division. I therefore proposed to devote one hour to the examination of the subject, of the proper division and arrangement of the Holy Scriptures. And believing that this part of our labors would not be uninteresting to many of the readers of the Companion, I herein give some of our conclusions:

The Holy Scriptures are properly divided into two grand divisions, the Old and New Testament. These two divisions are sub-divided into three minor divisions, and they are systematically arranged in the following order. 1st. The first grand division, or Old Testament pertains exclusively to the old dispensation, i e, the dispensation prior to the coming of Christ in the flesh. This is sub divided and arranged as follows: 1st—History, 2nd.—Law, 3rd.—Prophecy. The Historical part treats of the creation of the world, and of the people of the earth of what kind of beings they were, of the deluge, of the wars and fightings among the nations, how they lived and what they did, &c.

The 2nd sub division treats of the Laws by which they were governed, and is contained in the books of Leviticus, Numbers, 1st and 2nd Samuel, &c.

The 2nd sub division treats of the Laws by which they were governed, and is contained in the books of Leviticus, of Numbers, 1st and 2nd Samuel, &c.

The 3rd sub division is prophecy, and is contained in the Book of Zion, of Nehemiah, Psalms, Songs of Solomon, Isaah, Jeremiah Ezekiel, Daniel, &c. Although we often find those divisions rather interchangable treating of all these subjects promiscuously, yet, by a little discrimination, we are able to keep up the proper divisions.

The history is a chronological record of the geneology, and doings of the people. The law is a system of types and shadows of the Christian Law, and the prophecy is the annunciation of the certainty of the coming of Jesus Christ in the flesh.

The Law is said to be "our school master, to bring us to Christ," and again it is said that "Christ is the end of the Law for righteousness, to every one that believeth, therefore, this brings us down properly to the 2nd Grand division of the word of truth.

The 2nd grand division of the Holy Scriptures is the New Testament. This, like the first, is sub-divided into three subordinate or minor divisions.

The 1st is history, 2nd Law, and 3rd Prophecy. The first is a historical account of "the birth," the character, the life, the death, the burial, the resurrection, the forty days sojourn with his disciples, in giving to them their last commission, and finaly his assension up into Heaven.—This is called the Gospel. We then have a further historical account of how the Apostles acted upon this commission, how they preached the Gospel, what they called the Gospel, and how the people received it, and what they did in obeying it—Pentecost—Acts 2.

The first part of this account, or the gospel proper, is of John. The second part of this Historical record is contained in the "Acts of the Apostles," therefore it is very clearly to be seen that any faith which we may be in possession of, which is predicated upon any proposition contained in this part of God's word, is of a historical character. This, then is the 1st sub-division of the 2nd grand division of "the word of truth" and treats of history entirely; hence it is denominated the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God.

The 2nd subdivision of the word of truth is the "Law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which makes us free from the Law of sin and death."

This is that Law which was to go forth from Zion, and is the law which is given by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and through the medium of the Apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ. This is contained in the Epistles of the Apostles for the government of the Churches. This part or division is exclusively applicable to the Christian, to those who have been inducted into the Kingdom, and adopted into the family of the faithful, have become heirs of God, and joint heirs with our Lord Jesus Chrst.

The 3rd and last sub division of the second grand division, is the prophetic part, or the revelations of St. John, in the Isle of Patmos.

This is a prophetic description of the rise and progress of the Church, of its final triumph, and of the second coming of Jesus Christ to reign in it as King, until he has put down all rule and authority, and until he has destroyed the last enemy—which is Death; then shall he deliver up the kingdom unto the Father—that God may "be all in all." After having discussed this subject at length untill Wednesday night, and to a very attentive, and well ordered congregation, the weather still continuing to be very unfavorable, we thought it prudent to not protract the services longer, dismissed our meeting, and returned to Maryville, in order to recuperate, and enjoy the society and hospitalities of brother Sharp and family.

On Thursday night we had a little social meeting with some six or eight Brethren and Sisters, who had convened at the house of brother Sharp for the occasion.

I must here be permitted to state, that, in all experience since engaging in the solemn vocation of the ministry, I have never enjoyed myself better than in this social meeting. All the Bretheren and Sisters present seemed to enjoy and feel that freedom which the occasion offered. Several subjects for conversation were introduced, and discussed upon by the bretheren and sisters, but more particularly were we all interested upon that of "anointing the sick with oil in the name of the Lord." I have no doubt but many of the readers of the Companion would be interested with a recital of that conversation, but time and space forbid.

On Friday morning, I left on the Maryville train to go to Rogersville Junction, where I had an evening appointment. I was met at the Junction by some bretheren who conveyed me to the meeting house, (Whitehorn,) where I continued until Monday noon, when I again took the train for Jonesborough, where I was met by my son at 5 p. m., with my horse, to convey me home, where I arrived about 7 o'clock, and found all well. Thank the Lord for his goodness.

JESSE CROSSWHITE.

Dear Brethren: Being alone this morning I will make an attempt to contribute to the C. F. C., though I am aware of my inability. I will willingly leave it to the option of the editor to publish or reject.—Knowing that brother Holsinger is accountable to the church and to God for what he publishes. I feel that the church should appeal to God, to give wisdom to those who bear glad tidings in a public capacity, to the sons and daughters of Adam: and especially to those who have charge of the press, that they may be able to decide between good and evil, and that which is best calculated to be spread over the length and breadth of the land. Yet the publishers should not depend on the church alone, but with much prayer and fasting expect God to deal liberally. 1st. Kings 5: 12; James 1: 5.

When I arose from my couch this morning, I could look in any direction, and all seemed clean and white; the earth is bound with ice and snow. O the snow! how pure and white, without a visible spot or blemish. It is too pure and white to be trodden down with out feet.—But alas! how soon its pureness is spoiled by the interruption of other bodies. In this way my thoughts were carried to the dear infants, who are pure, fit subjects for the kingdom. Mark 10: 14. But like unto the pure snow, their purity becomes defiled by the interposition of other bodies; yea, a mother, or father, brother or sister may be instrumental in giving the pure body an impure appearance. Dear sisters; do you, or can you ask God's blessing upon you and yours, when you decorate the little ones with all the fashions of the day: and thereby fill their little hearts with pride? Let us consider our relationship to him with whom we have to do, as we are living in a fast age, so that when our summons come to join the innumerable caravan, we may be prepared to meet him, "who shall come the second time without sin unto salvation." Is it not worth denying ourselves any seeming pleasure, to gain the smiles of heaven, to meet the approbation of God; and, in the end enjoy the happy privileges that are promised to all those that love his appearing. Let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race that is set before us. The sin of unbelief, oh! it makes my heart ache to see so many turning to the allureing evils which are prevalent in the world. Be it remembered that the things of this world are transitory and will soon pass away. "Which the wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein," Isa. 35: 8—it seems that many are leaving the narrow path to pluck flowers by the wayside, expecting to return again. I would call the attention of such to the days of Jeroboam, when he made priests contrary to the directions of God. The Lord specified, the qualifications: and beside this they must belong to the royal priesthood. Take notice, the Lord's prophet who made manifest to Jeroboam the consequence of his wickedness. (1st Kings 13: 3) after he became weary and rested under an oak, verse 14) he was there induced by the lying prophet to withdraw from the Lord's path to partake of that which (in his imagination) appeared pleasant. What follows? Read 24th verse. To us it is said the soul that sins shall die, and those that forget God shall share with the unbelievers.

Then let our aim and object be,
For Jesus' precious face to see.
To-morrow! mortal, boast not though
Of time and tide that are not now;
But think, in one revolving day,
How earthly things may pass away.

MOLLIE GIBBON

Linganore, Md.

Brother Holsinger: I feel like writing a little for the Companion, and hope it will not be lost labor. You request church news, which no doubt all love to hear; especially when in a prospering condition. Yet I cannot say that we are advanced in our spiritual welfare as we should be, on account of disappointments, made by brethren who were to come and preach for us the first of January. I wish to inform those brethren that we have arrived at many conclusions with regard to their not coming; yet we cannot but think that Providential occurrences hindered.

There are but few brethren here, and we are compelled to attend other churches, or stay at home: except once a month, we have preaching, if it is possible for a brother to come thirty or forty miles; if not, we wait till the next month, and perhaps meet the same fate.

It seems that, when as high as eight or ten speakers will attend one meeting, and four or five speak, one after the other, until the patience of worldlings is so wearied that they declare they will not go to "Dunkard" meeting again, it were better if some would go where they are needed.

Brethren, do you all do your duty, those who scarcely ever go from your immediate vicinity to preach? Some do, I know they have become servants of God, and have their fruit unto holiness, and the end, eternal life. We had anticipated a season of spiritual refreshing, during the series of meetings the brethren proposed holding with us.

But alas! all our hopes were blighted when the hour for services arrived, with a large audience, and, to our surprise, no speaker Imagine our anxiety, when the people are frequently inquiring to know when those preachers are coming, and tell us, if ten dollars or more were ready for them, as other preachers get, they would not fail to come.

Brethren, let not the world have occasion to say that we are grasping only for earthly treasures. When appointments are made, meet them; let nothing but sickness or death hinder. We think much good might be done here at this time. The people hear but little preaching and appear anxious to hear the doctrines of our Lord. Brethren, ministers, who will be first to respond, and grant us a series of meetings? We need it just now.

We hope it will be those brethren by whom we were disappointed, if congenial, and suitable for them. They will thus aid us in advancing the cause of Christ in this part of God's moral heritage. Any brother who can, come and help us.

Gleanings from Subscribers.

The tobacco question has not frightened me away from the Companion. I think the subject needs still harder pressing, for it is a little like the Queen of Sheba, said to Solomon; much has been told us of the evils of it, but the half has never been told that can in truth be said about it.

JOHN FORNEY SR.

I fear that brethren are finding fault with the paper on account of the advertisements in the C. F. C. I think we have much good reading matter, and very few advertisements. Come, brethren, let us have charity.

JOHN H. STAGER.

It seems as though one member of our family has been missing since the Companion has stopped coming. I miss it so much, I cannot do without it. The brethren and sisters here are well, except brother Joseph B. Bashor's wife: I fear she will never recover. We ask the prayers of the brethren and sisters in her behalf.

DIED.

In the Swan Creek branch, Lucas Co., O., MARY MYRTIE daughter of brother HENRY and sister MINERVA MANCHLEY, aged 7 months and 18 days. Funeral services by the writer from Matt. 19: 14.

AARON BERKEYBILE.

In the Aughwick branch, Huntingdon Co., Pa., February, 12th, sister CATHARINE Consort of brother John SPANOGLE; aged 54 years, 8 months, 6 days. Occasion improved by the brethren from 2 Tim. 4: 6, 7, 8, to a large congregation of people.

A. L. FUNK.

In the Pleasant Valley church, Washington county Tenn., Dec. 26th 1870, sister ELIZABETH KEBLER; aged 37 years, 5 months, and 19 days. She died in the triumphs of a living faith, and bid all her kindred and friends meet her in heaven.

J. B. PENCE.

In Westmoreland county Pa., January 19, William BAKER; aged about 61 years and 9 months. The subject of this notice was blind for the last few years, and died at the house of friend Daniel Baker, near Jone's Mills, Pa. The occasion was improved by the writer from the words, "Set thy house in order."

D. D. HORNER.

In the Aughwick branch, Huntingdon Co., Pa., January 3d, PAUL WITSAL; aged 83 years and 3 days. Funeral service by the brethren.

In the same branch, January 16th, DILLIA M. MILLER, only child of Jacob and Ellen Miller; aged 1 month. Occasion improved by the brethren.

In the same branch, Feb. 1st, sister ELIZABETH BLOCHER; aged 76 years, and 17 days. Funeral service by the brethren.

Sister Blocher was formerly from Adams county, Pa. A. L. FUNK.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in the Woodstock Branch, Shenandoah Co. Va., January 30th, brother ISAAC GOCHENOUR; aged 46 years, 3 months, and 6 days. He leaves an affectionate wife and four dutiful children to mourn their loss; but they are not alone in their grief, the church feels that one of its devoted members, has gone to join the disembodied spirits, and his well attended seat is vacant in the house of the Lord, and his voice will be heard no longer leading his brethren and sisters in the songs of Zion, and his presence will be seen no more in the earthly sanctuary where prayer is wont to be made. Though he labored for a long time under the afflicting hand of a chronic disease, yet he faithfully discharged the duties of his calling in the office of a deacon. We mourn not as those without hope. Words of comfort were spoken to a large concourse of people by Elders George and Samuel Shaver and J. Wakeman, from Philippians 1: 21

In the Aughwick branch Huntingdon Co. Pa. December 4th, 1870, SARAH E. BOOK, aged 1 year, 8 months, and 6 days.

In the same place December 5th 1870, Willie Book, aged 5 years, 11 months, and 1 day.

The above are all the children of brother Isaac and sister MARY BOOK. We truely condole our bereaved brother and sister, and their family, but we need not sorrow as those who have no hope. The Lord gave, and the Lord taketh away, and blessed be his holy name. JOHN G. CLOCK.

In the Upper Twin-creek branch, February 1st, of Consumption, sister MARY SWIHART, wife of brother James Swihart, (deacon) and daughter of Elder Daniel Miller in Preble county, Ohio; aged 42 years, 4 months and 28 days. She left a kind husband and three children to mourn the loss of one that was much loved by all who knew her. By her request the funeral occasion was improved from 2 Tim. 4: 6-8, by Samuel Garber, and Nathan Haywood, to a large concourse of people. NOAH MILLER.

Visitor please copy.

In the Range Branch, Hart county, Ind., Dec., 15, 1870, WILLIE, son of Harvy and —— PLY, aged 12 years. Disease fever. The occasion was improved by Brethren Senour and the writer.

In the same branch near Wakarusa, Jan. 17, JOHN RITZMAN, aged 71 years. Disease, lung fever. Funeral services from Heb. 13: 14, by the writer.

JOHN METZLER.

In the Quemahoning branch, Somerset Co., Pa., Jan. 30, sister ELIZABETH PETERSON, aged 75 years, 7 months and 28 days. Her disease was cancer. She suffered great pain, but endured it with much patience. Funeral services by Elder Tobias Blough and the writer from Phill. 1: 21.

In the Indiana Creek branch, Westmoreland county, Pa., Nov. 1st, 1870, MARY SOPHIA, daughter of brother Jeremiah and sister Lydia FOUST, aged 1 year, 6 months, and 7 days. The funeral occasion was improved by Eld. Soseph Berger and brother Jonas Bennet, from Lu. 18: 16.

In the same branch, Dec. 29th, 1870, infant son of brother David D. and sister Mary HORNER, aged 1 month and 7 days. His days on earth were few, like those of the lovely, blooming flowers. The funeral occasion was improved by the writer.

Also, in the same branch, Jan. 18th, 1871, our aged brother WILLIAM MURRAY, departed this life, aged almost 67 years. He was called to the ministry in the prime of life. He has not preached much for the last few years; but he earnestly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints. His disease was fever. He bore his affliction with patience. He has left a widowed mother, 4 sons and 2 daughters, with Many friends to mourn their loss. On the 21st he was taken to the Indian Creek church, where the occasion was improved by Eld. Burger and the brethren from 2 Cor. 5: 1-21; after which his remains were taken to their resting place, followed by a large concourse of people.

Also in the same branch, Jan. 25th, ISAAC youngest son of friend Peter and sister Regeno SMITH, aged 2 years, and 5 months.—Disease croup Occasion improved by the writer. J. FOUST.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

The Barberism of Christendom.

Considering that last christmas day was the eighteen hundred and sixty-ninth anniversary of the birth of Christ, (this article was written in 1870,) and that the religion he founded was above all things the religion of love, the condition of the christian world presents a curious spectacle. Some forty millions of German christians are helping in every way in their power to kill and maim a similar number of French christians. Large numbers of young French christians, too, are lying in wait behind hedges and in ditches, trying to shoot passing German christians in the head; and when German christians catch them, they shoot them through the head. Over half of France the christian churches are turned into hospitals for persons whom their brother christians have horribly gashed and mutilated.

In another quarter of Europe, Russian christians announce their determination to kill and maim any number of Latin Christians, besides Mohammedens, that may be necessary in order to secure themselves the privilege of keeping in the Black Sea as many instruments for destroying human life and property as they think proper; and the Latin Christians reply that they will, in turn, slaughter any number of Greek Christians sooner than submit to anything of the kind.

Over here we do not at present propose to kill anybody, but it is only a few weeks since a notorious Massachusetts Christian got up and calmly proposed, as a means of making political capital for the party, that American Christians generally should go to killing English and Canadian Christians, and destroying their property, on account of a certain sum of money. To a Heathen looking on from the vantage ground of centuries of civilization and christianity, the whole thing, the war and the talk, would be as good as a play.

Believing the above to be a true representation of degenerate humanity, I thought I would copy and send it for publication in the Companion. Is it not strange how professed followers of the Prince of peace disgrace their calling, by imbruing their hands in one another's blood? Do they by this confirm the declaration of their Savior: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one toward another?" A strange declaration of love, to kill one another. Such is loving only in word, (hardly that,) instead of loving indeed, as the beloved Apostle John admonishes the brethren to love.

A Few Words to Sinners.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.—Matt. 11: 28-30.

Sinner, are you laboring under sin? Do the cares of this world and the riches thereof, seem more precious than Jesus? If so, you had better stop and think, before you fall into darkness. Hear what Jesus says: "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." Does not sin make you feel weary? And at night when you are upon your bed, you try to sleep, but cannot. How often do you think, were you to die to-night, where would I awake? You have no rest now; no, none. Jesus says come unto me, and I will give you rest. Oh! what a sweet rest, rest in hope of being one of Christ's disciples.

Sinner, out of Christ there is no promise. You cannot claim that rest in disobedience. You must take the yoke upon you and learn of him. Then it is that you shall find rest to your souls. Some people make a profession of the word; but it is only in word, no fatal hope, and is found to be dead. Jesus says, If ye love me, keep my commandments. You see there is a work to be done. It is faith with the works is dead. You must leave sin and believe the Gospel, and obey the same, or you cannot really find rest for the soul.

Sinner, death is around you, calling some there by sickness, some by accident, and others by age. Oh! think that the next may be you—and unprepared! Oh! come to Jesus, ere you perish, and he will save you. He will take away your sins, and you will have rest.

Do not think that there is no pleasure in serving the blessed Master. There are pleasures in serving him that the world can't give nor take away. Just look for a moment at the children of God, and see their pleasures. They are the children of the Most High, there is love, joy, peace, holiness there. Then look at the sinner. What do you see there? pride, malice, ungodliness, foolishness, and all manner of wickedness, which must shortly have an end. you will either have to end it yourself, or God will end it. It will be a terrible end. You will have to sink down to that miserable place called hell; and in it there is no rest! But hear what Christ says about that place: "There shall be weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth." And again, the rich man was not content with it. Yes, though he was tormented in flames, and would a drop of water to cool his parched tongue. [illegible] that he could get a drop of water. You'll pay too late to draw water from the wells of salvation. His doom was sealed.

Reader, I love your souls. Remember, if you do not turn to the Lord and will live and die in your sins, you must take up your abode "where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

Dreadful thought will it be to dwell with the devil and his angels, while [illegible] and you repent. There is [illegible] Jesus is coming soon [illegible] Now is the day of salvation.

Remember now Thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while [illegible] come, and the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them. Turn the word of the Lord. I love to answer [illegible] and ye shall be my [illegible] Oh! to be in [illegible] how [illegible] watches over you. When you are asleep, he keeps you safe; and all you have comes from him. And are you not willing to obey his calls? Why it is no wonder he is angry with the sinner every day. But turn to him, he loves you. He gave his Son for you. Yes, he came into this world and died that you may live. And if you love this blessed Jesus and keep his commandments, you shall enjoy his presence forever; for he has gone to prepare a mansion for you, that where he is, there you may be also. O blessed thought of living in Heaven. Where there is no sickness, no pain, no death; where God shall wipe every tear from our eyes! There we will only appreciate the blessedness of serving God. Come, then, before it is too late, and while you may obtain that rest: for "there remaineth a rest for the people of God."

"Hasten sinner to be wise;
Stay not for the morrow's sun;
Wisdom if you still despise,
Harder is it to be won.

Eternal Salvation—How to Obtain It.

"And being made perfect, He became the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him." Hebrews 5: 9.

The subject of salvation, though very apparent to seekers after divine truth, is one of vast importance. The word "salvation" means deliverance, and not a whit more. Before the time of Christ there were many instances of salvation by the miraculous power of God. We will however say but little upon the subject of salvation prior to Christ, but will lead you in another direction. It is upon the subject of eternal deliverance—the great Gospel plan of salvation delivered by Jesus Christ himself—that we shall make a few suggestions for the careful consideration of our readers.

Salvation, previous to Christ, did not, neither could it, meet the general wants of fallen humanity. The salvation of the Hebrews at the Red Sea, and of the Antediluvians, was only temporary in that it only saved them from sudden death and destruction. To make anything else out of it, we would do injustice to the salvation by Jesus Christ. Eternal salvation—a salvation that would forever harmonize humanity with divinity—place Finite and Infinite both into one sphere—could meet the wants of depraved humanity through none other than the efficacy of Christ's blood. He, "being made perfect," could, and did, "become the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him." To all them that obey him. This phrase which we have from the pen of the inspired apostle, will place forever upon a baseless foundation all Universalian and Unitarian creeds.

Having briefly noticed the impossibility of salvation without Christ in it, or it by Christ, we now purpose to show that without obedience, salvation is not promised. We cannot infer from any of the epistles of that learned and eminent Apostle, that salvation was attainable without obedience. "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" shows that something is demanded from the recipient, in order to obtain eternal salvation; and all who have a knowledge of the conditions of salvation before the incarnation of the Son of God, know that it could only be obtained by obedience. Had not the Hebrews obeyed the voice of Moses ere they arrived at the Red Sea, or even afterwards when they received the command to "go forward," they would not have been saved, but would have fallen a prey to the enemy, or, have been buried beneath the waves of the briny deep. We might also notice other instances to prove our position in arguing this point, but will let the foregoing suffice. Our object is to give the skeptic a death blow, and must come a little closer the subject; yet we hope that none of our readers are such. If we thought the skeptic's position a safe one, God forbid that we should say anything against it. But, that inspiration should place the atheist or skeptic and the christian both into Christ's yoke is a matter of incredibility. Where are the inspired Apostles? What have they done? Have not they clearly set forth the conditions of salvation? Have they not passed from time to eternity, and that, too, by the cruel hand of skepticism? O inconsistency! inconsistency! where art thou not? To maintain that mortal man shall obtain eternal salvation without respect to God and obedience to his Son, will exalt man, and abase his Redeemer. All that the Creator did to rescue fallen man, was to place within his reach the means whereby he could work out his own salvation. Indeed it would have been a great pity, had God permitted man to die as he is prone to live, & then give him an existence in eternity, there to live in sorrow throughout its unceasing ages as he lived while clothed with mortality, and while forming character void of the Holy Spirit and all the qualities necessary to make him happy, whilst surrounded with the magnificent works of the Deity, and in the presence of him whose wisdom and goodness the universe can but contain. Though life's sorrows are great, the effusion of the Holy Spirit upon the soul will fill the hearts of the obedient with ineffable joy, until they arrive at their glorious destiny which awaits them, there to continually enjoy happiness begun on earth.

Hence what will truly beautify the soul while in its house of clay, will make it happy while inside the magnificent walls of Zion. Who are they that fail to enjoy life? Are they not those who have not a cheerful view of what pertains to future bliss, and that, too, because they would procure salvation without seeking for it? If such be the case, we can come to no other conclusion than that they hold the plan of salvation as of but minute importance. Don't know whether they would enjoy heaven or not. True, such is the case. Shall corruption inherit incorruption? Verily no. Neither shall the wicked then mar the peace of the righteous. Oh! why is humanity in this enlightened age so blinded! Was not disobedience the whole cause of human suffering? We must admit that it was; but through obedience to Christ, "the author of eternal salvation," we can come to that sphere of bliss, where sorrows cannot enter, and where suffering is unknown.

Dear readers, you who have heretofore estimated the plan of salvation of but little consequence, can you not yet see the importance of it? Would you not rather take the wings of salvation, faith and obedience, and fly away and be at rest, "where the wicked cease from troubling" than to be hurled where "the wicked shall be tormented" forever? With what fear shall ye meet him in eternity whom ye would rather not now see! But submit to the will of God who holds in his mighty hand the thread of your being, and his appointed time will then be your time. The way of salvation is not so hard as you may think. Christ through his sufferings has made it comparatively easy. To obey God in all his appointed ways, will plant his Holy Spirit in your souls, cause his image to shine through yours and thus move all darkness from your pathways, that you may behold in everything that God has created, his love, wisdom, and goodness, until you arrive safely in that peaceful clime, illuminated with the presence of the Deity himself, and the Son of God at his right hand, "who has become the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him."

Self-denial.

"Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Matt. 16: 24

This is a subject worthy of our attention. It seems that if any would follow Jesus, they must deny themselves and take up their cross. Now comes the question, what is that? The Apostle says, "knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed." Now I think our old man means our nature, or carnal mind. I wish here to be understood that our nature of itself is not sinful, but only subject to sin. If we believe our nature is sin, we will destroy the faith in the atonement, and would believe with some others that our infant children die in sin. Now I believe we are sinners by transgression, and not any more by nature or inheritance. All that come to a knowledge of God's will, can see at once that their nature leads them away from God, or into transgression, which is sin; and will do so until they crucify that nature themselves, and bring it into subjection to the will of God, which is righteousness. We need not wait for God to do all the work: when we have willingly transgressed, we should willingly repent, or cease to sin; and this we will never do while we let nature have its way. We may, however, change some of our habits, and think we have fully reformed; but if we are not able to control our whole nature, we may begin to think the old man is not yet fully crucified. I have had conversation with different persons in regard to the manner of worship and faith in the gospel, and it is not uncommon for them to become angry as soon as their manner of worship or faith is spoken against. Although they believe their hearts have been changed by divine grace, yet they will follow the inclinations of their own corrupt nature. But I must come home to our own brethren, I have read the "Visitor" and Companion from their origin; and have seen much fire kindled which I thought ought not to have been, if the old man had been kept in full subjection, especially about politics and tobacco. I think, if our American continent were looked over from sea to sea, and the annals of history ever since we are a nation, there could not any other two subjects be found so completely wrapped in with the carnal nature, and so useless as well as opposite to Christianity; but only nature's slaves, and yet, as soon as there is a word spoken against either, there are some brethren already offended. What does this prove to the church, or to the world at large? If it is true that the church of Christ is the light of the world, or as a city that is set on a hill, there must be something to show that fact to the world; and the world should see it in every member. The brethren in an early day, were very particular and zealous in the wearing of the apparel in a style separate from the world, which I glory and rejoice in and think it should ever continue so; and I feel sorry that it is so fast depreciating; and yet they overlooked and allow these unnecessary habits in the church. Now, in this late age of the church, it is not much worth while to speak against these things that nature clings to so closely, when some brethren would much rather gratify their nature than the wishes of the church.

A few years ago, when the brethren were contending against political voting, I was in hopes they would make it a test of church fellowship; believing that we would not lose many in number, but receive a heavenly blessing. But the tobacco question is different. Brethren and sisters are so engaged in the use of tobacco, that its use has become stronger than their minds; and many would rather leave the church than the use of tobacco. Now, the minister of the Gospel, who wishes the increase and progress of the church—with how much greater zeal and power, could he call to a sinful world to leave all unrighteousness and unnecessary habits, and come to the church that he knew was free from them? I have expressed myself at different times that if the church could be freed from the use of tobacco, I would give a thousand dollars; so that we could show to the world that we have crucified the old man, and thereby give more proof of our profession. Now, I think our brethren should think of these things. If they are so determined not to quit the use of tobacco themselves, they should, at least, not speak in favor of it, and give encouragement to a rising generation. What I have written is for our consideration and the advancement of the kingdom of Christ on earth.

A History of the Popes.

The Neue Freie Presse of Vienna sums up in the following severe terms the history of the Popes:

"From St. Peter (in supposing that he ever was at Rome) to Pius IX. there have been 297 Popes, including 24 Anti-Popes, and one Female Pontiff; 19 of them left Rome, and 35 reigned in foreign countries; 8 ruled a month only; 40, one year; 32, two years; 54, five; 51, fifteen; 18, twenty; and nine only for a longer period. Among the 297, 31 were declared to be usurpers and heretics. Out of 266 legitimate, 64 died a violent death; that is to say, 18 were poisoned, and four strangled, the rest perishing in other ways. Independent of the Popes of Avignon, 26 Pontiffs were deposed, expelled, and banished from Rome; 28 others could only maintain themselves by the aid of the foreigner. Out of the whole number 15, or more than half, showed themselves unfit for their office; 6, in spite of their vows, had children. Leo IV., it is said, was a woman. Urban V. confessed his infallibility, and submitted to the censures of a Council; two other Popes, Victor III. and Adrian VI. confessed in public that they had sinned, &c. Certain it is that in this long history of Christ's vicars, note may be taken of frequent absences of the Holy Spirit."

If we would be pleased by [illegible] for it is with words as with sunbeams—the more they are condensed the deeper they burn.

For the Companion.

To the alarmed but unconverted, in the Community of the Berlin Church, Somerset Co., Pa.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

This is, in a gracious sense, "the time of your visitation." The Eternal Father has "visited his people" in your midst with a special outpouring of His Spirit, quickening them to more searching self-scrutiny, and greater zeal in their efforts to reclaim sinners, and blessing their endeavors in the conversion of many who a short time ago were, with you, "in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity." Your own hearts have been wrought upon by the Divine Agent whose office it is to "convince of sin," and you are sufficiently awakened to see that impenitence merits a terrible doom, and that "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." Some of you have such a view of your moral defilement, and such a sense of Divine displeasure on account of it, that it can be exceeded only by the torments of the damned.—In the light which has been shed upon you, Heaven and earth beseech you to begin the all-important task of "working out your own salvation with fear and trembling." God has signified his readiness to "work in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure," and if you neglect the present opportunity to secure the advantages which abounding grace offers, you incur sevenfold guilt, proclaim to Heaven and earth and hell that you count the precious blood of Jesus unworthy of comparison with the honors and gains of the world, and the ease and pleasures of the flesh, and "treasure up unto yourselves wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God." While others, whose attachments to what is fleeting and forbidden were as strong as yours—who had no less to lose and no more to gain than you,—have forsaken all for Christ, and pressed into the kingdom, you are still balancing the claims of God and the joys and glories of salvation, against the applause and preferments of the world, and the low, shortlived enjoyments of sense. Your condition is extremely perilous. You stand on the narrow isthmus that divides consecration to God and devotion to the interests of time, Heaven and hell. Your eternal destiny may hang on your present decision.—To not a few of you this will unquestionably prove the solemn truth. "What thou doest, do quickly," is the emphatic behest of Heaven; and the manner in which you pass this momentous crisis, will either "seal you unto the day of redemption," or rivet body and soul with the fetters which you must clank in the prison of damnation forever. All Heaven is expectant as to the result of the Divine mercy in your conviction of sin; and the church of Christ is bearing you perpetually to the mercy-seat in the arms of prayer, with intense yearning for your accession to their number. And we may with reason believe that all hell is anxious and active to defeat the gracious purpose of God in awakening you to a sense of your guilt and danger. Oh, did you know the unutterable interests at stake in the treatment of your serious impressions—could you gain a glimpse of the eternal joy or woe which must date from this opening year of grace 1871,—could you see in your present visitation the awful occasion which is to stamp the irrevocable seal of Eternity upon your immortality, you could no more be induced to remain one hour longer in the bondage of curruption and under the curse of the Almighty, than be undecided in a house in flames which is momentarily threatening to crash to the ground a mass of fiery ruin.

There is a deep, startling signification in the words, "the hour is come;" "for this cause came I unto this hour;" "this is your hour." This is emphatically and solemnly true to you. Every responsible creature is bound to do the will of God, being so constituted as to find his happiness in such service, and this is your "high calling,"—not to-morrow, but to-day. Two words comprise all that concerns you for time and Eternity, and have in them all the weight of the Godhead, in his "power to save and to destroy." They are these: "COME, NOW." All the wondrous arrangements of God's wisdom, and wondrous exhibitions of his power and love, in all his dispensations in Heaven and on earth, concentrate in the present crisis of your life.—All that transpired in a by-gone Eternity in the conference of the Holy Trinity—all that was felt and thought and purposed and sacrificed in Heaven when the Second Person in the Godhead became flesh—all that was achieved and endured in the life and death of Incarnate Deity—all the fullness of grace and powe rlove and which the Holy Ghost bore to earth from the bosom of the Godman—all that the Triune Deity ever did for a guilty, rebellious, accursed race, is connected with your present hour of conviction. To convince of sin and save of sin, sum up all the purposes and accomplishments of God. All that Jehovah has purposed, and the Son excuted, has been committed to the Spirit for the consummation of the great work of redemption in the calling, conversion, and sanctification of the individual sinner. And the function of the Holy Spirit is manifest in your case, in the deep revulsion of feeling in relation to sin, in the sharp upbraidings of conscience, in the irrepressible anguish that rends your inner being, in "the terrors of the Lord" which shake your soul as with a tempest of wrath, in the fearful quarrel you have with yourself on account of sin, and with God on account of his hatred of it and threatenings against it. "Your hour is come;" this is "the time of your visitation." Suffer this to pass unimproved, and you are already numbered with the wretched multitude whose doom human language cannot depict. There is a crisis in every life that determines the ever-future. It reaches the deepest elements of our being, and stereotypes them for Heaven or hell. There is a moment that turns the scale for Eternity, when the Holy Spirit has thrust the arrow of conviction into the soul's finest and inmost sensibility, and we make choice of "the reproach of the cross," or the treasures and pleasures of earth. All the varied and unspeakable mercies of God for you and to you, contemplated this hour, and He will "see of the travail of his soul" in your emancipation from sin, or you will see and feel the horror that whelmed Him in Gethsemane, and the agony unutterable that flooded His soul from Heaven and Hell on the cross. There was a point in His life to which everything comerged, and on which everything depended: "the hour is come;" "for this cause came I unto this hour." So with us all. Your hour is now. Conversion is not an isolated event, any more than the great transaction in the life of Christ which makes conversion possible. All that went before, of Divine influence and its results, is taken up in it, and carried forward into the sanctified state. You cannot reasonably expect occasions more favorable than the present for the great transition from guilt and condemnation to holiness and justification. Your hour is come, and you are to find in it almighty strength to deliver you, and infinite love to pardon. This is God's hour in your behalf, and it is your hour as probably the only opportunity of availing yourselves of the offers of salvation; and you cannot allow this season of grace to pass into indifference and coldness without mocking God, insulting the sufferings of His Only Begotten Son, grieving the Holy Spirit, branding the work of hell deeper into your soul, and rendering your ultimate salvation extremely problematical. It may be now or never! In the face of all opposing motives you are to decide for God and holiness and eternal life.

That the glorious work now progressing in your community is of God, you cannot but admit. That it has affected but not saved you, quickened to a sense of sin but not of peace, you are painfully conscious. While others have been "plucked as brands from the burning," and now rejoice in "the glorious liberty of the children of God," You are still aliens and strangers, desiring deliverance, yet unwilling to "escape the judgment of God" on the terms proposed in the Gospel. The remarkable manifestation of Divine power, the exhibition of Divine tenderness and love in calling and pardoning so large a number of sinners at the same time and in the same place, and all this before your eyes, with the same offers of mercy tendered you, not only leaves you without excuse, but renders your hesitation and delay a sin of fearful magnitude. The bread of life has not only been brought to your door but held to your lips, and you have been earnestly entreated by Christ and His ambassadors, to put forth your hands and partake of the blessing, and "make your calling and election sure." But you stand today outside the Ark of Grace, unreconciled to God, and exposed to the deluge of fiery indignation which will sweep all the uncovenanted into bottomless perdition. If you refuse to come to an immediate and positive decision in a matter so plain and imperative, and followed by such unspeakably glorious consequences, God will hasten the day in which he will decide for you, by putting forth his sickle to gather you as tares and briers for the "everlasting burnings." As great and marvelous as is the mercy of God in making you sensible of your need of a Savior, and offering you Heaven and eternal glory as a free gift, so great will be your tribulation and anguish of heart on your death-bed, when repentance will merge into despair, and every encouraging aspect of Deity will be lost in the vivid presentation of what is terrible and relentless and consuming in the Divine Character. To continue in sin under such extraordinary advantages and wonderful tokens of God's presence, and displays of mercy, is to "sear the conscience as with a hot iron," to harden the heart and stiffen the neck against future appeals and means of grace, and prepare for yourselves a hell equal in torment to the depth and intensity of God's love for your rescue, and the greatness of His sacrifice to make His love available, and the many opportunities and pressing invitations given you to escape from the undying worm and unquenchable flame. As great as would have been your joy in the immunities and beatitude of the kingdom of God, so intolerable will be your punishment in the realm of woe.

What response do you return to these heart-piercing, soul-quaking considerations? With Heaven and Hell unveiled, and endless bliss and misery brought into appalling proximity, and the present hour offered as the time in which to seal the great, irreversible transaction, will you turn your back on Christ, deliberately choose "the beggarly elements of the world," and be content with the coarse, sapless husks of sense? God forbid. With "strong crying and tears," with holy violence and unsparing self-crucifixion, unclasp your affections from every thing perishable, and entwine them around the cross and the glories to which it leads. What keeps you from immediate and unreserved consecration to God? Are the pleasures of sin so sweet that holiness tastes insipid? Is "the man of sin" so fascinating that Christ seems "without form or comeliness?" Is the drudgery of Satan so delectable, and the companionship of sinners so delightful, that the service of God is a galling weariness, and the fellowship of the saints an unbearable vapidity? Does not a faithful inspection of the heart bear affirmative testimony to these interrogations? Oh, "the deceitfulness of sin," and the "desperate wickedness" of the human heart! How can you, awakened by God's Spirit, steadily and soberly contemplate the nature and consequences of sin for one hour —your relation to God as a sinner, your constant liability to death, and the abyss of dire ruin into which you would sink were you to be called hence in your present state,—without having your whole being convulsed with apprehensions of the wrath of God? Your salvation is made the subject of importunate prayer by many of the elect. Those who have lately been restored to holiness are wrestling in prayer for your enrollment with the pilgrims of the cross, and the inscription of your name in the Book of life. How long will it be ere you make Heaven and earth rejoice by your acceptance of the overture of mercy? Fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, friends and neighbors, would unite in a song of thanksgiving, were you to enter the ark that is floating them to the evergreen shores of Paradise. The angels would strike their harps with rapture, and roll a joyous halleluiah along the dome of the Celestial Temple. They would not defer their anthem till you had passed through the threefold crystal gate into the church militant, but as soon as you would "repent unto life" they would break forth in a jubilation that would swell like an ocean of billowy harmony from heaven to heaven. Can you ponder all this, and not sink down upon God's footstool in profound self-abasement and unqualified submission to "the Father of Spirits?" But if you continue in sin, all this will be reversed. Parents and friends will weep, angels be amazed, the Spirit grieved and quenched, Jesus rejected, His blood despised, God dishonored and provoked, the sword of justice furbished, the vial of vengeance filled to overflowing, and your soul given to the dominion of evil to be ripened for the great conflagration! A momentous alternative—a deliverance of "joy unspeakable and full of glory," or a catastrophe of endless, unmitagated, ever-deepening horror! "Escape for your lives," "look not behind you," "flee to the mountain" before the descending "fire and brimstone" overtake you, before death drives the bolt that shuts the door of mercy forever! "Flee from the wrath to come." Oh, those unutterably fearful words: "the wrath to come"—"the wrath of the Lamb!" "I beseech you, in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." Halt no longer "between two opinions." Advance not another step hell-ward. Lose sight of every other object in the contemplation of Golgotha, sin, death, judgment, eternity. "Suffer the loss of all things, so that you may win Christ." There is no neutrality in religion. "He that is not with me is against me." Compromise is the back door to hell. "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" "The Spirit and the Bride say, COME."

The Ungodly and the Sinner.

BY NOAH LONGANECKER.

Does the Bible make a distinction between the ungodly and sinner? Ungodly men are always sinners, but sinners, are not always ungodly men. A few evenings ago I listened to a homily on Psalm 1 : 5, in which the minister affirmed that there was no difference between the ungodly and sinners; and as others hold similar views, I will submit my views to the readers of the Companion, with the desire to edify, giving you to understand that I court information on all subjects.

I first refer you to the first Psalm. "The ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteousness." The use of the connective nor, as well as the manner of its use, does, in my estimation, make them out two different classes. But if there were no other passage in the Bible but the one in 1st Peter 4 : 18, namely, "where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?" I would be forced to the conclusion that there is a difference between the two characters. I once conversed with a professed minister on the language of Christ, when he says "born of the water and of the Spirit," and when I asked him what Christ meant when he said "born of the water," he remarked he meant that we must be baptized with the Spirit, and that the reason he believed so, was, because the spirit was frequently referred to, figuratively, by the term water. Now, while I admit the last to be so, I can never consent to the former. Such tautological language does not become the Bible, for it would involve us in many difficulties never to be removed.—Born of the Spirit and of the Spirit! two baptisms of the Spirit. But to my subject, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? While I admit that sinners shall not stand in the congregation of the righteous, yet I must believe that there will be a marked difference between them and the ungodly.

I will yet refer to a few passages in the Bible and then give my conclusions of those referred to. Paul says that the law is made for the ungodly and sinner; what use for this repitition, of the same? Again, in Jude we read of "ungodly sinner," and by a careful examination we will find that they denied the only Lord God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and they spake against him, to use Jude's own language, with hard speeches. There are those in the world that fear God, but do not keep his commandments,—who believe he is, who never speak of God, or of his word, but with fear and respect, and acknowledge all to be true; but while they know to do good, and do it not, it is sin to them; and if they neglect so great salvation, how shall they escape? I admit that sinners, as well as the righteous, will be gathered before the Judgment seat of Christ; but while the righteous, or sheep, will be on the right, the sinners will be on the left. Compare Matt. 25, with Rev. 20. But while the sinners spoken of in these passages may have brass enough to stand on his left during the judgment, Rev, 20 : 12, the ungodly will not have even that brass, but knowing their doom, they cannot bring one plea like those referred to in Matt. 7 : 22, and Luke 13th, but merely await there final doom of being tormented day and night for ever and ever. The Bible everywhere teaches that men will be judged "according to their works," and judging from the doom pronounced on the ungodly, they committed crimes above those of the sinner referred to in the above named passages. The ungodly then must be the Atheist, the Infidel, those who deny the existence of God, and those who deny Christ to be the Savior, God manifest in the flesh; while another class will have so much respect for Christ that they will do the disciples of Christ good, because they belong to Christ, and they shall in no wise lose their reward, yet they have neglected their salvation, and how shall they escape, where shall they appear? Holy God, "thou art of purer eyes than to be-

Holy God, "thou art of purer eyes than to beho'd evil, and canst not look on iniquity; therefore may we be holy because thou art holy. If the reader be familiar with the different stages of the Judgment, let him compare the connections of Matt. 25th chapter. What I have written, I have written. Prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. 9.

THE PASSOVER TYPICAL.

The typical import of the passover is worthy of a more detailed notice than we have yet given it. Of all the types, in the legal services under the Mosaic dispensation, there is none more striking than that of the passover, which was typical of "Christ our Passover," who "is sacrificed for us." As a type we shall notice: 1. The living lamb; 2. The sacrificing of the passover; 3. The solemn feasting upon the passover.

1. The living lamb. "Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year: ye shall take it out from the sheep or from the goats." Ex. 12: 5. They were permitted to take either a lamb or a kid; but the sentence, "Your lamb shall be without blemish," seems to favor the use of lambs; and as Christ is frequently spoken of under the emblem of a Lamb and never under that of a kid, it would appear that lambs were generally preferred. Be this as it may, the victim was to be taken from that class of animals which was afterward pronounced clean, representing the chosen people of the Lord; and not from the unclean, which represented the Gentile nations. Thus was clearly taught in figure, what was also foretold by prophecy, that Christ should be the seed of Abraham: "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me: unto him shall ye hearken." Deut. 18: 15. See also the 18th. and 19th. verses: "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command them. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words, which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him." Peter in Acts 3: 20-23, applies this prophecy to Christ.

The type was to be "a male of the first year"—in its prime: thus Christ the antitype, was sacrificed in the prime of life—in the vigor of manhood; and not in his infancy with the babes at Bethlehem, nor at an old age when time and toil had wasted his human vitality and physical strength. It also denotes the strength and sufficiency of Christ, on whom was laid the iniquity of us all: who "hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows." (Isaiah 53: 4-9.)

It was to be without blemish—perfect, according to the standard of judging. This denoted the spotless purity of Christ, by whose precious blood, "as of a lamb without blemish and without spot," we have been redeemed from our "vain conversation, received by tradition" (1 Pet. 1: 18)—from the galling yoke of sin. No unholy, unjust, or evil thought, desire, word, or action, ever marred the perfection of the sinless, harmless, spotless Lamb of God: he was without blemish. In order to know whether the victims were without blemish, it was necessary to examine them closely; so was Christ examined before Caiaphas, Pilate, and Herod, and yet there was no fault found in the man: he was sacrificed, a victim without blemish, to bear the sins of many. Matth. 27: 24, Lu. 23: 4, 14, 15, 22, John 18: 38; 19: 4, 6, Hebrews 9: 28.

The lamb was to be set apart in the tenth day of the month, (Ex. 12: 3) which was in the fourth day preceding that in which it was to be sacrificed. This, counting a year for a day, would represent Christ's entrance upon his public ministry, which was in the fourth year before that in which he was sacrificed for us. Matthew Henry, according to the Comprehensive Commentary, understands this as "denoting the designation of the Lord Jesus to be a Savior both in the purpose and in the promise." He adds: "It is very observable, that, as Christ was crucified at the passover, so he solemnly entered into Jerusalem four days before, the very day that the Paschal lamb was set apart.

2. The sacrificing of the passover. This we understand as typifying the sacrificing of Christ; "for even Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us." 1 Cor. 5: 7

The passover was to be killed on the fourteenth day of the month. (Ex. 12: 14.) pointing out the precise day in which our Passover was to be sacrificed. It has been shown that the fourteenth day, the day on which the passover was killed, was called "the day of the preparation," and "the preparation of the passover;" but by examination we find that he was crucified on "the preparation of the passover"; therefore it follows that he was crucified on the fourteenth day of the month, the day on which the passover must be killed. Matthew speaks of the day following the day of the crucifixion, as follows: "Now the next day, that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate." Matth 27: 62. As the day "that followed the day of the preparation" was the next day after the crucifixion, the crucifixion was on "the day of the preparation;" but "the day of the preparation" was on the fourteenth day of the month, therefore Christ was crucified on the fourteenth day of the month, the same day on which the type was slain. This will be fully developed and demonstrated hereafter.

The passover was to be sacrificed "in the evening," or "between the two evenings." Ex. 12: 6. This time, as we have abundantly proven, referred to the middle of the afternoon, the ninth hour of the day. This pointed to the hour of the day in which the Lord Jesus, the great Passover, should yield up his life, have his blood shed, to prepare a token that the Lord may graciously pass over and save many that would otherwise be destroyed. "And about the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" And "Jesus when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the Ghost." Matth. 27: 46, 50. It is clear that he expired on the cross, not only on the day, but, also, at the very hour specified in the law for the sacrificing of the passover.

The first observance of the passover, in Egypt, was not commemorative; and as a test of fidelity and a condition of safety, there was nothing in it that would require these particular times to be enjoined for the selecting of the victims, and the killing of the passover; but as God has a purpose in all his appointments, and as he intended this sacrifice to be a type of Christ, he fixed the time of the most important services so as to meet, in point of time, the facts which they typified.

It was to be killed by "the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel." So in the sacrificing of Christ, "the whole multitude of them arose, and led him unto Pilate;" "And they cried out all at once, saying, Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas." Lu. 23: 1, 18. Peter in allusion to this, in addressing the "men of Israel," said: "The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified his son Jesus; whom ye delivered up and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go. But ye denied the Holy One, and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you; and killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses." Acts 3: 13-15. Also on the day of Pentecost the same apostle said: "Ye men of Israel hear these words: Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles, and wonders, and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know: Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." Acts 2: 22, 23.

In reference to the passover it was said: "Neither shall ye break a bone thereof." Ex. 12: 46: Num. 9: 12. This was expressly said to be fulfilled in Christ: "But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs; but one of the soldiers with a spear, pierced his side, and forthwith came thereout blood and water. * * * For these things were done that the scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken." John 19: 33-36.

"The sprinkling of the blood was typical. (1.) It was not enough that it was shed, but it must be sprinkled, denoting the application of the merits of Christ's death to our souls; we must receive the atonement. Rom 5: 11. (2.) It was to be sprinkled with a bunch of hyssop, (ver. 22.) dipped in the basin, denoting the benefits and privileges purchased by the blood of Christ. (3.) It was to be sprinkled on the door posts, denoting the open profession we are to make of faith in Christ, and obedience to him, as those that are not ashamed to own our dependence on him. (4.) It was to be sprinkled on the lintel and the side-posts, but not on the threshold; (ver. 7.) which cautions us to take heed of trampling under foot the blood of the covenant, Heb. 10: 29. It is precious, and must be precious to us. (5.) The blood thus sprinkled, was a mean of the preservation of the Israelites from the destroying angel, who had nothing to do there where the blood was. If the blood of Christ be sprinkled on our consciences, it will be our protection from the wrath of God, the curse of the law, and the damnation of hell. Rom. 8: 1."—Matthew Henry, in the Compreh. Commentary, on Ex. 12 chapter.

3. The solemn feasting upon the lamb, was typical of our duties and privileges under the Gospel of Christ. The lamb was not killed to be burnt, or thrown away, or merely to be looked upon, but to be fed upon: so we must by faith feed upon Christ, the slain Lamb, or we have no life in us. "Then said Jesus unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. As the living Father hath sent me, and as I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me." John 6: 52-57. As we receive nourishment from food, so we must receive spiritual nourishment from Christ by feeding on him; which we do by meditating upon, and heartily doing, his will. As he who is hungry delights in eating and drinking, so he who hungers and thirsts after righteousness, delights to feed upon Christ.

It was to be all eaten; and if any of it remained until morning, it was to be burned; it could be of no service to them afterward. (Ex. 12: 10.) So it is with those who by faith—a living faith—feed upon Christ: they must feed on an undivided Christ. "Is Christ divided?" 1 Cor. 1: 13. We must take, not only Christ and his crown, but also Christ and his yoke, Christ and his cross. We must not only live the life of Christ, but we must bear in our bodies the dying of our Lord. So says Paul: "Always bearing about in the body, the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus, might be made manifest in our body." 2 Cor. 4: 10. If we fail to feed upon Christ in the time appointed, thereafter Christ will profit us nothing.

"They were to eat the flesh, roasted with fire." This denotes the sufferings of Christ, and the afflictions and persecutions which attend a faithful feasting on him; for we must be partakers of his sufferings, if we would be the recipients of his consolation. (2 Cor 1 : 7.) "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing had happened unto you: but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." 1 Peter 4 : 12, 13.

It was to be eaten with unleavened bread. Leaven is used to denote corrupt doctrines, and also malice and wickedness; and unleavened bread, to denote sincerity and truth. Christ in warning his disciples against the corrupt doctrines of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees,said to them: "Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Phariseess and of the Sadducees, and of the Sadducees." Matth. 16 : 6. Paul also said; "Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us; therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." 1 Cor. 5 : 7, 8. In the performance of all our Christian duties, and in the enjoyment of all our Christian privileges, we must be sincere and upright in heart. The hypocrite's doom is lamentable in the extreme.

It was to be eaten "with bitter herbs," in remembrance of their bitter bondage in Egypt. So must we feast upon Christ with bitter, pungent sorrow and brokeness of heart, in remembrance of our rigorous service while in bondage to Satan. The remembrance of the bitterness of their bondage, rendered their liberty more pleasant, and the bitter herbs, the passover more palatable: so the remembrance of our wickedness and bondage to corruption, renders our liberty in Christ more delightful, and our feasting upon him, soul-satisfying.

It was to be eaten in haste, and in a departing posture. So should we eagerly feed upon Christ by partaking of the rich provisions furnished and offered to us in the Gospel; and with waiting, willing, anxious hearts, we should embrace the earliest opportunity to depart from sin, and the service of that Pharaoh who is king over the Egypt of all vice and folly, of all crime and corruption of every sort and every name.

In short, the living lamb without blemish, was typical of the living Lamb of God, who was holy, harmless, spotless, undefiled, and separate from sinners. The sacrificing of this unblemished victim and the nature of all the concomitant services connected therewith, were typical of the death of the God-man, the only victim in heaven or earth—in the wide universe of God—that could satisfy the demands of Divine Justice. The feasting upon the lamb, after it was sacrificed, and the connected observances, were typical of all the gracious benefits of the atonement made by the sacrificing of Christ our Passover, who is sacrificed for us.

The feast of unleavened bread for seven days, and the abundant offerings during the feast, were a type of the Christian life, which is a life of love—a life of sincerity, free from all envy and ill-will, and from the leaven of malice, and wickedness, and hypocrisy. The waving of the sheaf, the first-fruits of harvest, we regard as being a type of the resurrection of Christ the first-fruits from the dead. (1 Cor. 14 : 23). The sheaf was waved on the morrow after the Sabbath, which was the 16th day of the month; so "Christ the first-fruits" arose from the dead and manifested himself to his disciples on the morrow after the Sabbath, which was also the first day of the week. (Matth 28 : 1, Jno. 20 : 19.)

We now eave this general outline with the reader, in hope that he will continue to investigate this subject for himself, and that he may purge out the old leaven that may yet be found in his heart, and feast upon "Christ our Passover," who "is sacrificed for us." "Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." Matth. 5 : 6.

Editorial Correspondence.

Brother Assistant: We have been thinking of you much since we left the office. How we do wish that during our abscence, none of our correspondents may forget to give his name or address, or tell half what he wants, and compel you to guess at the remainder. Hope, too, that none will presume that we remember the contents of all previous letters received during the past year, but will plainly and explicitly state what he wants, just as though we had never known him before. And then when changes of addresses are desired, hope it will be remembered that we need the post-office, wherefrom as well as whereto the address is to be changed. If those things would be observed by all our correspondents much labor would be spared you.

And especially have we been made to think of you, and of the Companion family since we have been permitted to breathe this pure Maryland, country air, and enjoy the comfortable habitations and hospitalities of the good people of this community. We are living on the fat of the land, with absolutely nothing to do but eating and talking, neither of which you know we regard as labor, while you are confined to the narrow walls of the editorial sanctum. But never mind, be encouraged, keep in good spirits, we expect to recuperate so that when we return, we shall be able to take charge of the office for a while, and allow you a furlough.

We are surrounded by many temptations. Poor dyspeptic! Rich viands are set before us on every table. So far we have been enabled to resist them to a healthful degree, and the superfluous luxuries of coffee and tea in every instance. If we cannot become a reformer, perhaps we may still reform ourself, which, if every one would do, the work would be accomplished.

We made our landing point at Hagerstown on Friday evening, were met by brother Benjamin Emmert and conveyed to brother Samuel Emmert's in Funkstown, where we met in public worship in the evening.—The weather was bad, and the congregation was small, but the greetings of the brethren and sisters kind and warm.

We made our head-quarters at brother Emmert's during our stay at Funkstown. On Saturday we visited sister Ella Williams, one of our most worthy contributors, and our agent at this place. We found her an invalid, giving more promise for the life which is to come than for that which now is. Had meeting on Friday and Saturday evenings, and on Sunday forenoon. At that time brethren David Long and Daniel Wolf, ministers from the Manor congregation, and brother Harmon from Welsh Run congregation were also with us. The attendance was respectable and with considerable interest In the evening (Sunday) brother Stouffer conveyed us to Fahrney's meeting-house, stopping by the way at the house of brother Daniel Stouffer, one of the ministers in the Beaver Creek congregation, and the most popular auctioneer in Washington Co. How is that for news, an auctioneer and a "Dunkard" preacher? It is all right, however, for it is by consent of the church, and brother Stouffer is amenable to the church for any misconduct or impropriety indulged in while engaged in his business. We presume it is not necessary that an auctioneer should make a monkey of himself in order to become a good salesman.

In the evening we had a meeting at Fahrney's meeting-house, bro. Myers remaining to fill an appointment at Funkstown. It therefore fell to our lot to try to preach. We had good attendance and excellent order and attention. After meeting we went home with Dr. Daniel P. Fahrney, who resides on the old homestead where the famous old Dr. Peter Fahrney, used to reside. We made our home with the Doctor for several days He enjoys a good practice an enviable reputation. Hope he will not content himself with having a good name here but will also secure a right to the name which is above all others. His wife has already chosen that good part.

This is the principal meeting place in this branch of the church, (Beaver Creek). We have now made the acquaintance of all their ministers; who are Jos. H. Wolf and Andrew Cost, Bishops, Leonard Emmert, Daniel Stouffer, Ed. S. Miller and Samuel Foltz, all zealous supporters of the cause. Brother Wolf is aged and feeble. Poor brother Cost, how we do feel for him. A heart and a soul big enough to take him around the world, but hardly physical strength enough to hold soul and body together. He accompanied us from Saturday during the meetings, and the longer we were with him the better we loved him.

Now, brother editor, if you have not time to write any better editorial than this, you may publish it, but do not insert it and then blame us for spoiling your paper. In our absence you will be held accountable for the reputation of the paper, and we wish you to use your privileges. I am still,

Yours truly,

Attention.

We invite attention to the Editorial Correspondence in this number: especially to that part which refers to the transaction of business with this office. If some of our friends would be more careful, and be sure that they tell us clearly what they want—just as they would if they thought we knew nothing about it—they would save us much time and trouble, and themselves much anxiety and cause of complaint. Frequently, by the addition of a few words, which would require only a few moments, we might be spared a half an hour of unpleasant and unprofitable labor. J. W. B.

Answer to Correspondents.

F. F. Murray. Thank you. It was our mistake. We are sending a paper to John Lehman at Upton, Pa. and the Post Master informs us that there is no such a person living in the bounds of the delivery of that office. Who knows anything about it.

Jesse Roop. You have credit for $10.00 received Feb. 2nd.

Jos. Strickney. Your name was overlooked in transferring the names from the old to the new book. Thank you for correcting. Give us the name and address of the subscribers you say you sent some time ago; also say if you sent the money. We do not know who to look for, or who to send the back Nos. to.

Josiah Beeghly. Your name is on our subscription book all right. We will send back Nos. Think they will come all right now.

John Harley. It was an oversight. Thank you for calling attention to it. Hope all will be right now.

Mrs. Belle Ripple. The money came to hand about the time you mentioned and your name entered, but was missed in transferring to our new book.

Dan'l Trump. All right, you need not send it back.

Isaac Bartow. Yes, it came. We are sending the C. F. C., as directed.

B. Teeter. It is all right; the Pious Youth for Feb. is behind time.

C. Hoover. Who sent you and Isaac Steel's name, and did you pay, we have no account of you. We have now entered your names at Willaman.

D. N. Yothers: Your subscription is paid for both volumes, six and seven. We have no farther charges against you.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Brother Holsinger: As before stated through the Companion, in No 8, Vol 6, by brother Harper, that the brethren there had decided to build a meeting house, and still seeing the great necessity of it, have determined to build next spring. We again met in council on the 23rd of December, to see what means we would be able to raise. The brethren subscribed liberally; but being few in number, we still lack some $300 or $400 dollars — Therefore we have decided to make another appeal; and I have been requested to address the Brotherhood through the Companion, so that all who have not responded to our former request, can now have the opportunity of aiding us in the work. If each one would give only a small amount, —even down to a dime—altogether would be a great help in our undertaking, and in spreading the glorious gospel of Christ. If some brother in each branch would see what he could get for us, the amount being ever so small would be thankfully received.

All money can be sent to D. B. Bowman, or J. Vantrump, Harden, Ray Co., Mo., which will be acknowledged through the Companion.

Brother Holsinger: As it is always very encourageing to me, to hear of the progress of the Kingdom of our blessed Lord and Master. I have also concluded to give an item of the progress of Zion in this part of God's moral vineyard. We commenced a series of meetings on the 27th of January, and continued until the 4th of February, with very encouraging results — Brethren Grabill Myers, and Jacob Rinehold were with us from a distance, assisted by our own brethren; they all labored very faithfully with us in presenting the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and many were powerfully wrought upon. Three precious souls were made willing to renounce the kingdom of darkness, and to enlist under the banner of King Emmanuel; and many more were almost persuaded to become Christians. May the Lord carry on his good work here in our midst, and not here only, but every where, that many may yet be brought out from nature's darkness into the marvelous light of the Gospel. So, dear brethren and sisters, let us all be right faithful in our calling, that we may so let our lights shine that men may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in Heaven; that we may be instrumental in bringing others into the vineyard of our master. We all have our talents to improve. Let us not bury our talents, but improve them while it is called to-day; for the night is coming wherein no man can work, when we shall all be called to give an account of our stewardship. Oh! may the Lord impress it solemnly upon our every heart to work for the salvation of our fellow men, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in Christ.

Seven Spirits of God.

Brother Henry: I noticed a query some time ago, in which the querist wanted to know the view of the Brethren concerning the seven Spirits of God, spoken of in Rev. 4:5. Feeling it our duty when called upon to answer queries punctually, although I have not been punctual, and my reason was this, I always would rather hear the views of my brethren and sisters. Since the query has not been answered, and is probably forgotten by some, though not by the querist who probably felt and still feels disappointed, I would feel a willingness to give my views. If not correct, convince me by the word of God that I am wrong and I will yield.

1. Love: "God is Love." Jno. 4:16.

2. Truth: "A God of truth." Deut. 32:4.

3. Mercy: "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful." Luke 6:36.

4. Wisdom: "For after that in the wisdom of God." 1 Cor. 1:24

5. Power: "Christ the power of God." 1 Cor. 1:24.

6. Justice: "Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne: mercy and truth shall go before thy face." Ps. 89:14.

7. Peace: "The everlasting Father, Prince of Peace." Isaiah 9:6.

We notice there are seven spirits dwelling in the Supreme being of God, which constitute his eternal, living principle, or Nature, which is divine; hence the word of the Lord attributes the above spirits (Attributes) to him, which constitutes his Divine Nature.

From the Antietam Church, Franklin Co., Pa.

Brother Henry: It is encourageing to me to read church news, and especially such news as causes the angels to rejoice. What can be more joyful to read than to hear that poor sinners are converted to God. On New Years day we baptized seven. At that time we had a series of meetings in our arm of the church. The brethren came to our assistance, and up to this time we have baptized twenty-nine in all, and there yet remain others who are seriously impressed. and are not far from the kingdom. Oh! that the Lord would continue to work among us; for there are so many around us who are occupying unsafe ground—walking on slippery ways in dark places. How many we see whose gray hairs, and furrowed cheeks indicate their short stay here, and yet they seem to delay their return to God! We shall still continue our petitions to the Lord in their behalf. In this protracted effort of the ministry, the church has become alive and much revived. Oh! how we should bless and praise God for the love and union which now prevail among us, and for the increase of God's people. May we feel more and still more zealous in the cause of Christ; helping those that need spiritual help, and in this way we can glorify God in our bodies and spirits which are his.

Fraternally yours,

I. F. Oller.

Sabbath School.

I wish to call the attention of the brethren to the subject of Sabbath-schools, requesttng them to give us, through the Companion, the best plan for organizing and conducting Sabbath-schools. I am a friend of Sabbath-schools, and desire to see them conducted in the most interesting manner possible. Let several brethren write and give us their best instruction.

Reply to B. F. Koons.

My answer was, "Two, viz: Caleb and Joshua;" and so I still say, and so every body preaches. In volume 6, page 790, brother Koons in his reply to my answer contends that there were others, who were over 20 years old when they left Egypt, that entered the promised land, even the whole tribe of Levi. If the Levites did enter the promised land, they were not included in the number of the Israelites who left Egypt. It is always understood that there were 600,000 men above 20 years old that left Egypt; of these only two entered the promised land.

Now I will admit that the Levites were not included in this number; and will endeavor to prove that they were not counted Israelites. To do this we will go back to the 49th chap. of Gen. where Jacob blessed his sons, and we find that Levi had no blessing, for some reason best known to that old patriarch himself. This is one strong proof that they were not to be counted with the rest of the tribes.

Also by referring to the 13th chap. of Num., where Moses sent out the 12 spies, to spie out the land of Canaan, there was no spy sent from the tribe of Levi, but in lieu thereof, he sent a spy of the tribe of Ephraim, which I understand was a grandson of Jacob, Joseph's son. Num 3: 9. "And thou shalt give the Levites unto Aaron and to his sons; they are wholly given unto him out of the children of Israel." 12th verse, "And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel, instead of the first born that openeth the matrix among the children of Israel; therefore the Levites shall be mine." In the 15th verse we find that the Levites were to be numbered from a month old and upward. In the 39th verse we find that the number of the Levites as they were numbered "were twenty and two thousand."

Now it appears by reading the concluding part of this chapter, that the Levites were to be substituted in the place of the first born of the children of Israel, as an offering to the Lord. Also Num 8: 5, 6, "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and cleanse them. (vers 14th) "Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel: and the Levites shall be mine."

Next we will refer you to the book of Joshua 14: 3, "For Moses had given the inheritance of two tribes and a half tribe on the other side Jordan; but unto the Levites he gave none inheritance among them." There are numbers of other texts which go to prove that the Levites were not counted Israelites, but let this suffice for the present. They had no part in dividing the land; neither had they any inheritance in it, only what the others gave them; they were to give them a certain number of cities, with their suburbs for their cattle. Fearing my remarks will become tedious, I will add no more at present, but hope if my views are wrong, some brother will be good enough to put me in the right way. May the Lord add his blessing, is my prayer. Amen.

Dear Brother Holsinger: I was down in Missouri last December, as far as where the brethren are in Clinton Co. They have some fine country there, and there are some fine, large farms for sale there, on fair terms; some of which would suit for good Pa. farmers' homes. There are places that have plenty of timber and stone. The timber on the west and north of good prairie, make it a great stock rai-ing country. The price and terms are favorable, where the improvements are not of much value. Land to make a very desirable stock farm, in a good state of cultivation, and a cheap order of buildings thereon, can be bought for $20.00 to $30.00 per acre: with railroads plenty, and all the conveniences commonly found. The brethren there, are anxious to have others of the faith, to come and settle among them. I would also state, that we have here, in Cass Co., Iowa, better land than I saw in Mo., anywhere, and plenty of it in its wild state. But, we have no Christian church here, and, the Gospel in its purity has never been preached here as yet. Some here would gladly receive the truth if they had the opportunity. The false teachers have made some quite skeptical; still, the truth in its purity, would take effect, with a few at least. I believe that in such places, where the people have never heard the Gospel preached, it takes far more effect than it does among people that are Gospel hardened; so I will live in hope that, ere long, some true minister of the truth as taught by the Savior, may come this way, and, be able to turn some from darkness.

Brother Holsinger: I was favored by Thomas Gray, with a copy of notes taken by him, while himself and several other brethren, have been visiting our church; which I thought it would not be amiss to publish in the Companion. I will therefore give you the notes as I received them from him.

Left home on Dec. the 31st, 1870, in company with Joseph and Andrew Myers, to visit the Tulpenhocken church, Lebanon county, Pa. Arrived at Myerstown station, at half past three P. M. Were met by brethren John Zug, and Martin Witters, and were conveyed to Witter's home and family. After supper left for the first appointment in the Tulpenhocken meeting-house: had good attendance. After meeting, was taken to brother Jonathan Hertzler's, (father of William and John Hertzler ministers) for the night. Next morning, January the first, was taken to the Heidleburg meeting-house; also good attendance. After meeting were taken to brother Samuel Witter's; and in the after-noon to the Richland meeting-house. Had meeting in the after-noon, and also in the evening: had a crowded house, but good attention. After meeting went home with brother Daniel Hostetler; stayed over night, and next morning we were again conveyed to the Tulpenhocken house. Had meeting in the forenoon, and after meeting were taken to brother Benjamin Weber's. After dinner, left for brother Jonas Royer's; took supper, and then went to meeting at same place. After meeting stayed all night with brother Royer. January 3d, had meeting in the morning at same place; went with brother Daniel Weber. After dinner visited our old brother Weber, who has been very much afflicted, for some time with dropsy. After supper went to meeting at same place,—the meeting still on the increase. After meeting again lodged with old brother Hertzler. Jan 4th, meeting at same place,—the meeting still on the increase. After meeting again lodged with old brother Hertzler. January 4th, meeting at same place in the morning. After meeting went to Joel Rovers; and in the afternoon went to visit an old friend. Upon inquiry as to whether he is still satisfied without the folds of the church, he made answer that he still intends to become a brother before he dies. Took supper with him and too of his daughters that still live with him, and are members of the church. Evening meeting at the same place, when also our old brother David Eshlermen, brother Wm. Nice, joined our preaching force. Found a very large audience assembled. Had good order at all the meetings at this place. It seemed as if we had a God-fearing people before us; and hope the seed sown will spring up and not soon wither away. After this our last meeting at this place, were taken by brother Levi Hertzler to his home for the night. Next morning, the 5th, brother Hertzler took us to the Heidleburg meeting-house, where we had meeting in the forenoon; after meeting, went home with brother John Witters, took dinner and supper, and then went to meeting. Met a full house and attentive congregation. Come back to brother Witter's, and his mother also, a sister, stayed all night. Jan. 6th, meeting in the forenoon at the same place. After meeting were taken by brother John Gibble to his point; and were taken back for the evening meeting, and met an attentive congregation for the last meeting, and have given farewell to meet where parting will be no more. Were taken by brother Samuel Kurtz, to his home. Next morning on our homeward way, stopped in with our old brother John Zug; had a short season of devotional exercises; thence to Lebanon. Dined with sister Ross, and then were accompanied by brother Kurtz and wife, and sister Ross, to the depot. Took the cars at 12 o'clock, and arrived safely at home in the evening. Found all well, and were gladly received.—Thanks be to God for his kind protection. Should have had mentioned that brother Eshleman and Nice remained at last place of meeting, to continue several days longer.

Brother Henry: As we all feel interested in the welfare of our fellowman, especially in a spiritual point of view, and as we love to hear of the success of the churches in the accession of members and of the revival of God's grace in our midst, we feel like communicating a few thoughts in reference to our series of meetings, held in this branch of God's moral vineyard, namely, Eagle creek, Hancock Co, Ohio, commencing Jan. 28th, and ending Feb. 5th, brother James Quinter arrived on the 28th, and commenced the series of meetings, and on the 30th, brother Joseph Kauffman came to his assistance and both labored very earnestly and zealously for the cause of Christ during the meetings, which were well attended and good order manifested and all seemed deeply interested. Though the result was not such as we desired, but three accessions to the church by baptism, yet if there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons, who have not went astray; we can of a truth say the result was good: so precious in the sight of heaven is the return of the prodigal But we hope the impressions made on many, are lasting, and will finaly result in their return to God. We hope and pray that the good seed sown, may be as "bread cast upon the waters, that it may be gathered many days hence." May the Lord enable us all to heed the instructions and exhortations, so faithfully delivered unto us by the brethren, that we may be fully aroused to a sense of our duty, serve God as he directs, and let our light so shine, that others may see our good works and be constrained to go with us and glorify God.

Brother Holsinger: I greatly feel the need of the Companion, since I have moved to this place, as there are no brethren in this part of the country. Speaking of this fact, brings me to think of the missionary cause, which is so neglected by our brethren. As an instance of this, I would say, that I am living about half way between the Sangamon county and Bond county churches, being about thirty-five miles from one, and about forty-five miles from the other—both old standing churches, and there is scarcely any body in the neighborhood, that ever heard the brethren preach. Now I do not wish any one to think that I am trying to impeach the brethren, for want of energy to spread the Gospel: to the contrary, they are very energetic, but the trouble is, the labor and expense falls too much on the laboring brethren under the present system of spreading the gospel. Hence the necessity of adopting some other plan. Where could we find a person that never heard a Methodists preach? I presume it would be a difficult matter to find one. The reason is obvious. Then let us learn from their example. With these few poorly written and scattering remarks, I close, subscribing myself, Yours truly, Slander.

Dear readers of the Companion having so often been encouraged on my weary pilgrimage, through the lovely admonitions, wholesome advice, and encouragement from the pens of dear brethren and sisters, that I too ought to cast in my mite, has long been impressed upon my mind; but feeling my inability to write for public perusal, I have hitherto declined. In Companion No 3 present Vol., is an article written by a sister, on slander, which I think contained much good sentiment.

Cruel, indeed, is he who will, with harsh words and bitter reproaches, wound the heart of his fellow creatures; but far more cruel yet is he who assists in circulating an unfavorable report, though it be merely by insinuation or assent, thereby encouraging what another may say. I think no one can as fully realize the keen anguish of such wounds as those who have waded through deep waves of sorrow, or as highly appreciate the noble, who stand faithful through storms of adversity, as in sunshine, testing the validity of the slanderous gossip, before giving it room in their heart, much less in their conversation. How very careful we, as christians, ought to be in speaking of others. We will have enough of evil to answer for, without having assisted in casting stain on an innocent character, or in binding bundles to lay on the already burdenened shoulder. When we are tempted to speak reproachfully of others, let us endeavor to place ourselves in their stead; remembering that they have many secret sorrows that the world knows not of. In this manner we may heal the wounded heart, instead of crushing it still more deeply into despondency. I have written through love, not excluding self, or with a design of censuring any one, but merely endeavoring to impress this important matter upon the minds of many I love. May God grant us grace to keep a watch over our words as well as actions, and finally admit us into his glorious kingdom, where we shall err neither in word or deed, is the prayer of your unworthy sister.

SALLIE TIBBALS.

Brother Henry:—I see in the Companion many calls from the west for preaching the Gospel. I will say we are as needy of a preacher here in Cumberland Co., Ill., as anywhere else. We do not live as far in the west as some do; and we have a good country, a rail road convenient, and another under contemplation.

Queries.

Is it in accordance with the Gospel, for a brother to participate with a person, who is a member of another denomination, in holding prayer meetings, reading the words of eternal truth and thereby exhorting?

A full explanation desired through the Companion.

Brother Henry: I should like for some brother to give an explanation of John 4 : 37, 38 : "And herein is that saying true ,One soweth and another reapeth. I sent you to reap, that whereon ye bestowed no labor, other men labored, and ye are entered into their labors."

L. B. REPLOGLE.

Will some brother answer through the Companion, whether it is right, and according to the Gospel, for brethren to wear soldier overcoats, or any soldier cloth; or is it not in fashion with the world?

On page 21, Vol. 7, C. F. C., bro. A. Leedy gives an explanation to brother C. P. L. Robert's query, about Christ preaching to the dead, in which he says: "While his body lay in the tomb, his quickened spirit was with the disembodied antediluvians in the prison of the underworld." Now, I would like for brother Leedy to tell us when his spirit was killed, that it hed to be quickened or made alive.

Yours in the bonds of the Gospel.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Clear Creek district, Huntingdon, county, Ind., Jan., 29th, of Lung Fever, HENRY SPRINKLE, aged 69 years, 4 mo., and 13 days. He led an exemplary Christian life for many years. We are glad to know that the children and friends need not sorrow as those who have no hope. O dear children, follow the example of your deceased father, and you will meet again to part no more.—The subject of this notice, was born in Lancaster county Pa. He was married to Susannah Summers, Jan. 2nd, 1831. They lived in matrimony 23 years, 9 months and 25 days, and were blessed with 6 children—2 son and 4 daughters. His companion died May 27th, 1855. Two sons and two daughters are still surviving the parents. May the Lord enable them to live in Christ, that they may die in him, and meet their parents again. Funeral services by the Writer, from Rev. 14 : 13, to a large and attentive congregation.

In Benton county, Iowa, June 10th, 1870, NOAH ALIVE BONSTEIL, infant son of brother N. D. and sister Emeline Bonstell; aged 8 months, and 10 days. Funeral services by the writer, from 1 Peter 1 : 24, 25.

Same place Oct. 31st bro SAMUEL LONG; aged 45 years. Funeral services by the same and others, from Rev. 14 : 13. The deceased was a worthy brother, and is greatly missed by the church and his family. He was elected to the ministry some years ago; and although he seldom spoke in public, his seat was seldom vacant. We hope the loss sustained by his kind family and the church, is his great gain.

In the Norristown Branch of the Mingo church, Pa., Jan. 13th, after a long illness, our beloved brother J. B. ROTES, aged 54 years. He endured his illness patiently. We hope our loss is his great gain, and that we shall all meet him where parting shall be known no more. Funeral occasion improved by brethren John and Jacob Gotwaltz, from 2 Cor. 5 : 1, 2. W. N. Clemmer.

At the residence of her son, in Washington, county, M. D., January the 24th, our much beloved sister CATHARINE WISSINGER; aged 87 years, within 3 days. She was a poor sister; but her holy life was the key that would unlock every door at a single trial: every house of the brethren and sisters was a home for her. She was so full of the love of Jesus that her countenance shone all around with the splendor of her Master. Brethren L. Emmert and D. F. Stouffer addressed the congregation with the deepest sympathy; they moved many to tears, in speaking of her kindness. Brother Stouffer remarked that after singing and praying with her, she would take hold of his hand and kiss it, saying, "Danie, don't make it so long till you come again." In this we are reminded of righteous Abel: though they are dead, yet they speak.

Notice.

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Character or Poison was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles, but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever. From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and sells readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or nick-name called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing every requirement that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a final resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be necessary to the proper development of the mind of the child, as may tend to the moral, social, or physical benefit of the child, will be published. This paper will contain all matter necessary and essential to the well being of home, and will be devoted to the interests of home.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

"Give to him that Asketh."

Oh, stay not thy hand when the winter winds rude
Blow cold through the dwellings of want and despair,
To ask if misfortune has come to the good,
Or folly has wrought the sad wreck that is there.

When the heart-stricken wanderer asks thee for bread,
In suff'ring he bows to necessity's laws;
When the wife moans in sickness—the children unfed—
The cup must be bitter—oh! ask not the cause.

When the Savior of men raised his finger to heal.
Did he ask if the suff'rer was Gentile or Jew?
When the thousands were fed, was the bountiful meal,
To be given alone to the faithful and true?

Oh, scan not too closely the frailties of those Whose bosoms may blend on the cold winter's day:
But give to the friendless who tells thee his woes,
And from him that would borrow, oh! turn not away.

TO A YOUNG BROTHER.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To answer the questions contained in your letter would fill a volume. They are, most of them, of sufficient importance to warrant a reply through the press. I can do no more, however, than simply drop a hint on those of general interest.

1. To attend revivals conducted by the United Brethren, or any sect entertaining similar views, accords not with the fundamental principle of the christian religion. Any method of conversion of which the anxious-bench is the central idea, or an essential concomitant, is a miserable subversion of the Divine order. The element of unintelligent excitement is the very corner-stone of its existence, which debars the soul from that deliberate, Heaven-directed introspection which the deepest and most momentous of human interests demands. The revivals of which you speak are the fruit of wrong principles, and oftentimes of wrong impulses; for to make the anxious-bench a success, its advocates must needs appeal to elements in human nature that true religion seeks to suppress and eradicate. If you feel at home in such a scene, breathe freely in such an atmosphere, "you have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God." Heb. 5: 12.

2. There is perhaps no very grave objection to hearing a sermon preached by a minister of another denomination, provided you have sufficient equanimity to bear its absurdities, and sufficient root in truth to prevent your inoculation with error. As a general thing sectarian preaching is too dry and chaffy for a spirit illumined soul, and too adroit and tricky for an ignorant one. It will disgust or poison. I would rather hear a brother present the truth feebly and in fragments, if he can do no better, than to listen to an alien preach with the tongue of a seraph, so artfully gilding error and shaping it into the semblance of truth as to lead the imagination captive, and bring us into sympathy with the doctrines and traditions of men. A filial spirit will prefer a dry crust of Heaven's loaf to the buttered and honeyed impositions of those who claim to be wise above what is written.

3. The doctrine which you heard preached at Mechanicsburg, Pa., asserting the origin of the Church in the descent of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, is one of the wiles of the devil to assist his ministers in getting rid of baptism, feet-washing, and the Lord's supper, and what not. This is the worn out hobby of Campbellism. Christ is the Head of the Church historically no less than vitally and doctrinally.

4. How many were present at the pentecostal effusion is not definitely stated. A short time previous one hundred and twenty "continued with one accord in prayer and supplication." But "when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." Before his ascension, Christ was seen of above five hundred brethren at once." 1 Cor. 15: 6. Whether these were all present at the time of the Spirit's descent, the record does not show. There is but feeble evidence that the number exceeded one hundred and twenty, and the probability is that it was still less. It is immaterial.

5. You want an explanation of Luke 9: 62. I presume you know something about farming

A tiller of the ground knows that success in his vocation depends mainly on the proper management of the soil. If you were to enter the field with your plough, commence a furrow, and instead of fixing your eye on your work, and the implement with which it is done, you turn your face in the opposite direction, and habitually look back, would you be fit for a farmer? I trow not. To put one's hand to the plough is to be consecrated to God, enter his field of service, and this requires "all the heart, all the soul, all the mind, all the strength." How much is left for the world? He that looks back—turns his deepest, most controlling personality worldward—how can he be fit for the kingdom of God? It is well enough for one that follows the plough to stop occasionally and look along the furrow he has drawn. It is proper frequently to review our course of life, and profit by the discoveries we make. But this is not looking back in the sense rebuked by the text. The look that renders unfit for the kingdom, is not for improvement of the new life, but resumption of the old. It is not a look that humbles but fascinates and wins the soul. It is not a look that may enable us to plough better, but one that shows the style and quality of the man to be a product of nature. His eyes and heart are with the world, and his hands must needs be there too.

6. My rejoinder to the "Western Goliath," as you term him, appeared in the November No. of the Visitor. It is a dissection of the calumnies and outrageous falsehoods with which religious quacks and creed-mongers are incessantly assailing us. Had the Father of lies no abettors in the disguise of religion, such painful, nerve-tearing strictures, would not be called for. Would to God that errorists would confine themselves to terms which are truly expressive of their anti-christian dogmas. But they "steal the livery of heaven to serve the devil in."

7. David's mother was the daughter of——— who knows? The Bible is silent, and perhaps we had better be. She is best known in the exemplification of the lofty virtues of her royal son—the man after the heart of God.

8. The word baptize, signifies to immerse, and to maintain the contrary is as absurd as to contend that the river Jordan can be compressed into a tea-cup. The Rev. Mr. Dale's great work on classic and Judaic baptisms is about as much to the point, as if he had attempted to prove that we ought to wear only a collar and a spur, because some savages have been found running naked. It is the weakest argument and the greatest show of strength that has recently appeared. The circumstances connected with the institution, are sufficiently clear and significant to designate the mode without wading through a thousand years of mythological mire. "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of Heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."

9. My article on Feetwashing was addressed to "Alexander the Coppersmith," not because the founder of the falsely so-called disciple church, was a master of that craft, but because the personage so named in 2 Tim. 4 : 14, did the cause of Christ "much evil," and "greatly withstood the words" of Heaven's ambassador. In this sense, the originator of the disciple sect, was "Alexander the Coppersmith," and all his adherents bear the same unenviable title. To mutilate baptism, and reject feetwashing, is to contemn the "counsel of God," "withstand the words" of the Most High, and do "much evil" against the truth.

10. You ask, "What is plagiarism?" Literary theft—a very mean kind of robbery. Claiming paternity to another's mental offspring. Perhaps none of our brethren are guilty of it, but some articles in our periodicals have a strong plagiaristic savor. Making another man's suggestions the substratum or warp of our own is not plagiarism. I have never known the genius that was indebted to nobody for mental warp. But to take another's warp and woof, and claim it as home born, is a kind of pilfering that has its root in the lowest form of egotism. When we have appropriated, by mental process, the thoughts of another, they are part of us, and every thought born by such conjunction is our own. We reproduce them through our proper selves, and may claim them as much as the products of our physical labor which are the result of assimilated elements prepared by others. "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Then there will be no plagiarism.

The greatest man in history was the poorest.

Need of the Church. No., 1.

That the church has not yet accomplished the conquest of the world, is not to be denied: that she is at the present time immensely inefficient is to be deeply deplored. But why this want of success? What are the causes of this inefficiency? Infidelity finds the solution in the position, that, as a saving system, Christianity is essentially defective — that, having been weighed in the balance of a fair and patient trial, it is found wanting. But this solution is not to be admitted for a single moment. The origin of Christianity is not a question to be discussed: this having been repeatedly settled by evidence both internal and external, and being divine it cannot be defective.

Let us give attention to the causes of the present inefficiency. These will be found to spring from, and to run into each other. Among those causes the following may be enumerated:

1. Want of adequate appreciation of relative position and work assigned. As to the relation of the church to the world, the Savior says: "Ye are the light of the world, and the salt of the earth." Hence the work of the church is, to enlighten and conserve—to disciple the nations and teach the observanee of all things that Christ has commanded. We should pray and labor for the establishment of the kingdom of heaven on earth. "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." This work thus assigned is not sufficiently understood and appreciated: it should forever be concentrated in the heart.

2 The church needs to be more deeply sensible of the double truth that without Christ we can do nothing, but that having Christ to strengthen us, we can do all things. There is too much self-reliance, and too little reliance upon God. There is too much trust in wealth, too much strife, and too little prayer. If Peter-like we attempt to walk on the wave alone, like Peter we must sink. This great truth should be written all over our souls

Selected for the Companion.

Abraham's Call.

What was Abram called to do? Was it some light thing? Something that would not cross his feelings, or try his faith, or make his tears flow? No, it was a very serious affair when God said unto Abram, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee." Men of all nations love their country, however bleak and uninviting it may be. It is the fatherland, and dear to their hearts. And Abram who was a man of strong attachment, felt his heart ache when told that he must leave scenes so familiar and dear. Not only must he leave his country, but his kindred: his cousins, his friends and relations. Ah! many pleasant days he had spent with them, but now he must bid them farewell, except the few who were to accompany him on his journey. Hereafter he must look upon the faces of strangers. He must forsake his father's house too. He must leave the old homestead with its sweet and tender associations—the time worn chair, where his father Terah had rested at even-tide.

When Christ invites one to forsake his sins and flee to the great salvation, it is with the same voice that said to Abram, "Get thee out of thy country" and come into a land that I will show. Yes, the sinner must forsake his birthplace, the city of destruction, where he had lived so long and so pleasantly—all the scenes, companions, and pursuits that would hinder him on his journey, and firmly set his face toward another country, even a heavenly. He has been told on good authority, that he that loveth father, mother, brothers, sisters, houses, lands, ease, reputation, more than Christ, cannot be his disciple. God only knows the fierce struggle that agitates the soul, as it answers the questions the spirit of God addresses to it in words like these: "Oh! sinner, will you live, or die? Which will you have, earth or heaven? Will you wander in the wilderness with God's people or remain in Egypt to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season? Was the universe made for you or for God? Has not God a right to you by creation and preservation, and by every blessing he has showered upon you ever since you had your being? Have you not been bought with a price, even the precious blood of Christ? Come, forsake the beggarly elements of this world, and I will go to a land that I will show thee."

There is still another period in a man's history, when he seems to hear the voice that Abram heard: it is when he is called to die. "Arise, depart, for this is not your rest," says God. "Get you out of the land that I will show thee." "What," says the good man, when all of life, at times, trembles over the fatal chasm, "must I say my pleasant home here, the church of God, the sweet seasons of the Sabbath day, my family, so precious to my heart, must I say a tearing last from them ever to think of having them? Must I say farewell to the singing congregation, the light of the sun, moon, and stars, and the home in the dark caves of the grave and long eternity with the worms?"

But "come unto a land that I will show thee," says God. It is a better land than this—a land where sickness, sin, and death come not. There they have no need of sun, moon, or stars, for God and the Lamb are the light thereof. "Come, I will dispel your fears." Now faith prevails. The good man dies as calmly as we would go to bed at night, having sweetly acquiesced in the command to the people of God.

"The gloomy shade can have no power
To hurt one youthful dream;
Still as we feel something say,
And for the awful tomb."

Christ's Advent.

We propose to notice the glorious advent of the Son of God, our adorable Redeemer, (whom we try to worship in spirit and in truth by obeying from the heart that form of doctrine which he delivered when tabernacling here on the earth, over eighteen hundred years ago,) and the glorious result that shall follow, with those who obey his commandments, and the awful disaster that shall befall those who will not obey his gospel.

We do believe from a close investigation of his word, that the second advent of the Savior is just at hand, yea, even at the doors. And shall the unworthy writer behold it before a separation from this vile body? Lord, thou knowest. "Behold! he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him; and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so. Amen." Rev. 1: 7. And the inspired Apostle also says in his first epistle to the Thessalonians, fourth Chapter: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."

From the many passages of scripture which are being fulfilled at the present day in our ears, we think the time is at hand. We do not pretend to say in what day or hour it shall be, for that is not for us to know; for the Lord of Glory himself declared when on earth: "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only."

And he farther said: "But in vain do they worship me teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Do we not see the many different doctrines taught now in the world; the many different organizations instituted by men who are claiming to be the peculiar people of God; the many disciplines framed and instituted by men for the government of their societies and contrary to the discipline that was handed to us by the Governor that was born in Bethlehem in the land of Judea over eighteen hundred years ago, who should rule his people Israel, and who is Lord of lords and King of kings? And farther, the Apostle in his 1st letter to Timothy, 4: 1 says: Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron; Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth." Do we not see the above passage fulfilled in this present day? Yea, we know of many even in our own country, who are "commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thankgiving." "Now the spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith. Dear reader, mark the language, for by this we know that his coming draweth nigh.

And again, in second Timothy, third chapter: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away." Do we not see the above quotations literaly fulfilled before our eyes, in these last days?

Coveteousness seems to be the leading principle in the mind of man throughout this wide domain. Yea, we see men who are making a loud profession of the exalted name of king Jesus, who deny the essentiality of the plain and simple commands of God our Savior; who are standing, as it were, on the streets and cross-roads, waiting and watching for a steer, oxen, or a calf that may pass along, thinking, peradventure, that some may chance to sell for less than its real worth, that they may make clear their almighty dollar. Do we not see the many so called christians now in the world who are striving to ascend the ladder of fame, seeking higher office in their ministerial capacity for the sake of larger salaries? Remember the language of Peter. And through coveteousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you." O coveteousness! thou archfiend to souls, be gone far from unworthy me; for the love of money is the root of all evil."

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts. Do we not see some in the world, yea, many, we should have said, who are fulfilling the lust of the flesh, the desire of their hearts, and going after strange flesh and saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" even denying his personal appearance; and also saying this branch of the church is right, and that is right, tantamount to saying, "Lo, here is Christ, or Lo, he is there?" Dear brethren, believe them not, for he shall "come as a thief in the night." We know that his appearance is at hand, from what our eyes see and our ears hear.

I was accosted some time since upon the subject of religion pertaining to our peculiar religious faith, by a very able and eminent man, or Elder in the M. E. Church, who, by the way, is highly esteemed by the popular voice among our West Virginia hills; and after some colloquy ensued between us, he claimed for an illustration that God had given to himself so many different kinds of fruit trees, and so many various kinds of vegitation, for his own glory and our comfort. Even so had he given to himself the many different persuasions, or branches in the christian church, for his own glory and our comfort, that all mankind might embrace the christian religion, and all be saved; for it was impossible for us all to see alike, and it was thus constructed for our convenience. While he was talking I could not help thinking of the language of the apostle. Peter. 1 Pet. 2: and of Paul's instructions to the Ephesians 4 chap. 5, verse My mind was also called to the language of the savior then he said. "And they shall say, lo, here is Christ, or lo, he is there;" and as I am commanded to obey the voice of the Son of God I believed him not.

Again, we see in 2 Thess. 2: 3, "let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." Who is that man of sin, the son of perdition? I believe it is generaly acknowledged that the Pope is the man of sin, and he is now declared infallible: and though protestants may laugh at the absurdity, yet, one hundred and fifty-five millions recognize him as such, and regard him as, "The most holy Father, sitting in the temple," and are ready to execute all his commands. Things infallible have already entered his mind. See the 8th verse: "And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." Mark the language, my beloved and friendly reader: "And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth" "And then," we understand to mean when these things shall be fulfilled. So we think the full time is about at hand, when he shall appear "with ten-thousand of his saints, to execute Judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly." When he shall descend "from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." Yes, he shall descend in flames of fire; "and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is," and the wicked and disobedient shall not abide and stand at his coming, but will be destroyed by the fire, when he shall come to collect his precious jewels. "Then shall they say to the rocks and mountains, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." But we understand that their request shall be denied them then; for the rocks and mountains shall be burned up, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth, also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up. Seeing then, brethren, "that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be, in all holy conversation and godliness."

Well, then, in the language of the apostle Paul, "Brethren, let us be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood; but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all to stand. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast-plate of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God" Yea, let us wear the entire robe of righteousness as it has been brought from heaven, and not patch our old garment with the new; otherwise the rent shall be made worse. But wear the new garment of righteousness, by obeying his gospel law with every injunction couched therein; then we think, yea, we know, that those who obey the gospel shall be caught up together with the resurrected saints, in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. Yes, those who shall be accounted worthy the fire will not hurt. It shall be with such as it was with Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego when the princes, governor and captains, and the king's counsellors, being gathered together, saw those men upon whose bodies the fire had no power, nor was a hair of their head singed, neither were their coats changed nor the smell of fire had passed on them. See Daniel 3: 27. Even so do we believe that the fire will not hurt nor singe a hair upon the heads of the obedient; because the Son of man shall be there who is King of kings and Lord of lords. At his divine command will even fire obey his voice, and shall not be felt as painful by the righteous, while the disobedient and careless sinner "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe"

In imagination we can see him leave his celestial abode, bringing with him the glory of his Father's kingdom, with ten thousands of his saints: the heavens departing as a scroll when it is rolled together, like the noise of many waters; the swift winged angels clap their hands, and obedient to his powerful voice, lo, he is in the middle air; the busy tribes of the earth cease their trade of commerce; Lo, the rocks and hills melt at his presence, the earth is abashed and changes its form at his command; the inhabitants of the earth—affrighted, lamenting, and wailing because of him—the wicked crying for rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb! We see the graves of the saints are opened; and, Lo, the different particles of the decayed putrefaction coming to life, are called forth and placed together, every joint and sinew to his proper place; and now their long departed spirits come to reunite with their former habitation. Oh! what a union! They rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with those that rise from their graves, to meet the Lord in the air: so shall we ever be with the Lord. But our vile bodies shall be changed; yea, in the twinkling of an eye shall they be changed, and be made like unto his glorious body. "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power. O, Lord, may I be one.

The Mind of Man.

The mind is immortal and immaterial. Since, then, the mind is not such great worth, it becomes our first and highest duty to cultivate and improve it in the best manner we possibly can. We should remember that the mind is destined for eternity; therefore we should take especial care in the manner of training it. In whatsoever state the immortal mind leaves this house of clay, in that condition it enters it. Although it is immaterial, it has, nevertheless, a potent influence over the material body. If left to itself and without a proper guide, it may become reprobate, and finally be the cause of much lasting misery. Hence the great necessity of cultivating it in such a manner as to qualify it for an unknown futurity.

Not only are we to educate the mind for this world, since this world is only its origin, or birthplace. I think we can safely say it is here only in a state of preparation for the higher and more responsible duties in the world of bliss. The virtues instilled into the mind of man whilst in this state of probation will be retained in eternity. There is then much beauty in the proper cultivation and education of the human mind. But above all things, it must be taught the essential virtues of a meek and gentle spirit.

There are different opinions entertained in regard to the mind of man. That it is an immaterial and thinking principle in man, is conceded by nearly all Metaphysicians of good standing; but whether it is immortal is a question yet with some. It is, however, admitted by all, that the brain is the organ of the mind, that, through the matter of brain and its natural functions, it performs its high office. The strong qualifying terms I have used in connection with my subject I hope can be sustained upon good ground, in true mental philosophy. I am a thorough and faithful believer in the doctrine upheld, and especially in the full qualified assertions made in the outset of this essay

In conclusion I would only say, let us one and all pry more fully into the secret workings and operations of the human mind. Let us not be content with merely a superficial knowledge of things, but investigate the subject matter under consideration, always, to a full satisfaction.

The Sight of God.

"Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God." Math. 5 : 8.

There is no thirst in man more craving than the desire to behold God, the Creator of all things. If we study nature, we can form some idea of his wisdom, goodness, power, and glory. If there were now a spot on earth where we could see him, even as he was manifested in the flesh, millions would spare no expense or pains to gain a look upon him; crying to behold God. Moses, himself, coveted most of all things to see him who was accomplishing such wonders by his hand. Not all the sublime experience of Moses so satisfied him, as when God gave him some visible manifestation of his glory. There is no glory of God of which we can conceive, that can possibly be so satisfying and transporting as that of beholding him, and for ourselves seeing his glory. God gave wisdom and glory to Solomon; and the queen of Sheba, when she heard of it, came to see the glory of Solomon—the type of the greater than Solomon. She had "heard of his fame concerning the name of the Lord," as we have heard of the Lord and his glory. But there seemed to have been something wanting to complete her enjoyment: she needed yet to see the reality of which she had heard. To secure this, a journey of months, through exposure and dangers, seemed of small account. And when she had seen all Solomon's wisdom and the house he had built, and the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the standing of his ministers, and their apparal, &c., the fainted for very ecstacy. Now she could say the report was true; and, behold, the half was not told me. If to see Solomon's grandeur was an event worthy living for, who shall estimate the heavenly rapture of beholding God, and the Savior on his high throne of glory—the King of king's, crowned with all the sublime beneficence of heaven; thousands ministering unto him, ten thousand thousands standing before him, and multitudes of celestial spirits shouting to his praise, Thrice Holy Lord God Almighty? The glorified saints shall ever be near him, in the closest communion with him; for he is their brother as well as their Redeemer and king. And they shall be arrayed in white robes, and palms in their hand, they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; "For the Lamb shall feed them and lead them unto the living fountains of water, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." The pure in heart shall see God.

Now, dear reader, if we want to see God, we must have a pure heart: pure from all sins and lusts of the flesh, the eye, and the heart. forsake all sinful pleasures of this world; believing in Jesus Christ whom God raised from the dead, and gave him glory, that our faith and hope might be in God. Seeing ye are to purify "your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with as pure heart fervently. 1 Peter 1 : 22. We are to love God with all our heart. John saith "this is the love of God that we keep his commandments." "Beloved it hath not yet appeared what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is. And every man that heath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure."

Rest.

A wanderer through earth's wilderness,
And heavy-laden with my sin,
Vainly my spirit sought release;
And all was gloom without—within:
Onward I journeyed wearily,
Earth had no resting place for me.

Fainting I could no farther go
When lo! a sweet voice calmed my fears
It spake in accents soft and low,
"Poor pilgrim, wipe away thy tears:
With all thy guilt and sin opprest,
Come hither, I will give you rest.

'Twas Jesus bade my sorrows cease,
And he my heavy burden bore;
'Tis he can give my conscience peace,
And he can joy and strength restore.
O matchless grace! O love divine!
What joy to call this Savior mine!

And now, through all my onward way,
His gentle hand shall lead me still:
His mighty arm shall be my stay:
His love my soul's desire fulfil.
How can I faint with such a friend?
My Savior, guide me to the end.

And oh! when death's dark shadows fell,
Again, dear Jesus, bid me come;
Then may I hear thy welcome call,
"Come, wanderer, to thy heavenly home
Enter and be forever blest:
Come and partake thy promised rest.

PRAYER draws all the Christian graces into its focus. It draws Charity with her lovely train; Repentance with her holy sorrow; Faith with her elevated eye; Hope with her grasped anchor; Benevolence with her opened hand; Zeal looking far and wide to bless; and Humility looking at home.—Hannah More.

HA! is an interjection of laughter. Ah! is an interjection of sorrow. The difference between them is very small, as consisting only in the transposition of what is no substantial letter, but a bare aspiration. How quickly in the age of a minute, in the very turning of a breath, is our mirth changed into mourning!—Thomas Fuller.

DANIEL WOLF'S Md)
Feb. 25th, 1871.)

Brother Assistant: This is the place where the Annual Meeting w a hold in 1857, fourteen years ago. The same brother (Daniel Wolf) is still living here. This is the first place we have come to on this trip, where we had ever been before. We came here this morning, and had meeting in the meeting-house close by. Brother Wolf brought us here from the Beaver Creek branch, where we closed our labors on yesterday evening.

We had a fine time among the Beaver Creek brethren: had two meetings every day this week, except Wednesday, with a growing interest every day. It was really surprising to us to see such good attendance on week days. There was more of a congregation every day than we can get out at Warrior's Mark on Sundays. And such good attention. Why, the people just listened as though they were having the best of preaching. Some declared themselves pleased, others were convicted of sin, and three professed Christ and were immersed. The brethren and sisters were encouraged and built up, or God-speeds, blessings, tears, and other recognized expressions have no meanings. They think the Lord has been at work among them, and that bread has been cast that will shortly return. If it does, we hope some of the young men and young women may find it, for we believe that a number of them are very hungry. Well, if the Lord has already done, or may hereafter do anything for them, we hope they will give his name the praise. We believe we wrote the last communication in the office of Dr. D. P. Fahrney. After enjoying his hospitality for several days, we visited his Mother, sister Amy Fahrney, whose family consisted of hreself, master Welty (her son) and a hired young woman, who all love the Brethren, and delight in waiting on them. We also visited brother Leonard Emmert's, Peter Fahrney's, and brother Henry Newcomer's, and enjoyed pleasant seasons of Christian association at each place. At brother Newcomer's we met brother Peter S. Newcomer his son, whose name will be readily recognized by our readers. He gives evidence of earnestness; and we recommend that his contributions be read as convictious from an intelligent mind and a zealous heart. At brother Emmert's we made the acquaintance of his son, a young man of about seventeen, who gives much promise of success in the fine arts, as well as in intellectual pursuits. He has promised to give us a helping hand.

Now we say, farewell brethren, sisters, and friends of the Beaver Creek congregation. We thank God for you and your kindness toward us. We hope the ministering brethren will labor ardently to brighten the jewels that are among them. Brother Cost suffered with headache nearly every day, yet attended every meeting at the Fahrney meeting-house. So also did brother Emmert. Brethren, don't forget what Jesus says: "Feed my lambs."

Now a few words for ourself. All seem to agree that we (that's I) are improving in health. We have sternly avoided coffee, tea, and fowl, but did break over on mince pie on one occasion, and suffered the penalty of disarranged digestive organs. But we are again on a fair way of recovery; if we continue at present rates, we shall be ready for any emergency by the time we return. We stood preaching very well until yesterday when we became quite hoarse by trying to speak so that all we said might be understood by several brethren who are hard of hearing. They thought if we would not speak very low, nor very high but evenly, they might hear all; and sympathizing with them we endeavord to gratify them. Today we are not fit for duty, though we are quite well. Farewell.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. 10.

DID CHRIST EAT THE PASSOVER?

"Yes," says every one who says anything about it, "Christ ate the legal, or Jewish Passover;" but some say he observed it only prior to his entrance upon his public ministry; others say he also kept it during his ministry, but not on the night of his betrayal—the night before his crucifixion and death; while others, again, say that he did eat the Passover with his apostles in that night. Now one, and only one, of these positions is true: the other two must be erroneous. The second position is ours.—We positively deny that Christ ate "the Passover, a feast of the Jews" in the night of his betrayal; and we as unequivocally assume that he did observe it during his ministry; if these are not the facts in the case, words are meaningless, their relation to each other, unreliable and worthless, and the Scriptures, a mass of confusion—an insolvable enigma. We will show: 1. That Christ was under obligation to observe the Passover; 2. That he did observe it, even during his ministry; 3. That he did not eat it in the night of his agony and betrayal.

1. Christ was under obligation to observe the Passover. It is merely for the sake of system that we introduce arguments to establish this point, for no Bible reader doubts it; and therefore our remarks upon it will be brief.

1st. "Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law," (Rom. 3: 19); but Christ was "made under the law," (Gal. 4: 4); therefore the law addressed itself to Christ; and as those who are under a law are held bound by duty to obey it, Christ was under obligation to obey the law under which he was.

2nd. Every one that was circumcised was a debtor to do the whole law." (Gal. 5: 3); but Christ was circumcised. (Acts 2: 21); therefore Christ was "a debtor to do the whole law." These arguments prove to a demonstration that Christ was under obligation to keep the law—"a debtor to do the whole law;" and as the law enjoined the observance of the Passover he was a debtor to observe it.

2. Christ did observe the legal Passover. We will first show that he did keep the Passover, and then that he observed it during his ministry.

1st. Our first argument shall be drawn from facts already proven.—The spotless character and perfect holiness everywhere in the Scriptures ascribed to Christ, establish it as a fact that he discharged all his obligations—did all that he was debtor to do; but it has just been shown that he was under obligation to observe the Passover; we have, therefore, no choice in drawing the conclusion from these well established premises —he did observe the Passover.

2nd. The law required that three times in a year all their males should appear before the Lord, and one of these times was at the Passover and feast of unleavened bread, (Ex 23: 14, 15). In obedience to this requirement, as we read in Lu. 2: 41, "his parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the Passover." You will remember that Luke says, "every year." It is clear then, that while he was with his parents, he observed the Passover every year.

3rd. Having now shown that Christ did observe the Passover, we will proceed to show that he kept it during his ministry. Christ was under the law, and the law was binding upon him; he was circumcised, and was "a debtor to do the whole law;" the law enjoined the yearly observance of the Passover, and "his parents went to Jerusalem every year;" but it is not to be presumed that he was less obedient or less zealous in observing the requirements of the law than his parents were: it is therefore fair to conclude that he continued to observe the Passover. We are aware that many suppose that, when he entered upon his public ministry, he was liberated from all obligations to render active obedience to the law. We have conversed with many who held this view, and have invariably found that they based their opinion on this language of our Savior: "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of heaven is preached, and every man presseth into it." Luke 16: 16. If this has reference to the binding power of the law, it proves a great deal more than those holding that view are willing to admit: it proves entirely too much, and, consequently, according to an old maxim, it proves nothing at all. If the language, "the law and the prophets were until John" &c. teaches that the law then lost its binding power over Christ, it proves just as conclusively that its binding power over every other Israelite ceased at that time. But this cannot be admitted, and it will not be, even by those who hold the view referred to; for then all the types of the ceremonial law that pointed to the death of Christ, must fall several years short of meeting that which they typified: from this conclusion there is no escape. We unhesitatingly deny that the text quoted proves what is claimed; and we extremely doubt whether any one would so understand it, if there were not some other point to be made.

Do you ask how we understand this text? If you do, we answer: We are not certain that we understand clearly what it does mean, but we would a thousand times rather confess total ignorance as to its meaning, than to give it a meaning that is repugnant to sound reason and conflicting with other portions of God's word. But by comparing with Matt. 21: 13, we may be enabled to see what our Savior refers to. Matthew says: "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John." The last of the Old Testament prophets figured more than four hundred years before John entered upon his mission, and some of them had been sleeping in the dust more than a thousand years; but, although they were numbered with the dead, they still prophesied; for all along through this long interval, even "until John," the law and the prophecies were read and taught. In this sense "all the prophets and the law prohpesied until John." Some of the prophets had also spoken of John. Thus he was not surpassed by any of the prophets; for he himself was both a prophet and the subject of prophecy. Now by examining these texts you will observe that it is not said, that the law and prophets were only until John, and that they then ceased. The language does not convey that idea; but it is said that from that time on the kingdom of heaven was preached. Christ, in using the language referred to, applies it to John the Baptist, and not to himself.

If the law was not of force after John entered upon his ministry, during Christ's ministry God had no law in force at all; for the will of God revealed through Christ, was not of force till after the death of the Testator. "For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a Testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth." Heb. 9: 16, 17.

Christ in his sermon on the mount said: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil." Matt. 5: 17. His mission was to fulfil the law, in the letter and in the spirit, actively and passively: not only before his public service, but to the end of his mission on earth.—

But he not only fulfiled the law himself, but he taught his disciples to observe the teachings of the scribes, and Pharisees, Saying, "The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat; All therefore whatsoever they bid you observe that observe and do; but do not ye after their works; for they say and do not." Math 23: 2, 3. By sitting in Moses seat is to be understood, that they taught and enforced the law of God, delivered through his servant Moses; and he instructed the multitude and his disciples to observe what they taught. Would he have done this if the law had previously lost its binding force? Nay, surely not: reason recoils from the thought. Not one text in the entire word of God, from the beginning of Genesis to the final Amen of Revalations, teaches that Christ was not under obligation to render an active obedience to the law after he was baptized in the Jordan; and every text that can be perverted so as to convey that idea, in the same manner destroys the obligating power of the law, making it null and void from the same time. Let this suffice upon this point.

4th. The next argument in favor of our position that Christ observed the Passover during his ministry, is deduced from the fact that the Jews never charged him with violating the law. It is well known that they ever watched him that they might find an accusation against him. So closely did they observe that they noticed that his disciples did not adhere to the tradition of the elders in washing before eating. They came to Jesus and said: "Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands before they eat bread." Matt 15: 2. In reply, he reprimanded them for violating the commandment of God by their tradition. Surely if he had not kept the Passover they would have known it, for then the eyes of the Jewish world were on him; and as the victims were all slain at the temple the priests and Levites would have observed it, and they would have brought complaint against him; but we hear no such complaint from priest or people; we therefore conclude that they had no ground for such complaint, and that he did observe the Passover.

5th. There were only two legal excuses for not observing the Passover at the appointed time in the first month: uncleanness by reason of a dead body, and being in a journey afar off; and in these cases there was provision made to observe it at the corresponding time in the second month. "But the man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbeareth to eat the passover, even the same soul shall be cut off from among his people." See Num. 9: 10–13. Was Christ unclean at the time of the passover? Surely not. Was he "in a journey afar off?" No, for we find him in Jerusalem at the proper time: "And the Jews' passover was at hand, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem." Jno. 2: 13. Now, here is the argument: "The man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbeareth to keep the Passover, even the same soul shall be cut off from among his people;" but Jesus was clean, and was not in a journey; therefore if he forbore to keep the passover, the law required that he should be cut off from among his people. What position do you assume, kind reader? Will you assume that he did not observe the Passover, and that the Jews had a legal cause to cut him off from among them, or that he did keep the Passover? There is no way of evading this important alternative. We do not falter in making our choice; so here it is: Christ did keep the Passover, and the Jews had no legal cause to crucify our Lord. Thus we wash our hands before you, and declare our innocence "of the blood of this just person: see ye to it."

6th. Christ was not only at Jerusalem at the time of the Passover, but he was in the temple. "And the Jews' passover was at hand and Jesus went up to Jerusalem, and he found in the temple those that sold oxen, and sheep, and doves, and the changers of money, sitting; and when he had made a scourge of small cords he drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep and the oxen; and overthrew the tables; and said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise." Jno. 2: 13–16. If Christ was not under obligation to observe the law during his ministry, is it not passing strange that he would go up to Jerusalem at the time he did, and go into the temple, and make so much ado obout the abuse of his Father's house? It is too strange to be worthy of credence. But, on the other hand, if he was interested in the services of the temple, and observed the law, there is nothing mysterious about it: we therefore argue from this circumstance, that he obeyed the requirements of the law, and kept the Passover.

7th. Christ observed the feast of tabernacles during his ministry; and from this fact we justly infer that he kept all the feasts. "Now the Jews' feast of tabernacles was at hand. His brethren therefore said unto him, Depart hence, and go into Judea, that thy disciples also may see the works that thou doest." "Then Jesus said unto them, My time is not yet come; but your time is always ready." "Go ye up unto this feast: I go not up yet unto this feast; for my time is not yet full come." He did not say that he would not go to the feast; but, "I go not up yet." The reason assigned for not going yet was, that his time had not fully come. We understand from this that he purposed to go "up unto this feast," when his time should come. "But when his brethren were gone up, then went he also up unto the feast, not openly but as it were in secret. Then the Jews sought him at the feast, and said, where is he?" They expected him to be there, and they "sought him at the feast." No doubt some of their hearts beat high in the hope that he would not attend the feast, so that they could bring an accusation against him for not observing the requirements of the law. But he who was ever faithful had gone up, not only to Jerusalem, but "unto the feast;" so that, while the question, "Where is he?" was going the rounds, he was there in the discharge of duty. "Now about the midst of the feast he went up into the temple and taught;" and "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink." He instructed his brethren to go up to the feast: they went up: "Then went he also up unto the feast." We find him there "about the midst of the feast;" and "in the last day, that great day of the feast." After considering all this, it would betray a degree of skepticism amounting almost to infidelity, to deny that Christ observed the feast of tabernacles; and, to say the least, it would be very inconsistent to admit the fact that he observed this feast, and then deny that he kept the Passover. See Jno. 7: 1-39.

8th. We have one more argument to offer. When we read that Christ's "parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the passover," we all understand that they went to keep the feast, although it is not expressly said, that they went up to the feast, or that they were at the feast. Why is it, then, that all do not understand the same in regard to Christ, when it is said that "the Jews' Passover was at hand, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem?" But in our last argument we noticed, that it was not merely said that Jesus went up to Jerusalem at the time of the feast of tabernacles, but, that he went "up unto the feast." (Jno. 7: 10.) We have therefore, more definite language to prove that Christ observed the feast of tabernacles, than we have to prove that his parents observed the feast of the Passover. Is it not strange then, that, while all believe the latter, some try to dispute the former, which has much clearer proof? We love consistency. But we will now show that there is stronger testimony to establish the fact that Christ kept the Passover during his ministry, than there is to show that either he or his parents ever observed it before his ministry. In Jno. 2: 23, we have this very significant language: "Now when he was in Jerusalem at the passover, in the feast day, many believed in his name, when they saw the miracles which he did." This is more than saying that "the Jews' passover was at hand, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem;" it is more than saying that he was in Jerusalem during the Passover, or at the time of the Passover; it is saying explicitly that "he was in Jerusalem at the Passover." This is so plain, so directly to the point, that there is no room left for controversy or doubt If it should read, that he was in Jerusalem at the supper, we would all understand that he was eating supper; why not, then, when John the beloved disciple, says, "he was in Jerusalem at the passover," also understand that he was there keeping the feast? So we believe with all our heart; and we are not without hope that the candid reader will receive this fact.

Being aware that our arguments on this subject will be read by some who "entertain a different view, we will say to such, whoever you may be, that the only apology we have to offer for assuming this position, is, a love of truth, and a sincere desire that it might be more widely disseminated. In our younger years, like thousands of others, we had no mind of our own upon this subject, and willingly submitted to the instructions of those in whom we reposed confidence. Our instructors occupied the same position you do—that Christ did not observe the Passover during his ministry; and to their honor be it said, that some of them were "mighty in the Scriptures." Their aaguments were willingly heard; and, although they were not satisfactory to us, we endeavored to believe that it was all right—that the fault was in our own weakness, and not in the position itself, nor in the arguments employed to sustain it. But time, circumstances, laborious research, and the grace of God, brought us to the position we now hold. We are also glad to say, that, partly through our weak efforts, but more through the blessing of heaven, those on whose instructions we had mostly relied, are now with us. The arguments on this subject are submitted to your consideration in the hope that you will give them an impartial examination; and if this is done, we entertain no doubts as to the result. We will next pass on to show that our Savior did not eat the Passover with his disciples on the night in which he was betrayed; and we ask you to follow our arguments closely, critically, yet impartially.

CHEWSVILLE, Md.)
March 1st, 1871.)

Brother Editor: We left the Manor branch on Monday, Feb. 17th. We had four meetings in that congregation. We visited the family of David Long, between the meetings, and lodged a night at brother Peter Shamel's. Found both families kind and interesting, and in the enjoyment of good health.

The ministers in the Manor church are: Jacob Highberger, David Long, Danl. Wolf, Joseph Long and P. S. Newcomer.

The weather being very unfavorable, our meetings were not as large as we would have desired. On Monday morning brother Jos. M. Wolf and his son met us at the house of brother Daniel Wolf, where we had our head-quarters. Brother Daniel is our agent, and a zealous friend of the cause. May the Lord bless the Manor brethren.

Thence to brother Jos. M. Wolf's, where we are now writing, and where we have been boarding since Monday. Have had two meetings in the United Brethren meeting-house in Chewsville. The brethren had the promise of the house for three meetings, but after the close of brother Myers' first sermon, they (the U. B.) concluded it would not be safe to risk more than two meetings, and so we have been lying upon our oars for a day. The worst feature in the case is, that we made a promise at the close of the first meeting of what we expected to do during the progress of the meetings, when lo! the door was closed upon us. We learn that a number of persons was at the house, and some had come quite a distance. Some of the people here have expressed very severe censures against the U. B. Church, but we cannot. They have the sway, (there is no other meeting house in Chewsville,) and by their craft they have their wealth, and it is pretty generally known in Washington county, that we try to persuade people that "mourner's bench" religion is a delusion; so that their temple as well as their craft was in danger of being depreciated. We should expect nothing else from them.

We are now about to leave brother Wolf's, and feel almost as though we were going from home. The brethren from Long Meadow are here for us, and after dinner we start again.

We are still in good health, and improving in strength, voice, and mind,(we think,)and we feel as though we ought to be at home and at work; which we hope we will attain ere long. Till then farewell.

Feed My Lambs.

When Christ the Lord was here below,
About the work he had to do;
Before he left his little band,
He gave to them his great command.

Then fishing Peter leads the way,
And nothing caught 'till break of day;
To give them food, thus Jesus stands,
And says to Peter, feed my Lambs.

Thomas was of a doubtful mind,
But Jesus leaves him not behind:
Thomas, said he, behold my hands,
And, Simon Peter, feed my Lambs.

Though men and devils, all unite,
And earthly comforts fail us quite;
The promises of Jesus stand,
And free our souls from Satan's band.

O little children, lend an ear,
For Jesus Christ doth cast out fear;
Poor doubting souls are in his hands,
And precious food for all his Lambs.

Though Peter once denied his Lord,
By disbelieving in his word;
Yet Jesus knew how frail was man,
And says to Peter, feed my lambs.

The richest feast is yet above,
In the enjoyment of his love;
So run to Christ with all your might,
And I will try to keep in sight.

Longevity in Man and the Lower Animals.

The duration of life of larvæ in closely allied forms varies from four years and more to a week. Fleas are said to live as long as nine months. Fish have great tenacity of life. The crab is stated to have reached one hundred and fifty years. A pike which was taken at Halibrun in Suabia, in 1170, weighing three hundred and fifty pounds, and measuring nineteen feet, had a ring attached to it bearing an inscription which, if genuine, would warrant us in believing the age of the fish to be two hundred and sixty seven years. The toad lives thirty-six years, the frog twelve to sixteen years; and tortoises must have seen many years, if we may judge from the sizes to which they attain. Parrots and geese reach an age between one hundred and one hundred and twenty years, and falcons and ravens outlive one hundred and fifty years; but the little wrens live only two or three years. Of mammals, the whale and the elephant have the longest term of existence, living as they do over one hundred, perhaps two hundred years. The horse lives twenty-five, but sometimes reaches forty years: the sheep and goat twelve years, the lion from twenty to fifty years. Man, there is no reason to doubt, has lived past the Psalmist's limit of three score and ten, there being well-authenticated instances of his living over one hundred years; but it is only among highly civilized nations that satisfactory data can be obtained regarding his longevity. A minute investigation of the conditions that conduce to length of life goes to support the theory that the longevity of animals is influenced by their amount of procreative power, and their ability to sustain wear and tear.—Scientific American.

The effect of your example on others will correspond with your own motives. A hard, formal, cheerless profession will reproduce itself, making so-called Christians much as the founder makes his figures of iron men in the mold.

Zenzindorf, when a boy, used to write little notes to the Savior, and throw them out of the window, hoping in his sweet child-like simplicity, that the dear Lord Jesus would find them: such were his early thoughts of Jesus and his early love to him.

Whatever religious teachers we have, if their instructions do not accord with God's Word, we are bound to reject them. If even an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto us, he is accursed. Not only does he shut himself out from the kingdom, but all his deluded followers will be shut out with him.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as a guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript will not be returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Dear Brother:—I am away up here in Michigan this cold day, Jan. 24th, 1871; and I have been reading 1 John 4: 20, 21, whre he says, 'If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother also."

This I believe in my very soul, if I did not, I would have been driven from what I believe to be the true church of God long ago, and where I would be at this time God only knows; for when I search the scriptures as God has given command, I can find no other pool. But thanks be to God, I am yet alive, though not very well in body, yet I will try in my great weakness to hold out a few days more in this land of trial. And now, dear brother I wish to drop a few lines to you—not to complain, but to encourage and build up.

I live in a community of many kind, loving brethren and sisters; and am surrounded by many kind neighbors whom I love. Now, dear reader, look at this matter with coolness and see whether all is right within ourselves, or not, when we meet in private conversation, and say to our dear brother: "I have no objections to meeting with you as a brother, but in consequence of the prejudices that are in the world, I sometimes think that I had better not do it in public." Oh! dear reader, methinks I hear my Lord and Master say: be that is "ashamed of me and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels."

Look at this: suppose our Lord and Master should come and find us dragging along in that kind of faith, would we not call on the mountains to fall on us and cover us from the face of him who sitteth upon the throne? Let us not be deceived, God is not to be mocked: what we do is done unto salvation or destruction, and there is no halfway grounds; it is either for us or against us. It is just as much against my natural disposition to salute a brother us it is against his to salute me.

Dear reader, do not be mistaken: hearken to the blessed Savior where he says. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" and to Peter's "in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." I tell you, my dear reader, when I see one of the members of Christ's body disregarding the word of God, it makes me almost tremble. Yet I know that the word of God says that the time will come that there shall be a great falling away. The reason I speak about these things is, because I hear so much caviling about the different colours. Be care ful that you do not get hold of the wrong end of the story. I saw in a number of the Companion of 1869, what appeared to be the language of an old elder in Botetourt Co. Va., and in reference to a question that had arisen as to whether colored brethren should have or enjoy the same privilege in the church as the white brethren enjoyed. The old brotber remarked that it was too soon after their emancipation, to have equality with their white brethren and sisters. We of course understand him to refer to the church. I would just say to the brethren and sisters all over this wide land: try to pray for that dear old brother, that he might be converted, so that he may see the beauty of the words of the Lord, that God is no respecter of persons, and of the declaration of Peter: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation, he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." So we can plainly see that the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile was broken down, so that all, in the same manner, might have access to one common Father, and so making peace &c.

Now, dearly beloved, a few words to you, out of love to God and yourselves. I hear every few weeks that some of you have said that you would like to come to the church if there were no colored people in the church. Let me say to you that, if you stay out of the church, you will have to breathe the same air, and drink the same water; and if you travel any by rail and eat at any of the hotels, you will have to eat of their cooking, and when you die and go to judgment, you will have to be judged by the same Judge, by the same law, and you will have to meet them either in happiness or misery, one or the other; you can't dodge it, so I leave that for you to decide for yourselves.

Now dear brother, I do earnestly ask you in candour to give these few thoughts a place in the Companion; for I do think when we take the responsibility of looking upon our neighbour with contempt or disdain we assume too much. I believe that God's work is a perfect work. We must either make the tree good and its fruit good, or the tree evil and its fruit evil. God "made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." But mankind violated his law, and he saw that they had all gone out of the way—all had sinned. Then he sent his only begotten Son unto the world, to call sinners to repentance. Now, if my dear, white friends only are sinners, then the call is to you; but if the poor, despised, down-trodden people of color are sinners too, when the call is given, Oh! do let us obey the call, for our sake, and for your own soul's sake.

Think for a moment; a few years ago when our land and country was in a perilous condition, you know the government called on the people to sustain it. The white man went, the black man went, and the red man went; and all were willing toward the close of the war. They did not care how black the man was, so that the country was saved. You did not want the blood of your darling sons and noble brothers to be spilled in vain. Oh! no. But now we are done fighting with carnal weapons; and yet I hear of some saying that they will never come to the church while there are any colored persons belonging to the church. They are not willing to take up the sword that the great Lawgiver has given, which is the word of God, that is sharper than any two edged sword, and fight side by side with a colored, fellow soldier, to repulse the great arch-foe of the human race, and to rescue their fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, sons and daughters, friends and neighbors, from impending ruin.

Oh! do be content. If you expect to enjoy the society of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Moses, Aaron and Solomon, and of all the holy prophets, priests, and kings, and of the apostles and martyrs of Jesus, and of all the children of God of every nation age and clime, you must lay aside that tradition and receive with meekness the ingrafted word which is able to save your souls from eternal ruin. That this may be your happy lot is my prayer. SAMUEL. MARRS.

Random Thoughts, No. 3.

BY S. M. MINNICH.

In advertising good reliable articles, the public are often benefited.

Brother Thomas having good teas, spices, &c.; Messrs. Bane & Co having good books, or Mr. Agriculturist having farming implements, grain, seed, &c. to sell, by advertising it will often be of more benefit to the subscriber than to the publisher or advertiser. Certainly then, let us have the good advertised in the Companion. But with the evil set before the public in humbug advertisements, we trust brother Holsinger will ever keep from defacing its pages. No advertisement ought to be admitted that misrepresents, in the least, what is advertised.

A few weeks ago I asked a man, what would be the prospect of collecting some money that is due me, from a neighbor of his; telling him, that his neighbor had owed me for years, and that he had made many "fair promises," but had never filled one of them. Said he, "I will report him." "Report him! What do you mean by that?" "Why, sir, members of our order, (Odd Fellows,) are not permitted to contract debts they cannot, or do not, pay; and then, add to this, the sin of lying; I will report him to the lodge." "O yes, yes, but we fear your Odd Fellow law, like the higher law, is not always obeyed."

If the types will allow, I will also "report" a brother; not to bring condemnation on him, but to show, how reproach sometimes is brought upon the church, in business transactions.

In a conversation with a merchant in Toledo, some months ago, about debts and their payment, he remarked that a partner of his thought "Dunkards," were the slowest order of people he knew in paying their debts.

The only foundation this man (whom I will call B.) had for this opinion was this: a brother, whom I will call L.,) had owed him for six years. Intending to move to the city he did his best to collect this claim, but he could not. He left the account with his partner who tried four years without so much as getting the account into a note. Trying for ten years without any result, friend B. became a little impatient, and wrote to his partner that he would be at his old home, on a certain day, and that he should notify our delinquent brother L. to meet him there on said day. The day came; the debtor and creditor were brought face to face; the business for which they had met, brother L. introduced in these cheering words: "Uncle Billy, aint you in a little of a hurry to settle that account?"

Oh! that I and every brother, and every sister, would let our light shine in every day life, so brilliantly, that the world would be convinced that ours is the religion of Jesus!

Dear brethren and sisters: My fourth report was written from Franklin county, Antietam branch. Had one more meeting, at Amsterdam meeting-house, and one at Price's.—Thence conveyed by brother Henry Deardorf to Mt Zion meeting-house —Falling spring branch; and in the evening to the Falling Spring meeting-house

On Feb. 17th, arrived at brother Jacob Fogelsanger's in the Ridge congregation; but owing to a misunderstanding, or misarrangement, no appointments were made in this branch. Thence conveyed by friend David Fogelsanger to the Upper Cumberland branch, where we had four meetings in the Union meeting-house, and also four at Mentzer's school house. In this branch Elder Daniel Keller is the house keeper. On the 23rd arrived at Mechanicsburg, was met by elder Moses Miller, and conveyed to his house, with whom I had pleasant and interesting conversation. One meeting in Mechanicsburg this evening, which closed my labors for this visit. To day was brought on my way by brother M. Miller at Mechanicsburg, where I left at 12. 15. P. M. At Harrisburg met brother Samuel Longanecker returning from a visit in Lancaster county, where he was called by Telegraph—his daughter Lizzie being seriously ill. Arrived at Tyrone about dark, found all in reasonable health. A majority of the meetings in this report were rather a slim attendance but good order and attention. My health is still good. I here acknowledge the tokens of Christian affection and kindness received at the hands of brethren and sisters everywhere, and the goodness of God in sparing life and granting health. &c.

DANIEL M. HOLSINGER.

Tyrone, Pa.

Friend Holsinger, and readers of this Companion, I will endeavor to inform you, that three of your kind brethren have been here with us, and tried to reconcile the minds of the careless, and unconcerned. They held nine meetings, eight in a schoolhouse, and one in a private house; and they have made a great impression on the minds of the people. The majority of the people here, acknowledge that they have been enlightened more than they ever were before; and people making no profession said they would have boarded them a whole week if they had stayed longer. One man came early in the morning, with the intention of being baptized—he and his wife—but they were gone; and they left many more pondering between two opinions.—They had just got the people's minds aroused; and if they had stayed one week longer, they would have done well. The people said they did not do their duty, by going away so soon, The only fault we find to your traveling brethren, is, that they stay just long enough to arouse the minds of the people. The people have been roared at so much, by the roaring Lion, that they hardly know what to do any more, and it takes some time to convince them of their wrongs.—We are sorry that they left so soon; but as it is so, we will expect them to come back again. There is a work to be done here. I believe there can be a church established here of the brethren faith. So brethren, do all you can to send out your preachers, into the world; so that they can let their light shine before the world, and convince them of their wrongs. Be liberal; it is hard for these brethren to travel and pay their own expenses; so you ought to all be liberal to those traveling brethren. For my part I feel willing to do all I can. Although I am not a member of the brethren church, I shall fight for the cause, for I believe it to be a true one, and a good one. My neighbor, where friends Calvert and Yount stayed the night before, they left in the morning, said he would have given them five dollars as freely as a drink of water, if he had had it; and that neighbor makes no profession at all. Your brethren let their light shine, and the people saw it, and they loved them for it. I say, friends, come back again. Come again, I say, and let your light shine once more, that the eyes of the people may be opened; that they may see that there is a true gospel taught in this world; that they may be taught that the will of our heavenly Father must be all observed, and not a word trampled under foot. And give the people to understand that we can't read of half christians going to heaven; nothing but a full christian, and they are scarcely saved. Then it is time for people to open their eyes to the deceptions of the world. Let brethren be liberal to their treasury, and send forth their gospel teachers; and let them teach the true gospel to be observed. Then I say to you, brethren, rejoice in the building up of your church; for I believe it is founded on a rock, and nothing can prevail against it. H. HUNT.

Dear Brother: Since I came to the Big Cove, the time being about three years, I have been trying to make every exertion to further the divine cause of our Lord and Master, and still feel it a duty to do so. We have only fifteen members in the Cove, and pretty well scattered, so that we do not see them together very often, our appointments being twelve weeks apart. I thought perhaps some of the ministering brethren in the adjoining districts would come over and help us, since we are but few, so that, if the Lord will, we might have, not only a brother here and there, but many. The invitation is to all our kind ministering brethren. We have had strange ministers here, and it proved good to saint and sinner. If any kind brother would wish to come and labor for the Lord among us, please let us know ten or fifteen days previous.

Yours in bonds of love.

Brother Holsinger: Please announce through the Companion, that the North-western Ohio District council will be held on the 12th, day of May next, in the bounds of the Seneca church, at the house of brother David Roop, on the road leading from Tiffin to Attica, twelve miles from the former, and five miles from the latter place. Those coming from the east and wishing to stop off at Centerton, will please inform brethren David or Israel Roop, at Attica, Ohio. Those stopping at Tiffin, will be met there by the brethren, with ample means to convey them to the the place of meeting.

By order of the church.

S. A. WALKER.

Dear Brother Henry: I have not taken the Companion fer some time, nor any other paper. I have been engaged in reading the Scriptures of divine truth, and also have read various works of man, such as comments on the word of God, by Benson and others. But they do not compare well with the Gospel. They seem to build something to live by, instead of the Gospel; therefore I reject such men's works. The best and surest way is to obey Christ, and not man. Now I want to hear from the brethren and sisters wherever they may be, and I am sure that they have given good advice through the Companion, and I believe that they are willing to do so yet. I believe also, that if those outside of the true church of God, would take the COMPANION and read it and the Gospel, or compare them together, they would not hesitate to obey Christ.

Brethren, Editors: I desire to inform you and your readers, that we, in the providence of the good Lord, have had and enjoyed a series of meetings in the Plum creek congregation, Armstrong Co., Pa. Brothr. P. J. Brown of Congress, O., and brother Jos. Keim of Louisville, O., came to us on Thursday, Feb. 9th, had meeting on said evening; next day at 10 A. M. and 6½ P. M., and so continued to meet daily with those who felt to meet with us to worship God in earthly tabernacles, until Monday Feb. 23rd, 9 A. M., Thirteen desiring the ordinance of baptism to be administered, we met for counsel & to hear from brethren Brown and Keim, on the ordinance of Christian Baptism; at which time brother Brown brought forward such arguments as were pertinent on the occasion; and, having finished the preliminaries, he went as the servant down into the water, cold as it was, (say the bystanders,) and the thirteen, found a watery grave, to bury the old man in, and rose, we trust, "to walk in newness of life." Meeting at 6½ P. M. After meeting, it was made known that, six more desired also to be ingrafted into "the true vine" by bapti m. Accordingly, on Tuesday, at 9 A. ., the church was called for counsel, and these six also obeyed the Lord in being baptised. The brethren here still urged our laborers to sta y for one more meeting, at 6½ P. M., when one more came and desired to obey the Lord; hence at this, our last meeting, the church council convened on Wednesday 22 Feb. at 9 A. M., to receive this one and induct him into the batismal grave, and thus into Christ.

Now we fondly trust that these twenty who were "baptized into Christ, have put on Christ;" and that they "also should walk in newness of life;" and "likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.' Gal. 3: 27; Rom. 6: 4-11. At this time we take the parting hand and brethren Brown and Keim visit brother G W. Shafer's family, and have a little meeting on the eve of the 22 inst., ready to take, the morning train at Indiana for their homes in Ohio. The brethren here were much revived, and many prayers went up to him who sees all things, for their safe return to their families.

Now brethren, you who read this, and feel an interest in the prosperity of zion, and every individual member thereof gaining "the crown of life" laid up for the faithful, pray for us, that all may, by the grace of God, be enabled to prove faithful to the end. I desire to say in this connection that brother J. P. Hetric, of Oakland, Pa., was with us at three meetings, and labored at one. On leaving he said, (for things looked dark) "Continue, you will yet be blessed." Our well wishes and prayers go up for our brethren who have labored for us; and we trust that some of the seed sown, that has not yet grown up, will yet manifest itself, and many souls may yet, in consequence of our little meeting, be added to the church in Christ Jesus.

Notice.

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and sells readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. Fahrney, No 30, North Dearborn St. Chicago, Illinois, or

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Doing Great Things for God.

TO AN EARNEST CHRISTIAN.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

The most bustling are not always the most efficient workers. Those are not necessarily the best christians who live in an unruffled sense of peace. A hundred giants may not be able to uproot a tree which a little worm may lay low. A true apprehension of God, will render sin exceedingly sinful, holiness exceedingly beautiful, obedience exceedingly delightful, the promises exceedingly precious, and every moment exceedingly valuable. Every sin will be measured, not by its form or circumstances, but by the law it violates and the Character it dishonors. Every act and work will be gauged, not by its apparent magnitude, but by its true proportions in the light of Eternity, and by its relation to the Infinite. The transformation of the fallen finite after the Ideal of the Divine, will give to everything a new aspect, and help us in the valley of humiliation by the sense of demerit, and on the mount of transfiguration by the sense of the Divine in-being, and a peace, through faith, which passeth all understanding. We need not then go far in search to find our sphere, or for work to suit our sanctified capacities. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," and as he owns and superintends every part, there is not a work too humble or obscure for the greatest in the kingdom of Heaven." "The Son of the Highest"—very God incarnate, found room and dignity enough in a stable for the inauguration of the stupendous scheme which eldest angels fail to comprehend. He worked none the less mightily for God and for us when he lay in the manger in swaddled helplessness, unknown save to a few of earth's humblest citizens. He came to do his Father's will, and this involved an entrance into life that would teach all believers in every age, that to be great and accomplish a great work, we need not be conspicuous. The world knew him not, even in the outward sense, from the necessity of being so much like a simply human being in order to meet the conditions essential to our redemption. You may possibly have erred, my beloved, in your conception of the dignity and glory of religion as regards the principle we have endeavored to unfold. You perhaps need to be cautioned against the mistake of being chiefly occupied with what is incidental, instead of the intrinsic excellence of christianity. This is the natural tendency of the human mind. The oppressive sadness and loneliness of which you complain, is not owing to your destitution of grace, nor to the want of a higher sphere in which to labor. The very desire to work for God is itself of grace, and willingness to work where providence assigns our lot, must be of grace also. You "see men as trees walking," and need another touch of the great Oculist to enable you to see every thing clearly. Likeness to God in character, and oneness with him in aim and the means of accomplishment, make a growing, contented, useful christian. You remark that you "sometimes become so discouraged that you scarcely know how to live." Your experience is not new to the saints. At this point a strong sensitive sympathetic nerve connects you with a loving Brotherhood. You have not forgotten, I humbly trust, the searching impressive discourse of brother Quinter at your last Lovefeast, in which he expounded the vision recorded in Isaiah 6: 1—8. The effect of the Divine manifestation on that holy man, was, to give him such a sense of vileness and unworthiness, that he cried out, "woe is me, for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips." This is invariably the result of a clear perception of the Divine character. Darkness always becomes darker when penetrated by the vivid glare of lightning. So long as we compare the prophet with those around him, he may be pronounced eminently holy; but no sooner does the vision of the Immaculate flash upon him, and reveal only so much of the glory of Deity as mortal eyes may behold, than the venerable seer felt his insignificance, and gave vent to the strongest expressions of self-denunciation. Your experience is as old as piety itself. Whenever God reveals himself to a soul, there will be self-abasement, self-loathing, and earnest, unreserved consecration to God. If you give yourself to the contemplation of the Divine character and the crucifixion of sin as your baptismal vow demands, you will often have occasion to repeat the prophets exclamation, "woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a person of unclean lips." Such revelations of holiness and sin are no ground for discouragement, but, on the contrary, are designed to inspire hope and confidence. God draws nigh and unveils his glory, not to repel but to sanctify and humble us; to give us fitter conceptions of his majesty and purity, and of our filthiness and demerit. The unclean lips that are seen in the light of his presence, are to be purged with a live coal from off the Altar of holiness. The "woe is me" is speedily followed by the high commission of the Supreme, and the ready response to be any thing, do any thing, or go any where, at the Divine bidding. This prepares the way to do great things for God in ways that have only the appearance of dullness and servility to eyes not anointed from above. Your readiness to run the Lord's errand finds expression in language like this: "Oh, if I only could do something good in the world; if I could but be the means of bringing one soul to Christ; if I could only do something for the Lord, be it ever so little." My dearly beloved, your prayer is answered all the time. In other parts of your letter you remark, "I do try to set an example worthy of imitation; I try to exert an influence that others might see my good works, and glorify our Father in Heaven." And is not this the very method which God has instituted for the extension of his Kingdom? And is not such circumspection of walk the condition of spiritual development as well as spiritual influence? The good works which are to have such mighty power, are not extraordinary in the common sense of the term, but the every-day expressions of our christian life. "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." Although primarily applicable to ministers, this injunction embodies the true idea of personal holiness, as meetness for Heaven, and the true missionary idea in the individual sense, and its exemplification will not fail of the rich blessing of God. "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." This is every-day glory—the grandeur of living to God in small things—and it is glory enough for those who have rightly conceived of the Christian Religion. To eat and drink, to cook and bake, to wash and mend, to scrub and scour to the glory of God every day, is a more glorious spectacle in the sight of God and his Angels, than to live an indifferent life, relieved by occasional acts of generosity and sacrifice which compare as strangely with the person's general conduct, as does the christian life with the course of the world. It is not the outwardly great act, astonishing the mind and winning admiration but the devotion that parts with the last mite, that marks the truly noble, Crist-loving soul. Imitate the quiet, unobtrusive Mary, who does good by stealth, and is discovered only by the fragrance of the precious ointment of self-sacrifice which she has poured on some poor saint's feet. You may be as dear to your saviour and glorify him as much, where you are, as if placed in circumstances which you might deem more favorable. That you can have so great an object in all you do as the glory of God, gives dignity to your domestic duties, and throws the lustre of Heaven around your table, your stove, your broom, your needle, and what not? It is not some great deed, forcibly striking the senses, that dignifies the christian life, but it is the Divine presence and blessing that enables every little daily act of our pilgrimage. Have you not abundant opportunity "to do something for the Lord, if it be ever so little?" If you do all to the glory of God, you can fill your life with great deeds which will gain the approbation of the everlasting God, and shine, with undimmed glory, in the records of Eternity. Remember the "cup of cold water." Stamp the impress of holiness on every little act, and you "shall be called great in the Kingdom of Heaven."

Quench not the Spirit.

This is one of the precepts that St. Paul gave unto the Thessalonian brethren. In reading the first epistle of Paul to the church, we observe a beautiful flow of sentiment, in the affectionate manner in which he addressed it; first greeting them: "Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." Assuring them of his remembrance in their be-hall, "in his prayers, and not forgetful of their work of faith, labor of love and patience of hope in our Lord." There were undoubtedly comforting news to the church; knowing from what a sinful condition they were brought, through the preaching of the inspired apostles; also giving assurance that "they were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia." Having these blessed, praiseworthy merits laid before them, we may well conceive the encouragement it was calculated to give them to persevere in the good work they had undertaken. It must have been apparent on all occasions, that the Spirit was not quenched, or so much good result could not have followed them, since the apostle assures us, that in every place their faith to God-ward was spread abroad. They must have felt, like never being any less worthy of those welcome messages, undoubtedly striving to further the blessed cause of Christ, to those yet in darkness, turning many "to God from idols, to serve the true and living God." As the faithful apostles did in ancient days, so our faithful brethren in those days desire to follow the teachings of our Heavenly Father, through the blessed Saviour. And we have cause to greet them in like manner for their "labor of love among us every where. We can say with faith, their time spent in declaring "the truth" to a sinful world is well spent; although the results sometimes do not follow immediately, they most assuredly will at some future day; for God has said that his word shall not return unto him void. In this instance also may it be said, the faithful brethren observe the precept, "Quench not the Spirit." The willingness we show in obeying all scriptural truths, is an evidence of permitting the Holy Spirit to dwell in our hearts, there to reign supreme. And when we have an affectionate desire for other souls to taste of the rich manna sent from heaven, we are willing to impart unto them the gospel of God, because they are dear unto us and our prayers cease not to that effect. Although many long years have elapsed, and many prayers have been offered by those who feel an interest in the welfare of dear souls, hope has not dawned upon our feeble efforts, in bringing them to fall at the feet of Jesus, and plead for mercy. Have all exertions of love been in vain? Seemingly so. But our faith prompts us to believe that our sacrifice may yet prove effectual, if we "stand not in the Lord," and "Quench not the Spirit." The children of the day should ever be on their guard, bearing in mind that "the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night." Let us watch, and be ever comfort one another with those holy precepts of divine revelation. The inspired apostle, in closing his epistle to the church, by imploring the brethren to "esteem those very highly who labor among us, for their work's sake." Finally, he asks: "Brethren pray for us." May we ever continue in such a holy frame of mind as we see evinced from the pen of the beloved apostle Paul. We may all desire that holy character, and attain it, to a certain degree. But very many of us are taken up with the cares of this world to such an extent, that we often, quench the good Spirit for temporal advancement. We admit this should not be the case, nevertheless it is apparent in the youthful and aged stations of mankind. To be truthful to ourselves and God, we should all give heed unto the teachings of the Holy Spirit, ever striving to bring us nearer to God.

The Life Struggle.

The world knows no victory to be compared with victory over our passions. The struggle of life is between the flesh and the spirit, and one or the other finally gains the ascendancy. Every day and every hour of that battle of life is this contest going on. The apostle Paul after having labored long and earnestly in the Lord's service—for having done more for the spread of the truth than all the other apostles—felt all that he was a human being, and liable at any time through the weakness of the flesh, to lose all. "I keep under my body," says he, "and bring it into subjection, lest after I have preached the gospel unto others, I myself should be a castaway." The pathway through life is thorny, and with snares for our feet. The influences of passion, the allurements of vice, things to stir up our anger and arouse our baser feelings, await us at every turn of life's devious ways and blessed, indeed, is that man or that woman who meets them all without fears.

For the C[illegible]an.

Christ's Adve[illegible]

No. 2.

"But the rest of th[illegible]ead lived not again until the the[illegible] and years were finished. This is [illegible]he first resurrection. Blessed [illegible]d holy is he that hath a part in [illegible]e first resurrection: on such the se[illegible]nd death hath no power but they [illegible]all be priests of God and of Chri[illegible], and shall reign with him a thou[illegible]and years." As we have stated in a former treatise, the bodies of the saints shall be called forth, and the different particles of the decayed putrefaction be changed in the twinkling of an eye: even so the living saints, those who obey his voice, observe all things whatsoever he has commanded, shall be changed also and caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air; while the wicked and disobedient shall be destroyed with the brightness of his coming, and banished from his peaceful presence to live no more, but to die that eternal death "where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched;" "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." It is the humble and candid opinion of the writer, though it is not so plainly revealed, that the earth shall be changed and made like unto the garden of Eden, and the Lord and his hosts shall inhabit this earth For proof of the same we will examine a few passages. "For the Lord shall comfort Zion: he will comfort her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord: joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody." Is. 51: 3. "I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to hell with them that descend into the pit; and all the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth." Ez. 31: 16. We are constrained to believe that the two foregoing passages have reference to the reinstatement of the earth, when the Lord shall come to comfort Zion—come to be glorified in his saints—come in flames of fire to take vengeance on all that do wickedly. The language of Ezekiel "I make the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to hell with them that descend into the pit," we think is equivalent to that of the Revelator, "And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season." Rev. 20: 1–3. Some perhaps would differ with me, and many do, and say that "the earth is to be burned up, we think not, the earth is not to be annihilated, from the following passages. "And thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the works of thy hands. They shall perish, but thou remainest: and they all shall wax old as doth a garment, and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail. Heb. 1: 10–12. We understand this to teach us that in the beginning the Lord laid the foundation of the earth, he made the earth, but it shall perish—not be annihilated—but as a vesture will be fold it up, and it shall be changed; yea, it shall be renovated by fire, for the fire shall melt and make anew. We will next see 2 Peter 3: 20, "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat: the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up."

"Dear and friendly reader, your most unworthy writer does honestly understand the Apostle's language that the earth shall not be burned up but melted as the elements are to be melted. But it is the works that the Apostle says are to be burned up. For further information, see 1 Cor. 3: 13, "Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it; because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." So we learn from the passage that it is the wicked works of man that shall be burned, and not the earth, but it is to be melted as the elements. But as the refiner of gold may heat and melt his gold, that it may seem to stream as vapor, and apparently lose its original weight, yet as it cools down, we find there is not a particle lost: the original weight of gold is there, and more pure than it was before. Even so shall it be in the day of the Lord, when he shall come to judge the earth: the wicked works of men, or the dross of the earth shall be destroyed; but the pure metal, the righteous, shall lose nothing but their dross: "For he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver." Let this suffice for the earth's being renovated, and changed, reinstated like unto Eden, or the garden of the Lord. O happy for the Christian, indeed! There shall be no pestilence upon the earth, no more thorn or thistle, no more bramble nor grub to remove, no more oppression nor poverty, no more sickness nor pain, no more famine nor crying for bread; but all shall be peace and plenty, "and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord; for all shall know me from the least to the greatest."

We are constrained to believe, from what little investigation we have made of the teachings of prophecy, that the Lord shall alight upon the earth, on the spot from which he ascended; and that there will be his place of residence during the millenial era. Yea, he shall descend to the mount of Olives, and there will he establish himself as King over all the earth. For a better understanding, and for the edification of my friendly readers, we refer you to Zech. 14th chapter, beginning with the 4th verse; "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains; for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal; yea ye shall flee like as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, king of Judah; and the Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the light shall not be clear, nor dark; but it shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord, not day nor night, but it shall come to pass that at evening time it shall be light. And it shall be in that day that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea: in summer and in winter shall it be." We think the prophet is very explicit, that the Lord shall alight upon the mount of Olives as he left it. Remember the language of the angels to the illiterate fishermen of Galilee: "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner."

Yes, he will descend and alight upon the mount from which he ascended; then shall the mountain cleave in the midst thereof, and one half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and one half of it toward the south, and there shall be a very great valley there: a place where the accepted of the Lord shall assemble annually to worship him who "shall be King over all the earth; in that day the Lord shall be one and his name one. When all "the land shall be turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon, South of Jerusalem." "And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited." And we are plainly informed that there shall be a house erected in this valley which shall be made by the removal of the mountain; and out from under the threshold of the house eastward issued living waters. We now see beyond the grave, the morning of that blessed millennium; we see the river of the water of life clear as crystal; we see its formation and creation, through the prophetic glass; but then we shall see face to face, these waters issuing toward the east country, and going down into the desert, and going into the sea, which being brought forth into the sea the water shall be healed. And while I pen these words of prophecy, they cause my bosom to glow with emotions unspeakable and full of joy, hoping to be one in the happy throng, who shall pluck the ambrosial fruits from the trees that shall grow on either side of the river; whose fruit shall be for meat, and which shall yield abundantly every month, and the leaves of the trees shall be for medicine. "And there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither, for they shall be healed, and every thing shall live whither the river cometh. And it shall come to pass that the fishers shall stand upon it from Engedi even unto Eneglaim; they shall be a place to spread forth nets: their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many." For the information of those interested in the glorious era thats hall come—the millennial reign of our Lord and Savior—we refer you to the last eight chapters of the prophecy of Ezekiel, beginning with the fortieth chapter; where we can look through the prophetic glass and see the erection of the house, giving us the size of the house very minutely, and even every particular pertaining to the sanctuary; the highth, the length, the breadth, and width; all of which is too tedious for us to mention now. Suffice it to say that we believe from the prophetic language by the prophet in the chapter referred to, that the ordinances will then be changed, even as they were changed from the Mosaic dispensation to the present Gospel dispensation. As it was in the old era, they offered sacrifices and burnt offerings to the most high God; but the Gospel has changed to baptism, feet-washing, the supper, and holy Eucharist. Even so shall it be changed back to sacrifices and offerings as it was in former days, or similar, for the first shall be last and the last shall be first. Let us see then, that we on the earth, who want to be the happy recipients of the glory of his millennial reign, do not change the Gospel ordinances to suit our peculiar fancy; but perpetuate the same until he shall come to change at his divine command. For he shall be King over all the earth, who is King of kings, and Lord of lords. And while we meditate upon the glorious era that shall come, we cannot helpbut remember the beautiful lines of the Poet:

"See a long race thy spacious courts adorn,
See future sons and daughters yet unborn,
In crowding ranks, on every side arise,
Demanding life, impatient for their skies.

See barb'rous nations at thy gate attend,
Walk in thy light, and in thy temple bend,
See thy bright altars thronged with prostrate kings,
While every land its joyous tribute brings.

Yea, the tribute of praise and adoration shall go up to Jerusalem once a year, from every kindred tongue and nation; from the uttermost parts of the earth, shall they assemble annually to worship the Lamb their God. O what annual meetings shall there be! one law giver, one Lord, and his name One. They whom the Lord shall accept in that day; they who keep his commandments faithfully until death, shall be made the happy participants of the ambrosial fruit which is to grow on either side of the river, "whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed: it shall bring forth new fruit according to his month, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary; and the fruits thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine." Ezek. 47: 12. And when thirsty, his servants shall sip the healing waters and live; and should there be any pain or disease with those who come from the uttermost parts of the earth to the annual meeting, they shall be healed by the leaves of the trees; for they shall be for the healing of the nations.

[To be Continued.]

ANDREW STALNAKER.

For the Companion.

A Savior's Love.

Why do I love Jesus? Because he first loved me.

How many are made to appreciate the grand significance attached to the above poetical lines. How beautifully they portray before our wandering minds the inscribed love of Jesus. Truly they are worthy of being inscribed in words of living light upon the tablet of our hearts. How sweet! their accents of love come to us with redoubled force, when we see it verified by a personal confirmation in the person of Jesus, who, in the majesty of his power, ascended to the celestial climes, where Angels and millions are singing the sweet songs that man redeemed alone can sing. Methinks, when I contemplate the ineffable joys that are to await the faithful Christian, I can almost gaze through the dark cloud that intervenes, and behold the Saints surrounding the throne of the majesty on high, with a perpetual song of Moses and the Lamb. Yes, there we shall, if permitted to enter, walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem, with palms of victory in our hands, and bathe in the crystal fountains of love, that flow from the throne of the Deity, and will continue to flow in their undisturbed tranquility, as long as eternity shall continue to roll!

We can not now begin to portray the grandeurs of heaven. Well might inspiration say: "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered which the Savior said: "He that loveth me keepeth my commandments." From the above explicit language, we infer that no man can truly love Jesus without submitting to all the requirements of the Gospel. The Christian may roam over the wide world, and in all his travels he witnesses the goodness and wisdom of an infinite being. He may view the fields clothed with magnificent beauty. Yes, man may open the garden gate, and take a peep at the flowers that are expanding their lovely petals, and in that lovely flower he admires the mysterious works of a supreme Ruler: because "he has made everything beautiful in his time." Eccl. 3: 11. The atheist, when he views the grand arrangement of stars that spangle heaven's blue dome, is almost persuaded to believe in the existence of a Supreme Ruler.

And again, our love to Jesus is also manifested by a regard for his house, his worship, and his ordinances. This is beautifully illustrated by the old Psalmist David, from whom we are so frequently refreshed by many expressions full of pathos and deep significance. He exclaims: "How lovely are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts! my soul longeth, yea, even fainteth, for the courts of the Lord." Oh! that the words of David could be deeply stamped upon our hearts, and cause us to manifest a love for the sanctuary of the Lord. I have frequently observed that upon our gathering together for the purpose of worshiping the true and living God, grouped together around in the house, we find that our conversation is altogether upon worldly affairs. Surely our souls do not, like David's, long and faint for the house of the Lord. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." This proves conclusively that if our conversation is chiefly on the affairs of this life, our hearts are there also. Does it not all at once show a lack of love? How much better were it if we would consider the glorious personage we are to meet there, and converse with our own hearts and with God; the aspiration of our souls arising toward his holy temple in silent praise and thanksgiving. O my yoke-mates in Jesus, you who have embraced Christianity in the days of youthful discretion, though the world point the finger of scorn at you, and make sport of your profession, press forward to the mark for the prize. Your calling is a holy one; and if you make heaven and its joys your chief object, and enlist all your faculties under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, you can look forward with anticipation, to see the blessed period arrive when you shall reap the full fruition of your labors in the kingdom of eternal bliss.

Young Brother, young Sister, and old ones too, you are engaged in a warfare. Jesus is your captain; and so terible is that war, that it is not safe for you to lay your weapons down for a moment. Satan is incessantly on the alert to attact you. Look how he prowls or lurks about to deceive or destroy! The world, the flesh, and the devil are to be overcome, and to such as overcome, is the promise of an inheritance with Jesus Christ the righteous. The wilderness of trial is before you, and you enter it as you rise from the baptismal grave. Strive lawfully, and go forward, and see the salvation of God.

Unconverted reader, as you value the eternal destiny of your poor perishing souls, let me impress this solemn declaration upon your heart, that you must die. Yes, death is written in glowing letters upon the tablet of your throbbing little heart, and ere you read these lines of your young contributor, your soul may take its flight to yonder world, to witness the scenes of a never ending futurity. Fearful dilemma, if unconverted you stand on the very brink of death, and the least pulsation of God's wrath may crush you down beneath the surging billows of hell. Flee, oh! flee from the wrath to come! lay hold on eternal life, and accept the Savior as your dear and intimate friend, and you, too, will be joined with the Saints of heaven. JACOB T. MEYERS.

It is our own vanity that makes the vanities of others intolerable to us.

One of the finest qualities in a human being is that nice sense of delicacy which renders it impossible for him ever to be an intruder or a bore.

It is a good divine that follows his own instructions. I can easier teach twenty men what were good to be done, than to be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching.

WAYNESBORO, PA.)
March 7th, 1871.)

Dear C. F. C.,: Once more by way of correspondence and we shall have done for this trip.

At Long Meadow we visited brother Daniel Sneller's and sister Ann Roland's, and held two evening and one day meeting. Also made the acquaintance of brethren Baker and Harmon of the Welsh Run branch. On Thursday evening, Elder G. Myers bade us farewell, having consented to preach at a school-house near brother Harmon's, and in the morning to take the cars for Montgomery county, Pa., while we were left to fill the last appointment at Long Meadow. Meetings small, but not without interest.

On Friday, friend Jones Roland conveyed us to Waynesboro. We are now among our relatives. Took dinner at Daniel H. Fahrney's.—Lodged at Jacob Holsinger's, where we had the pleasure of laying our hands upon the first table owned by our great grand father, and from its appearance we would conclude that in the age in which he lived, he must have been a man of good taste. If we had it at home it would be highly prized; as it is we will take only a piece of it as a relic.

On Saturday, to sister Elizabeth Fahrney, widow of brother Jacob Fahrney, a noted physician and minister among the Brethren. Dined with brother Daniel Holsinger's, residing on the old Holsinger homestead, which has been in the family for over a hundred years, but has lately been sold to strangers. Thence to Jacob Shank's, wife's relatives. Thence to evening meeting in the Presbyterian house, in Waynesboro. Good attendance and excellent attention. All night at brother Josiah Fahrney's. All the Fahrneys I met in mentioned are sons of brother Jacob Fahrney, referred to above.

On Sunday forenoon, preached at Snowberger's meeting-house, and dined at brother Jacob Snowberger's, and visited his mother who is nearly ninety years of age. In the evening preached at Price's meeting-house. Both meetings were smaller than we had expected, but those who were present gave good attention to what was spoken. Lodged with brother Daniel Fahrney.

Monday, visited sister Nancy Baker, grand-father Holsinger's sister, who is very old and sickly. Dined at brother Henry Deardorff's, married to a cousin. In the afternoon visited the "Snow Hill," the Seventh Day Baptist Nunnery. This institution is a monument of the religious fanaticisms of the age. The building is large and roomy but low and gloomy, and rapidly approaching dilapidation. There are but a few nuns, (less than a dozen) living in the institution. Henry Bowman, an old inhabitant, showed us through the building from top to cellar. The most desirable part of the establishment are the beautiful springs in the cellar and about the house. We observed that one of the extensions was about six inches lower than the other part of the building, and were told that the leader had a dream at the time the extension was about building, in which it was told him that if it be made as high as the principle building, the institution would come to naught; hence the effort.

Lodged with brother Daniel Holsinger and had the pleasure of forming a better acquaintance than we had heretofore enjoyed, and spent the evening in pleasant conversation, without getting into an argument.

Tuesday, visited David Fahrney's, and sister Susie Holsinger, who live together. While at their place we witnessed a serious accident, caused by a premature explosion of a blast in a well, adjoining the house.

Two men were in the well at the time. One escaped without any injury, while the other had his left arm lacerated badly, though no bones were broken. It was much better than it might have been. Thence to Christian Stouffer's, wife's relatives. Thence to the "Bottle House," as daughter and I have christened it, being the medicine establishment of Dr. P. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea, having for its sign a hugh wooden bottle. The medicine is manufactured here by Dr. P. Fahrney's Brothers & Co. After spending some time looking about the establishment, and a few hours in company with the family of brother of D. H. Fahrney, who lives up stairs, and our former assistant, D. B. Mentzer with him, who is also connected with the medicine business, we put up at brother Josiah Fahrney's. This family is composed of brother Josiah, brother Joseph Emmert, sister Margaret Emmert, each of whom death hath robbed of a life partner, and sister Catharine Fahrney, and several children. Hope the Lord will give them consolation in their bereavement. To-morrow (God willing) we go home.

April First.

Will soon be at hand. Then we will need one thousand dollars. There is nearly twice that amount due us. If we can just get two-thirds of it now and the balance during the Summer, we shall get along finely. Hope all subscribers in arrears, will pay what they can to the agents to whom they subscribed, at once, so that we may yet be able to meet payments with Christian promptness.

Wanted.

We wish to employ two young women as apprentices to the printing business. We would prefer members of the church, but insist on good moral character. Good orthography and practical penmanship are essential qualifications. Apply soon, giving age, former occupation &c.

We also desire to employ a good English and German compositor. Constant employment will be given.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. II.

CHRIST DID NOT EAT THE PASSOVER ON THE NIGHT OF HIS BETRAYAL.

In entering upon this part of our subject, in order that we may be clearly understood, we think it necessary to define our position. This will be done as briefly and clearly as possible. Wherein we differ from the opinions of our readers we ask your indulgence till you hear our arguments, and we are fully confident that you will both see and acknowledge our correctness. We assume:

1. That our Savior did eat a meal with his apostles in the night in which he was betrayed.

2. That we have an account of this meal in the 26th chapter of Matthew, 14th of Mark, 22nd of Luke, and 13th of John.

3. That "the passover" spoken of by the evangelists in these chapters, was "the passover a feast of the Jews."

4. That the meal which our Savior ate with his apostles in that night, was not "the passover," and that it is nowhere called passover, but supper.

5. That this supper is a religious ordinance, instituted by Christ, and to be observed by his followers.

That our Savior did eat a meal with his apostles in the night of his betrayal, which was the night of the same day in which he was crucified, is universally admitted; and it is so plain that it is unnecessary to occupy space with arguments to prove it.—But as some seem to doubt the fact that John refers to the same meal that Matthew, Mark, and Luke do, as assumed in our second position, we will introduce a few arguments to prove that they do have reference to the same meal.

1st. Each gives an account of Christ making known the betrayer. Matth. 26: 20—24, Ma. 14: 17—21, Lu. 22: 21—23 John 13: 21—26. As we purpose to give a harmony of the four evangelists on the points referred to in these chapters, the reader is solicited to read the passages referred to in this and the following arguments. From the foregoing references it appears very clearly that John connects the making known of the betrayer with the meal he speaks of; but Matthew, Mark, and Luke, connect this circumstance with the meal they speak of; therefore it is clear that they all refer to the same meal.

2nd. The prediction of Peter's denial of Christ, is recorded by John in connection with the supper to which he refers; and Matthew, Mark, and Luke, record the same prediction in connection with the meal they refer to; therefore it is evident that they all refer to the same meal, or supper. See Math. 26: 32—35, Ma 14: 27—31, Lu 22: 31—34. Jno. 13: 3—38.

3rd. John speaks of our Savior going from the supper to the garden of Gethsemane; and the other evangelists speak of him as going to the garden from the meal they record; hence it is evident that they all record the same meal. Compare Math. 26: 36, &c., Ma. 14: 32, &c., Lu. 22: 39, &c., Jno. 14: 31; 18; 1 &c.

Other arguments might be advanced to established the fact that they all speak of the same meal; but these are deemed quite sufficient to satisfy the candid reader, and we have no inclination to waste time with those who are not willing to receive the truth. In fact, we have never known any one to assume that they do not refer to the same meal, except such as have some beloved dogma that they think to establish by so doing; and we confess that we have no hopes for them, unless their corrupt hearts are changed, so that they are willing to accept of the plain teachings of God's word. When this miracle of grace shall be wrought, the arguments already offered will be considered abundantly ample.

We shall now proceed to offer a harmony of the account given by the evangelists of this meal and of the various circumstances connected with it, and also of the agony, apprehension, trial, crucifixion, death, burial, and resurrection of our adorable Redeemer. The different circumstances shall be taken up and considered in the order of their occurrence. The scriptures relating to the facts shall first be given, and then the comments showing their harmony and the facts taught.

1. "Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?" Matth. 26; 17.

"And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayest eat the passover?" Ma. 14: 12.

"Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must by killed." Lu. 22: 7.

"Now before the feast of the passover, when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world he loved them unto the end." Jno. 18. 1.

John, in introducing his account of the supper, says: "Now before the feast of the passover;" but he does not say in this connection how long before, neither does he mention the question asked by Christ's disciples.

Matthew seems to say that this question was asked on "the first day of the feast of unleavened bread;" and as we have shown that the first day of the feast of unleavened bread was on the fifteenth day of the month, this rendering of Matthew's testimony would place the asking of this question on the day after that on which the passover must be killed.—We object to this rendering, first, because Christ was crucified about fifteen hours after the question was asked, and he was crucified on the preparation day, which was the fourteenth day of the month; and, secondly, becauee Mark places the asking of the question on "the first day of unleavened bread," (which as we have shown, was the fourteenth day of the month,) "when the passover must be killed." Thus Matthew's record would conflict with Mark's, as well as with his own in reference to the time of the crucifixion.

But Matthew does not say what he appears to say. He did not say that the disciples asked this question on "the first day of the feast of unleavened bread." True, the translators make him say so; but what of that? translators always make authors say what they understand them to mean King James' translators did not understand, or they did not keep in mind, the important fact that "the day of unleavened bread," or "the first day of unleavened bread," was the fourteenth day of the month, while the first day of the feast of unleavened bread was the fifteenth day of the month. But we are glad to be able to say that they placed into our hands a very important key to the original reading. Words which they supplied themselves, having no corresponding words in the original, are given in italic letters. "In the English Bible, the words supplied by the translators are in italics, to distinguish them from those found in the original."—Burtt's English Grammar, P. 11. Now, by an examination of Matth. 26: 17, it will be seen that the words "day" and "feast of" are in italics, and, therefore, according to the foregoing rule, these words were supplied by the translators. This is not a mere whim of our brain, but a stubborn, unalterable fact; and let him who dares to doubt it look after his proof, and he will soon discover that he has none. We therefore claim the privilege of rejecting from the text the words which the translators assumed the audacity to supply. By doing this we read as follows: "Now the first of the unleavened bread the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?" This is the true rendering; and it places the asking of this question on "the first of the unleavened bread," agreeing with Mark's "first day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed." This not only agrees with the original, but also with the German and various other translations. We therefore take our stand with full assurance of the unyielding character of position, that this question was asked by Christ's disciples on the day on which the passover must be killed—on the fourteenth day of the month.

We must pause here to notice the fact that the Revised Translation by the American Bible Union, would place this question on the first day of the feast of unleavened bread. According to this translation Matthew and Mark both say: "And on the first day of the feast of unleavened bread" &c. Now, while we readily admit that the Revised Translation contains many improved readings, we are compelled by the force of circumstances and well established facts, to declaim against this as a deplorable perversion. When we look at it in the light of reason and God's clearly revealed law, we feel like treating the translators with unsparing severity for this unwarranted departure from the original text, and for their palpable violation of the rules adopted by themselves for their guidance in their labours. We here give a copy of the rules prescribed by the Union:

"The received Greek text, critically edited, with known errors corrected, must be followed.

The common English version must be the basis of revision, and only such alterations made as the exact meaning of the text and the existing state of the language may require.

The exact meaning of the inspired text, as that text expressed it to those who understood the original Scriptures at the time they were first written, must be given in corresponding words and phrases, so far as they can be found in the English language, with the least possible obscurity or indefiniteness."

We have not space to relieve our mind on this subject; but we cannot pass it by without entering our protest against this rendering.

1. We deny that "the received Greek text, critically edited," &c, was followed in this instance.

2. We deny that "the exact meaning of the text and the existing state of the language" required this rendering.

3. We deny that "the exact meaning of the inspired text, as that text expressed it to those who understood the original Scriptures at the time they were first written," is "given in corresponding words and phrases, so far as they can be found in the English language."

4. We protest against this rendering, because, it not only arrays Matthew and Mark against their own testimony in reference to the crucifixion, death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, but also against the testimony of Luke and John, and against the clearly revealed law of God in regard to the observance of the feast of the passover and the feast of unleavened bread. We regard it as a scheme of the adversary, well calculated to bewilder inquiring souls, and stir up strife and division among the professed followers to the meek and lowly Lamb of God. With this our protest, which is but a weak statement of our convictions, we return to our subject, by saying that, if this rendering be insisted upon, it can only be on the grounds that the feast of unleavened bread consisted of eight days, from the beginning of the fourteenth to the close of the twenty-first, as in the case referred to by Josephus and that "the feast of unleavened bread" in these texts, means the fourteenth day of the month.

But although Matthew and Mark agree in their testimony that it was on the fourteenth day of the month that the disciples asked this question, neither of them tell us what time in the day it was; but by considering what Luke says, we conclude that it was at the commencement of the fourteenth day, just after sunset the close of the thirteenth.

He says: "Then came the day of unleavened bread." When did it come? We all know that it came when the preceding day closed, which was at sunset. We have shown that our Savior did observe the Passover during his ministry; and now when the day of unleavened bread, the day on which the preparation must be made and the Passover killed, came, the question very naturally presented itself to their minds, and they came to Jesus, saying, "Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?" or as Mark has it: "Where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayest eat the passover?" We wish here to remind you of the fact that the disciples were well acquainted with the law relating to the observance of the Passover, and they knew that it was yet twenty-one hours until the time for the killing of the Passover; but they knew equally well that they had now entered upon the day on which the preparation must be made, and that they must have a place in which to observe the feast. Knowing these facts, they consult their Master in regard to the place in which they should make the necessary preparation to observe the Passover at the time and in the manner specified in the law. We paraphrase as follows: This is the preparation day: at the close of this day, at the going down of the sun, is about twenty-one hours from this time, the Passover must be killed, and to-morrow night it must be eaten; and it is now time for us to secure a place and make the needed preparation: "Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the Passover," "that thou mayest eat the passover" as heretofore, and as required by the law? We now pass to the next point in order.

2. "And he said, Go ye into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith, My time is at hand; I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples." Matth. 26: 18.

"And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water, follow him. And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the good-man of the house, The Master saith, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? and he will show you a large upper room furnished and prepared: there make ready for us." Matth. 14: 13–15.

"And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover that we may eat. And they said unto him, where wilt thou that we prepare? And he said unto them, Behold when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in. And ye shall say unto the good man of the house, The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? And he shall show you a large upper room furnished: there make ready." Luke 23: 8–12.

John is silent upon this point; but the other three agree that he sent them into the city to prepare.—Matthew does not say how many he sent, but Mark says, two, and Luke tells who they were, namely, Peter and John. Matthew says they shall go "to such a man;" intimating that he gave a description of the man; and Mark and Luke agree in the description given: they were to meet the man, "bearing a pitcher of water." The three unite in expressing the Savior's purpose or desire to keep or eat the passover at this man's house with his disciples. Matthew says nothing about the command to prepare; Mark says, "there make ready for us:" and Luke says, "Prepare us the passover, that we may eat." From this expression many understand that Christ instructed them at that time to kill and roast the passover that they might eat it. We shall show that this is a mistaken idea. By the expression, "Prepare us the passover," he did not mean that they should at that time kill the passover; for this was just after sunset in the beginning of the fourteenth day, and the law required the victims to be slain before sunset, "at the going down of the sun," in the end of the fourteenth day. By the clause, "that we may eat," he did not mean, that they might eat the Passover; for this was before the darkness of the night of the fourteenth had set in, and the passover must be eaten on the night of the fifteenth—a full day after this time.

We before remarked that the change of the law, requiring the passover to be kept in the place which the Lord should choose, might affect the selecting of the lambs on the tenth day of the month. We have reason to believe that it did. It is not reasonable to suppose that they all selected their victims at home and took them along to Jerusalem. Upon this point NEVIN says:

"Individuals might bring their lambs with them to Jerusalem; but it was more common to purchase them at the temple itself, from the priests, who always had a large supply of suitable ones, ready to be disposed of on the occasion, being accustomed, it would seem, to select with care beforehand, (probably on the 10th day of the month,) from the general market which they encouraged to be held in the outer court at these seasons, such as were in every way free from blemish, and to have them in readiness for as many as wanted to buy, so that they might have more security, in getting their victims, that they were altogether sound and perfect, as the law required, than they could have, if left to look for themselves in the market, after they had arrived at the city." Bib. Antiq P. 347.

"Go and prepare us the passover that we may eat," means no more than this: Go and secure the lamb and make the requisite preparation for a legal observance of the passover. When Christ said "that we may eat," he indeed knew what they would eat, but to their minds it conveyed the idea of their ordinary evening meal; as though he had said: Another day of toil is past, and the time is at hand to eat our supper; but it is necessary first to make some important preparations for the coming feast; make these necessary preparations, "that we may eat." That this is what they understood him to mean will appear more clearly in every step as we advance. Let the reader fix this fact firmly in his mind, that this was in the first evening of the fourteenth day, shortly after sunset, the close of the thirteenth; and if there should be any difficulty in his mind, let him follow us through on this point, and we assure him that his difficulties will all flee, even as vapor that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away.

No More Back Numbers. Thanks to our Friends—Reopening of the Tobacco War—A Call for Ten Hundred More—A New Offer.

From past experience we have learned that many subscribers whose names are received during the first ten to twelve weeks of the year, prefer to have the full volume; and hence we have been printing several hundred copies more than needed, and stored away the back numbers for the accomodation of such as would wish them. This year we concluded to continue the same number of copies with which we closed the preceding year. And we are now happy to say to our friends, that they are exhausted, save a few odd numbers—No 3 having run short. This is more than we have ever done before. Our gratitude to our friends is inexpressible, unless it can be understood by the words: God bless you, friends, for your labor of love. Without the indefatigable labors of our agents and friends—among whom are brethren and sisters, and those who are friendly to the cause—we could not have achieved such a success. Believe us, friends, we highly appreciate your favors, and would be willing if we were able to remunerate you much better for your labor. But, knowing that you are impelled by motives of principle, we know also that you will look to a higher source for your full reward.

During the latter part of last year, and first few weeks of the present, we received several letters in a discouraging mood, deploring our radicalism on the Tobacco Reform, and expressing fears that the C. F. C., would lose much patronage. We are no prophet, but we could not be persuaded that we would lose much patronage from that source. And now it has occured that instead of losing we have gained! An actual increase over last year! This affords us another assurance that a straight forward, independent pursuit of the RIGHT, regardless of the consequences, will meet with the approbation of a right thinking people. This course we shall ever pursue, and hope to maintain the support of all who fear God and love righteouness.

And now, regarding the Tobacco War, we have to announce that the time of the armistice has fully expired, and therefore we are now at full liberty to march forward upon the strongholds of king Tobacco. So get your swords, (Bibles) brethren and sisters, sharpen and polish them, by prayer and meditation. Study well the grounds occupied by the enemy. In your attacks, act wisely as serpents and harmlessly as doves. Remember that the war is to be waged on Christian principles—returning good for evil—doing to others as we would have them do to us. Love is the only stimulus allowable; everything else is contraband.

Tobacco Supplement

We have in contemplation the publication of a supplement of a half sheet, to be altogether devoted to the subject of Tobacco. We have nearly matter enough to fill it, besides what shall appear in our regular issues from time to time. The supplement will be sent free to all regular subscribers. Extra copies will be furnished at 25 per 100. Now friends of reform, here will be an opportunity to disseminate sentiments favorable to the success of our cause. Shall we circulate fifty thousand copies? How many? Please order soon. Hold a collection, and get a hundred copies at all events. There will be room for something good upon the subject.

A Call—An Offer.

Will not our friends make just a little more effort and secure us only one thousand more subscribers! If every four now on the list, will unite and get one subscriber, the call will be filled. To aid them in the effort, we offer the balance of this year—that is all that remains from the time we receive the names and the money—for one dollar. The sooner the subscriptions are sent in, the greater will be the advantage. Send for specimen copies if you can use them to advantage.

Answers to Correspondents.

Lewis Lerew. Right, with five cents in our favor.

Jos M Elliot. Right; but tell brother Pearsall to be certain to tell us what is to be credited to your list.

Amsey Preparation. Right, we cheerfully pay for Post Office Order, when agents charge no percentage.

Jacob Hildebrand. You sent $1.50 for Peter Waldsmah. What is his address? Is he getting the paper? If he is, who ordered it?

John Rohrbaugh. According to our books your paper is paid for to No 19.

Henry Fetzer. $1.15 will pay to the close of Vol. 2.

S D Gilbert. One dollar will square your account.

CORRESPONDENCE

IOWA CITY, March 2nd 1871.

Brother Henry: Pass the old Lady round. Two years ago this winter she honored us with a call and a few days boarding gratis; then spent several days pleasantly at friend Geo. Fesler's, in Iowa city. She came to the city hunting a certain William Rhinehart, for whom she had thirteen hundred dollars in her carpet sack—had the records of the County carefully overhauled, but said Rhinehart could not be found; and then meeting brother Jacob Erb, she made the fact known that she was Sister Anna Hoover, from near Gettysburg Pa. To him she was a sister to D. P. Saylor's wife; but when she arrived at our house, finding that mother knew Daniel P. Saylor's wife very well, she said nothing more about her relationship in that direction. But she had three daughters: one married to brother Enoch Eby, one to a brother Emmert in Nebraska. She had an important secret to tell, which she would only divulge very confidingly to mother, that her remaining youngest daughter was to be married to Prof. Ebersole, of the Iowa State University, located here Herself and only daughter lived upon the battle ground during the great conflict at Gettysburg. Her bountiful harvests were all destroyed; herself and daughter were confined to their cellar several days and nights, and only emerged to find their house furniture, cups and dishes, all shot to pieces. Afterward she received a permit from "Thaddy Stevens" to go to see President Lincoln while lying dead, in Washington; but said that brother Daniel P. Saylor "thought she done wrong by going." She seemed to know a great many of the speakers among the Brethren; and was well informed as to localities and many other particulars relating to the churches. When she left the city, some ready made clothing belonging to friend Geo. Fesler's family disappeared rather mysteriously, and was never heard of afterward. Description: Tall, dark complexion, dark hair down cast look, forehead full and broad, no teeth, smoked a pipe, and appeared to be about 50 years old, or upwards.

Please publish for the information of the Brethren generally.

Affectionately.

JAMES L. SWITZER.

Dear Companion:—I will try to give a little church news. We are still progressing slowly. There were in the last year, some eleven or twelve additions by baptism. On the first Sunday of December 1871, brother Joseph Leedy labored for us at Burnettsville, and for about a week; during which time eight precious souls were added to the Lord's people, and many more were made to think and we hope have searched, with some of old, daily to know their condition. On the first Friday evening of this month brother Joseph is again to be with us to labor at the same place, when we expect to enjoy a feast of fat things, in the sanctuary of God's divine love; and we hope there willbe an ingathering of precious souls, to the comfort of saints and joy of angels, and to the praise and honor of him who died that sinners might live.

On the 9th of last month brother A. Young and myself started on a mission of love: first to Pulaski Co., where we had three meetings. From there we went west into Jasper Co., near Rensselaer where we had meeting from Saturday evening till Thursday evening following in what is called the Bluegrass school house. We had good attendance, an strict attention to the word spoken. One dear soul was made willing to enlist under the banner of love, and come out on the Lord's side, while others gave evidence of serious thoughts and anxiety to know the truth. On the 18th I came home, finding all well. Thank the Lord.

Brother Holsinger:—As I did not [illegible] to meeting to day, and feel somewhat lonely. I will write to the Companion. I love to perse its columns and acquire a knowledge of what the brethren and sisters are doing in different parts of the country. Then we get explanations on many passages of scripture which give much satisfaction.

We are not so much disheartened, or depressed in spirit, as we were a fewweeks ago. By the mercies of God we have been permitted to hold fellowship with those who profess to love and serve God. We feel much encouraged: our prospects are bright, our souls have been nourished with heavenly food, and our drowsy senses, or languid spirits, have been reanimated into new life. The depression of spirits caused incidentally by those brethren who failed (on account of sickness and death, as we have since been informed) to come and preach for us, has been removed by brother Robert Edgcomb, who responded to our call for a series of meetings. Notwithstanding the many perplexing difficulties, and objections brought against the doctrines which the brethren preach and practice, he labored with us a week, faithfully, giving strict observance to the word of God; and the minds of the people have been wonderfully wrought upon. The ardent number congregated, anxiously listened to hear the word preached, and we truly hope much good has been done in this community.

Brethren, come and help us whenever you can: it encourages us. We feel like pressing toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us therefore as many as be perfect, be thus minded. May we grow in grace, and to him be the honor and glory, both now and forever. Amen.

LUCINA SHICK.

Grove City, Ill.

Dear Editors, and Co laborers in Christ, I was called to preach a funeral discourse for brother Abraham Kaggy in Trumbull county Ohio, on the 19th of February. Accordingly I preached the discourse from Rev. 14: 13, to a large and attentive congregation, in the brethren's meeting-house. His remains had been interred in the silent grave several days before. Brother Kaggy lived a consistent member of the church for something more than 4 years. A few words to the afflicted friends.—Some of you are members of the church, and some are not. Your kind father was one of those few men, whose reputation slander dare not touch; whose retreat malignity dare not invade, whose motives prejudice dare not impugn. Men who knew him best loved him best; and those who associated with him most, valued him most. Your kind Father lives; he lives in heaven. Let us, instead of murmuring at his loss, imitate his example—copy his virtues, so that, when the icy hand of death is laid upon us, we may die with that calm trust in God, which made him whom we mourn, so tranquil and happy in his last moments.

I left Bristol on Monday morning, the 20th; took the cars at Warran, arrived at Green Station, on the Niles and New Lisbon R. R. Mahoning Co., Ohio, commenced a meeting in a Baptist meeting-house same evening, near the station. Continued the meeting until Sunday the 28th, during which I baptized three. Also preached a funeral discourse for a little child of friend Charles A. Single.—His companion was numbered with the pale army of the dead a short time before. All our meetings were well attended, and we had good attention. May the Lord bless the labors of the ministry every where. I feel thankful to the kind brethren and sisters for their kindness while with them may the Lord bless them.

JOHN NICHOLSON.

Brother Holsinger:—Jos. S. Burkhart and myself left home on the morning of the 3rd of March, for the Dunning's Creek Church, in Bedford Co., Pa. Arrived at brother J. S Holsinger's some time in the afternoon. Meeting in the evening at the Brethren's new meeting-house. Next morning, in company with brother John S. visited brother Gideon B. Rodgers and family. Found them well with the exception of brother Gideon who is suffering very much with a sore eye, which has deprived him of meeting with the brethren in public worship for some time. After singing a few verses together, and reading a portion of God's word, we had a Season of prayer together; after which we started for the meeting-house again, where we had an appointment at 10 A M. In the afternoon, visited aunt Sarah Holsinger, whom we found well and lively, and we think zealous in the cause of the Lord. Meeting this evening in the United Brethren's meeting-house. Next morning, in company with brother Thomas Holsinger, went to Pleasantville, where we had meeting in the Luthern Church. After meeting went to brother Christian Holsinger's. Some time in the afternoon went to brother Joseph Holsinger's. Meeting in the evening at the brethren's new meeting-house again. This was our farewell meeting with the brethren and sisters and friends of the Duning's Creek church. These meetings were all well attended, with as good order and attention as ever we saw, and we do hope that our labors were not in vain. The brethren think that more visits would be good, and are ready to receive you at any time. Suppose one or two ministering brethren of some other congregation pay them a visit. Remember the name of the Church: Duning's Creek. Brother John S. Holsinger is overseer, whose address you can find in the Brethren's Almanac. Try it, brethren, and see if you don't find a very warm set of brethren and friends to preach to.

Arrived home on the evening of the sixth; found all well except one of our little girls whom we found very sick, and is very little, if any, better yet

Yours in Love,

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

Recapitulation.

Having been favored by a kind Providence, in my late visit to eastern Pennsylvania, not only to enjoy health of body, that, during five weeks I was enabled to attend to every appointment made for me, but also, to realize the answer of many prayers offered in my behalf, to have had the pleasure of returning in safety, to the embrace of my little family, whom I found in reasonable health, unto God all our thanks are due. Although we sometimes feel and express our gratitude to one another, it is God that is the source and fountain of all good; to him be praise evermore.

I was absent from January 18th, till February 20th, during which time I attended fifty-seven appointments: at six of these other strange ministering brethren were in attendance; generally the resident ministers were present: a few times I was left alone. The churches appear to be in good condition, the members filled with love and kindness, zealous in the good cause. And although a majority of them possess a good share of that wherewith to entertain strangers and make them comfortable, and seem also to possess, "as though they possessed it not," yet I have learned by observation, that the Savior's word still holds good: "In the world ye shall have tribulation." Wherever God has a vineyard, there will be labor to perform. I was made to rejoice that, so far as I could understand, the laborers generally work together—are joined together in the same mind and judgment, which my own experience teaches, makes the labor much easier. I did however learn that there are several points on which in sections, different views are held, and hence different practices. These are: protracted meetings; and the doctrine of receiving the Holy Ghost before baptism. Although none of these points were advocated in my presence, yet I did hear that there are different views held on these points, and the great trouble is, when brethren undertake to interchange views on such points, they suffer their minds to become excited, and hence do not understand one another.

As to protracted meetings, I believe with the brethren at Annual Meeting, there is no limit how long we shall or may continue a series of meetings. But there is a mode of conducting given: "Let every thing be done decently and in order." And whenever that mode is disregarded, whether in one meeting only, or two weeks in succession, then and there will be disorder, (confusion,) and the result will be trouble, or a departure from the simplicity of the Gospel. Then the matter seems to rest with the ministers chiefly. If they conduct the exercises as on other occasions; preach the Gospel, the whole Gospel and nothing but the Gospel, no evil likely could result from a protracted effort. But should the error in these efforts, be the one that Israel had in desiring a king: "And he also may be like all the nations." 1 Samuel 8: 20; it is to be feared that the simplicity of the Gospel would be cast behind, the advice of the apostle disregarded; instead of the Gospel, cunningly devised fables and inventions of men made use of to arouse the feelings, as sometimes expressed) and the Lord, as in their case, would say of us: "They have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." 1 Sam. 8: 7.

Brethren, let us guard against the inroads of the enemies; for we are not ignorant of his devices. If we cannot sail with rail-road speed, as do those who have not the same regard for the Gospel that we have, let us be content with the progress we are making; for, in general ours is "though slow, yet sure." And as those two points, in their extreme, generally go hand in hand, and as I just hinted at the effects of those excited meetings, and the numbers of backslidings that do follow them, I will also offer a few thoughts on the latter point; for I fear that hundreds if not thousands, make shipwreck right here; mistaking the refreshing, for the rest of the soul—quickening for the birth—coming to Christ, for having put on Christ—obtaining power to, for having become a child of God already, and the willingness of Christ to accept sinners, and to save them, for remission itself, or salvation. When the awakened sinner renounces sin, obtains his own consent to obey his Savior in all things, and makes his desires known to the church, quite frequently a heavy burden is removed; but the question arises, "Is the debt cancelled?" Some will say yes, others, no. Without setting up myself as a judge, I will try by way of illustration to give my views, and perhaps in a measure reconcile the two extremes. Suppose an individual involved in debt, to the extent that it is utterly impossible for him, by his own exertions to discharge his liabilities, (the very case of the sinner in a spiritual point of view) but a friend, in whom he has all confidence, (as the believing sinner has in Christ) comes along and offers to place him in circumstances by which he can pay all his debts, and once more become a free man. It may require considerable exertion on his part to exercise the power obtained: but the confidence, faith, is there, and the feeling nearly the same as if the debt were already cancelled and the receipt in his hand; but, unless he makes use of the means given into his hands, his condition is not changed for the better—not in the least. So with the sinner. If, after anchoring his faith in the promises of the Gospel, and enjoying the refreshing, or quickening influences of the Gospel, he does not make use of the means given into his hands, he is not a whit better than he was before. The evil spirit may have gone out, "the house empty, swept and furnished;" but it still remains unoccupied by the stronger one, and therefore liable again to be occupied by its former possessor: for weak men, with his best efforts, is unable to guard against the wiles of the devil, while standing isolated from Christ. But by exercising the power given, he is brought into fellowship with the saints, and not only with them, but also with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ. "If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." John 14: 23. Thus the creature not only believes, but realizes the promises and power of the Gospel. And having kept, obeyed, the Savior's words he has put on Christ, and now stands in covenant relation with him. "Lo, I am with you &c." Now it is he can "draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith &c." Now the debt is cancelled, and the pardon sealed: "Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts." 2 cor. 1: 22. "In whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise Eph. 1: 13." "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." Eph. 4: 39. And again, "beware ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son unto your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." Gal. 4: 6. I have now refered to a few of the point in question; and in conclusion would yet say, as we all, are liable to misconception, "prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good;" and in so doing we will make the word of God our guide, our standard, our text book, and our rule of faith and practice: we will speak the same things, and be joined together in the same mind and judgment. Thereby error will be detected and purged out, truth known and obeyed, its sanctifying and purifying influence realized, and freedom obtained. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." John 8: 31, 32.

Brother Henry: We wish to inform the Brethren generally, and those interested, particularly, that the District Meeting of East Tennesee will be held with us at the Pleasant Valley meeting-house, 5 miles northwest of Jonesboro, on the 14th and 15th of April next. A general invitation is given to the brethren to be with us at that time. Those wishing to come can inform either of the following brethren at Jonesboro, Washington Co, Tenn.: Samuel Miller, Conrad Basher, or the undersigned, and they will be met at the above named place.

By order of the church.

ISAAC BILLHIMER.

Beloved Brethren: In my lonely isolation from those, to me far more dear than all else, (save my own companion and my children,) I have taken my pen to try, if possible, to give some degree of expression of my mind in regard to so living.

This morning, while seeking comfort in the perusal of the sacred word of Life, given by God's own Son, I was very foocibly struck with these words, "But we, brethren, having been severed from you for a short time, in presence, not in heart, endeavored the more abundantly to see your face with great desire." This is found in 1 Thess. 2; 17. When I read this passage, it seemed to me that the apostle there expressed the language of my poor heart more fully than I had ever been able to express it before. It was at once expressed upon my mind to write a short article for the C. F. C. to my brethren and sisters in general: and especially to those with whom I have been acquainted. I have, as the apostle says, been only a short time severed from meeting wite the Brethren: yet it seems a long time: those 5 months of loneliness, seem to me more like a year.

None need think they know how to rightly appreciate the great privilege of meeting with those trying to obey all the requirements of the Savior, until they forego the pleasure of thus being favored for sometime. Still, I can assure you my brethren, that, as the apostle says, the severance is only "in presence, and not in heart." No, my dear brethren, though absent in body, still my heart is truly with you; and its most sincere and ardent desire goes up to a throne of grace, that you might with your weak brother, be upheld and strengthened by the constant and never-failing application of that healing stream, that flows from the crucified and risen, ever-living Son of God, in whom we have a friend that will never forsake, if we do his commandments. Oh, what a consolation, to know that, if we obey the easy requirements of the meek and lowly Jesus, he will be our friend! What a glorious thought! What a friend! He our friend! He who is able and has promised to protect us through life, and above all, to give us in the end eternal life.

Before I close, I must say a few words in regard to the hope, of the Lord's second coming being near. In my humble judgment it is near. The signs he gave by which we should know it was near, are surely come. Then, in view of this fact, we should gird on the whole armor, and have our lamps trimmed and burning, and oil in our vessels, that, when he shall rend the heavens, and come in power and great glory, taking vengeance on those that know not God and obey not the Gospel, we, his obedient children, may be ready to meet him with great joy; and, with those whom he will then call forth, the dead in Christ be permitted to see him as he is, and to reign with him a thousand years in peace. Then, will we know as we are known, and all who are in that happy company, will see eye to eye, and all will be peace and love; and whether we live to that great day or fall asleep, we are fully assured in his word, that he will raise our dust and make our vile bodies like his glorious body.

For Sale.

A most desirable Home in Clinton County Missouri.

I am the widow of Isaac Shoemaker, formerly of Fayette County Pa. I am 70 years old, and all my children have gone to themselves. I am living on our old home farm, which contains 260 acres, about 100 under fence, the balance timber, all joining and lying about ½ mile from Plattsburg, where two important Railroads, (just completed) cross. We have about 70 members here; and our new Church building is close by—on the place.

Being too old to manage any longer, I offer this place for sale, but would much prefer selling to some of the Brethren.

THE

Christian Family Companion

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

VOLUME VII. TYRONE, PA. TUESDAY, MAR 28, 1871. NUMBER 13

The Anathema Maranatha.

OR EVERLASTING CURSE OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Promulgated against Victor Emmanuel.

By authority of the Almighty God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and of the holy canons; and of the undefiled Virgin Mary, mother and nurse of our Savior; and of the celestial virtues, angels, archangels, thrones, dominions, powers, cherubims and seraphims; and of all the holy patriarchs and prophets; and of all the apostles and evangelists; and of the holy innocents (who, in the sight of the Holy Lamb, are found worthy to sing the new song); and of the holy martyrs and holy confessors; and of the holy virgins; and of all the saints, together with all the holy and elect of God—we excommunicate and anathematize him, and from the threshold of the holy Church of God Almighty we sequester him, that he may be tormented in eternal excruciating sufferings, together with Dathan and Abiram and those who say to the Lord God, "Depart from us, we desire none of Thy ways." And as fire is quenched with water, so let the light of him be put out forevermore.

May the Father who created man curse him. May the Son who suffered for us curse him. May the Holy Ghost which has given to us in our baptism curse him. May the Holy Cross which Christ (for our salvation triumphing over his enemies) ascended, curse him. May the Holy and Eternal Virgin Mary, Mother of God, curse him. May St. Michael, the advocate of holy souls, curse him. May all the angels and archangels, principalities and powers, and all the heavenly armies curse him. May St. John, the precursor, and St. John, the Baptist, and St. Peter, and St. Paul, and St. Andrew, all other Christ's apostles together, curse him. And may the rest of his disciples and the four Evangelists (who by their preaching converted the universal world), and may the holy and wonderful company of martyrs and confessors (who by their holy works are found pleading to God Almighty), curse him.

May the Choir of the Holy Virgins (who for the honor of Christ have despised the things of the world) damn him; may all the saints (who from the beginning of the world and everlasting ages are found to be beloved of God) damn him; may the heavens and the earth, and all the holy things remaining therein, damn him.

May he be damned wherever he be, whether in the house or in the field, whether in the highway or the byway, whether in the wood or the water, or whether in the Church. May he be cursed in living and in dying, in eating and drinking, in fasting and thirsting, in slumbering and sleeping, in watching or walking, in standing or sitting, in lying down or working, minando, cacando, and in blood-letting.

May he be cursed in all the faculties of his body. May he be cursed inwardly and outwardly. May he be cursed in his hair. May he be cursed in his brains. May he be cursed in the crown of his head and in his temples. In his forehead and in his ears. In his jawbones and in his nostrils. In his foreteeth and in his grinders. In his lips and in his throat. In his shoulders and in his wrists. In his arms, his hands, and in his fingers.

May he be damned in his mouth, in his breast, in his heart, and in all the viscera of his body; may he be damned in his veins and in his groin, in his thighs and genital organs, in his hips and in his knees, in his legs, feet, and toe-nails.

May he be cursed in all the joints and articulations of his members. From the top of his head to the sole of his foot may there be no soundness in him.

May the Son of the living God, with all the glory of his majesty, curse him; and may Heaven, with all the powers that move therein, rise up against him, curse and damn him! Amen. So be it. Amen."

REMARKS.

In all good conscience the above caps any thing that we have ever seen read or heard tell of. Only behold the ravings and cursings of the Roman Pontiff over his temporal dethronement by victor Emmanuel, one of his subordi nate Kings, who has so completely shorne him of his temporal power. This beastly Monarch has been the subject of prophecy over two thousand years. The prophet Daniel saw him 11, 47 years before his rise. Dan. 7-8, 20, 21-25, Paul saw him 546 years before his rise. 2 Thess. 2-3-4. And the Revelator 514 years before his rise. Saw him rise up out of the sea having seven heads and ten horns and upon his heads the name of blasphemy. And there was given him a mouth speaking great things and power was given him to continue forty and two months (i. e. 1260 years) Rev. 13: 1, 5, 6, 7, 24. Months here are the same as time, times and the dividing of time. Dan. 7, 25. All 1260 years. In the year A. D. 610 or about 298 years after Constantine overthrew Paganism out of an ordinary bishop, this Demon grew up to be one of the most cruel tyrants that ever ascended any throne. And in the city of Rome, the Dragon gave him his seat and great authority. Rev. 13: 2. And from the year A. D. 610, to 1870, is just 1260 years. Here dear reader and Christian brother, we see the fulfillment of some of the most important Scripture prophicies. This blood thirsty Autocrat, who is none other than the man of sin or son of perdition, that St. Paul saw sitting in the temple of God, exalting himself above all that is called God, and is worshiped as God. 2 Thess. 2: 4. Claiming to be the vicar of Jesus Christ on earth, having power to change laws and times. Deut. 7: 25.—He, I say, ascended the throne in the city of Rome, that great "city that reigneth over the Kings of the earth." Rev. 17: 18. It is said he wore two swords, one upon either side; the one to represent his temporal, and the other his spiritual authority. This bloodthirsty tyrant, nay devil in human form, with his unlimited power, often made the monarchs and powers of Europe tremble during his long reign. But his time is up, and God stirred up the fool hardy Napoleon, Emperor of France, to declare war against her neighbor, King William of Prusia, which resulted in the withdrawal of the French troops, from the city of Rome, which supported the Pope, when victor Emmanuel with but little opposition marched his army into the great city and dethroned him. Hence the cursing and bellowing of this Roman bull. In all this we see the finger of God dealing with the nations to bring about the fulfillment of his word. This is he unto whom power was given to make war with the Saints, and to overcome them. Rev. 13: 5. Dan. 7: 1. This inhuman monster during the dark ages, murdered thousands and millions of the innocent lambs and Saints of God. But thank God the accuser of our brethren is going down, and as Daniel says: "The Saints of the most high, shall take the kingdom and possess it for ever and ever. And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven was given to the people of the Saints of the most high, whose kingdom is an everlasting one and all dominions shall serve and obey him. Cheer up my brethren, this time is close at hand.

In conclusion; although his most satanic majesty has lost his temporal power, he will nevertheless continue to exercise his spiritual functions to the end, "whom the Lord shall destroy with the spirit of his mouth and brightness of his coming. 2 Thess. 8. Also Rev. 19: 11—21.

Salem College.

I can heartily wish it may be the means of doing much good, for it seems to me there is great room for advancement in "pure and undefiled religion." As regards morality, there has been great improvements made in the last few years; but pure and undefiled religion, it seems to me, has gained but little. Whether this school will be a means of advancing this kind of religion or not time will tell—hope it may. But one thing I do not like, that is dedicating it in the name of the German Baptist Church. No brethren or company of brethren should be allowed to use the church as a cover for any enterprise without first getting the consent of the church. The fault I find is dedicating the college in the name of the German Baptist Church, when it is not really a German Baptist school. Neither do the members of the German Batpist Church see the necessity of such a school. If a few members in Indiana think they do, they are welcome to it as far as I am concerned, but I do not think they should implicate every member of the church in seeing what they see, for as yet a great many do not see the need of such a school. I hope the time may soon come that we will be enabled to see eye to eye and be more of one mind, but we must be satisfied with the light we have until we get more. Dedicating the school in Indiana in the name of the German Baptist Church gives great room for remarks. Many say, "Well, your church sees the necessity of a college at last." And hundreds have to hear this who do not see the necessity of such a school because of its extensive title. Surely none will think hard if exceptions are taken to the using of the name of the church where members have not consented or even been consulted. ARCHY VAN DYKE.

The Deacon and the Preacher.

In an account which John Ashworth gives of a godly old deacon, John Kershan, whom he knew, he tells the following story of his faithful dealing with an inexperienced young man:—

The old deacon was very direct and pointed in his observations, and knew nothing of circumlocution. He was loving, honest, straightforward, and wished to do everyone good. I had called to take tea with him one Sunday. During the repast he was silent, and seemed a little troubled. A young man sat at the table who had been preaching that afternoon what he thought to be a magnificent sermon, from the text, "All thy works shall praise Thee, O Lord, and thy saints shall bless Thee." He opened out his discourse in a grand iloquent style, quoting from Young, "Morning stars exulting, shouting o'er the rising ball;" from Shakespeare, "Cloud capped towers on gorgeous palaces;" and that sublime piece from Pollok's Course of Time, beginning,

"Whose garments were the clouds:
Whose minstrels, brooks; whose lamps, the moon and stars;
Whose angel choir, the voice of many waters;
Whose boquets, morning dews; whose heroes, storms;
Whose warriors, mighty winds; whose lovers, flowers;
Whose orators, the thunderbolts of God;
Whose palaces, the everlasting hills;
Whose ceiling, heaven's unfathomable blue.

Mounting up still amongst what he called the 'stellar worlds,' he expatiated on the satellites of Herschell, Uranus, and Jupiter, and finished his aerial flight in the milky way. After tea, the old deacon requested the young preacher to go with him into the front parlor. When both were seated, he said, "My young man, thou hast been flying thy kite high this afternoon, very high, and if thou does not mind the string will break, and it will come wibble wabble down: thou has been walking over the stars in stilts, cloud capped towers shouting o'er the rising ball, satellites, Jupiter, and milky way indeed. It is thin milk in the pulpit. Thou got so high up, thou never saw Calvary where the Maker of all died for those gospel-hardened stuners that were staring at thee; thou never told us that the work of God that praises Him most was the work of redemtion, shedding his blood for a guilty world. My dear young friend, do come down, before thou tumbles down; keep at the foot of the cross; it is he and only he that humbleth himself that shall be exalted, either in the pulpit or out"

Few can conceive the agony of the young preacher, while the old deacon was so tenderly crushing him. He had to preach again the same evening, and preach to this terrible old man. He was in great fear, and trembled as he walked up the pulpit steps. In his sermon he never reached the lowest star During prayer he wept, and the people wept with him. Christ crucified to save perishing mortals was his theme, and God blessed His own word, as he ever will. The old deacon met him at the church gate, saying:—

"Thou wilt have to pass my house, and must call to take as much supper as ever thou likes; let me take hold of thy arm, for thou art younger than me. And now, my dear young brother, God has blessed us all to night: I have been with Peter, James, and John on the mount and with the Master, for we never get on the mount without the Master.

The Lord will make thee a very useful preacher, when he has cured thee of cloud capp'd towers."

That young minister never forgot the old deacon's theological lecture, nor ever will, but he counts him as one of his truest and best friends and he felt his reproof ever fresh to this day.

The Happy Man.

The happy man is he who shows his love to Christ, and his faith in him, by keeping his commandments and bearing his cross. This man has the sweetest enjoyment of life. He can eat his meat with gladness of heart; praising God. He can taste the sweets of Christian friendship, and he can enjoy all the endearing pleasures of domestic life all the charities of husband, father, brother. He can feel his heart expanding towards the poor, and find his joy in pouring the oil of consolation into the troubled breast. He can rejoice in every opening prospect for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom, through institutions devised by Christian wisdom and conducted in Christian simplicity. He can weep over the effects of the fall; not only as felt in his own heart, but as beheld in the world; and weep with them that weep. Say, then, can such a man be miserable? can such a man be destitute of real sources of enjoyment? He lives by faith; he longs for heaven; he desires to be wholly conformed to Jesus, and to glorify him, whether it be by life or death: to him to live is Christ and to die is gain. SOLOMON BALDWIN

Kindness.

Speak kindly to thy brother, man, for he has many cares thou dost not know; many sorrows thine eye hath not seen; and grief may be gnawing at his heart strings, which ere long will snap them in sunder. O, speak kindly to him! Perhaps a word from thee will kindle the light of joy in his o'er-shadowed heart, and make his pathway to the tomb a pleasant one. Speak kindly to thy brother man, even though sin has marred the spirit's beauty, and turned into discord the once perfect harmony of his being. Harshness can never reclaim him. Kindness will. Far far down beneath all his depravity, there still lingers a spark of the spirit's loveliness, that one word from thee may kindle to a flame, eventually purify the whole man, and make him what he was designed to be, the true spiritual image of his God. Speak kindly, act kindly, to all, without asking who they may be. It is enough for thee to know that he belongs to the common brotherhood of man, and needs thy sympathy. Then give it to him freely;—ay, freely as thy Father who is in heaven giveth thee.

To Remove small boils with no [illegible] vehemence is as absurd as if a man should take a great hammer because he saw a fly on a friend's forehead.

Reputation is what men and women think of us. Character is what God and angels know of us.

Assisting Ministers.

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Mark 16: 15

These are the words of the Savior, spoken to his disciples, shortly before his ascension to heaven. That it is the duty of all true christians to spread the glad tidings of the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth, I presume none of my brethren will deny. It would be an unnecessary use of space in the Companion, to cite all the texts of scripture enjoining it upon the followers of Christ. It is as positively enjoined upon us, I think, as it is to observe the ordinances of feetwashing, the Lord's supper, the communion &c.

My attention was called to the subject, lately, by reading the 9th chap., of Paul's first letter to the Corinthians. The questions arose in my mind: Are we doing our duty in the matter? How shall we preach the gospel? What means shall we employ? &c. I frequently see letters from our brethren and sisters, published in the Companion, in which the writers reiterate the Macedonian cry for help. Many of them complain that they have not heard any of our ministers preach, for a long time; that there are a few members living in their neighborhood, but have no speaker, and have not the means of attending our meetings, &c.

Now, I think I may safely say it is not the fault of our ministering brethren, that so many of our brethren, sisters, and friends are left "as sheep without a shepherd," for certainly they, our ministers, are spending some of their time and money traveling and preaching. But they and their families must be provided for, the same as we and ours; and many of them are in moderate circumstances, with large families, and nothing to depend upon, but their own labor, and therefore cannot devote so much time to traveling and preaching, as, I believe, many of them feel inclined to. But cannot we assist them in the good work? St. Paul says "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the alter are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel, should live of the gospel." 1 Cor. 9: 13, 14, and the whole chapter, in my opinion, plainly shows that preachers should recieve more aid from the church, than, I fear, many of ours do.

I cannot find that, while the Savior was on earth with his disciples, they followed any secular occupation, but as soon as he was taken from them, we find them at their old occupation of fishing, and certainly, it is as necessary to labor now for the meat that perisheth, as it was then. We all know that we cannot extract money from the mouth of a fish to pay tribute or taxes, nor can we feed five thousand persons with five loaves and two fishes, and afterwards take up twelve basketsfull of fragments.

Christ sent his disciples to preach, without purse or scrip, and they lacked nothing, but afterwards, when referring to the subject, he said: "But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip, and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one. He, afterwards, directed them not to use the sword, but did not forbid the use of scrip. Now, can we not enable our ministering brethren to devote more of their time to traveling and preaching, by rendering them such pecuniary aid as our circumstances will permit? Have we been doing our duty in the premises? I humbly ask my brethren and sisters to take the matter into serious consideration. Let us examine ourselves upon the subject. Are we not able to give more to the cause than we have heretofore given? Does our love of the "almighty dollar" affect our contributions, more or less? If by investing thus, the sum would be returned to us annually, with twenty-five per cent interest would we not give more freely? I hope none of my brethren will understand me as making such charges against them, I merely wish to put them upon their guard against those popular errors.

In the chapter last alluded to, the apostle seems to place the gospel minister on an equality with the Jewish minister or priest. And by reading the law, given to the Jews, I find there was ample provision made for the support of the priests. Lev. 6: 16, 26, Num. 5, 9, and many other passages.

Our mode of choosing ministers is well known to every member of our fraternity, and it is also known that the most wealthy members are not always chosen. The person thus chosen, is ordained, instructed, and sent forth to preach, as the Savior sent forth his disciples, during his earthly mission here. But have not times and circumstances changed since then? The different parts of the inhabited world, cannot be visited now, as they could be then. It requires a man now, to follow some occupation, or have a large worldly income, in order to support himself and family, besides the expense of travel.

Against Tobacco.

I am glad the Tobacco question is being agitated as it is, and I do hope that its use will soon be classed among all other superfluities, for it is not only superfluous but a great detriment to health. And it has its subjects under such supreme control that very frequently I have known sisters to leave the house during divine services in order to enjoy a smoke. And sometimes those same sisters have seen something on the dress of others which wounded their feelings, although it did not compel them to leave the house. Now sisters, let us reason a little on this subject.

You go to meeting, with pipe, tobacco, and matches, and a powerful appetite for smoking. Other sisters go with a ruffle on the bonnet, or small hoops. During preaching, you feel such a strong desire for the pipe, that you cannot enjoy the discourse. Perhaps you are compelled to leave the house for a smoke. The other sisters sit there quietly, their ruffles and hoops do not interfere with their religious enjoyments half as much as your tobacco does with yours. Now sisters, how can you have the conscience to bring a charge against your sisters for doing that which is no injury to health, and which does not drive them from the house to enjoy it, whilst you are engaging in a habit which destroys health, interferes with your enjoyments at church, and so corrupts your breath as to make your society very unpleasant. This you may look upon as a grave charge, but if you knew how obnoxious your exhalations are, I verily believe many of you would forever abandon the use of Tobacco. I am truly sorry that brethren refuse to take the COMPANION, because it opposes this evil.—Surely men love darkness rather tha light. Why not continue your subscriptions, and if you consider it right to use the weed, present your arguments and win us over for conscience sake. Do not become offended at us, but in the language of the prophet, come let us reason together. This thing of becoming angry because our position is assailed, is strong circumstantial evidence, that we doubt the truthfulness of our practices or profession: but as long as we have a consciousness of rectitude, we care not who speaks evil of our profession. "Rejoice," says our Savior, "and be exceedingly glad, for great is your reward in heaven."

If there is no wrong in using tobacco, why become vexed because some one says it is wrong to do so. Let us talk together plainly, and carefully about it, until we finally say one way or the other; it is right or it is wrong, it is decent or it is not.

DANIEL SMITH.

For the COMPANON.

"He that hath Seen Me Hath seen the Father." John 14: 9.

The above words were spoken by Jesus himself, and they imply that Christ declared himself to his disciples to be the eternal God. And as the Bible teaches us, that the Christian has but one God, and that Jesus Christ is called God, and the Almighty, we have come to the conclusion that Jesus Christ in his Divine nature is the unoriginated, and eternal God. We learn, that by him, and for him, (i. e. Jesus Christ,) were all things created, that are in heaven, and in earth, visible and invisible, thrones or dominions, principalities or powers, all things were created by him, and for him. Col 1: 16. Consequently we cannot avoid to come to the conclusion that Jesus Christ is truly and properly God, for whatsoever was created, was created for himself. Now creation requires omnipotent power, and as there can be but one Almighty, Jesus Christ must be the Almighty. As the ancient prophet declared that he shall be called, "The Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, and Prince of Peace." And as the Bible declares that He is the Almighty, and called Jehovah, the Mighty God, we should believe the doctrines of the Bible, though men may deny the divinity, and eternity of our blessed Lord.

But says an objector, Christ created by a delegated power." If this were true, it would prove Christ to be a dependent being, and not possessing unlimited power, it is therefore evident that creation cannot be effected officially, or by delegation, for this would imply, that a being who conferred upon another being; Almighty power would cease to be Almighty, and consequently cease to be God, for if God would or could be dispossessed of his attributes, such as his eternity, omnipotence, omnipresence, omniscience, truth, and mercy, he would cease to be God. Therefore, we cannot believe that God delegated unlimited or almighty power upon any being in the universe, but that Jesus Christ (not in his human nature) is the Creator of all the intelligent beings in heaven above, and in the earth on which we dwell. The sun, moon, and stars, with all the millions of worlds, that run their ample rounds, are the creation of Jesus Christ, the Mighty God.

Think of the Poor.

How much of true religion is with the poor! Christ seems to have taken them under his special care. His Gospel was preached to the poor, and this was one of the signs that was sent to John the Baptist in Prison. With his own blessed hands he fed the poor by a creative act, having compassion on them when they fainted. His miracles, we have reason to think, were in the large majority of the instances, wrought upon the poor, and "the common people heard him gladly." The Apostles at Jerusalem were always anxious that Paul should remember the poor. And when Christ shall sit on his throne of judgemet He will make inquest concerning all we have done, or failed to do in regard to the hungry, the naked, the stranger, the prisoner and the sick, and will regard us as having done, or failed to do, all this to himself. There are powerful motives to make us think of the poor. When it is well with us we should remember them. When we hear the storm beating upon our habitations, and yet are securely sheltered, warmed, and fed, sitting over our books or among our children, we should think of the poor.

How to Read the Bible.

1. Read it every day.
2. Read, sometimes, one verse a time.
3. Read, sometimes, a whole chapter: at others, a whole book.
4. Sometimes, read by subjects; i. e. the parables, by themselves, one after another, etc.
5. Take one "chapter," and trace it through the Old and New Testament, thus: direct history or geography; illustrative comments, either in the way of enforcing as an example or exhibiting as a warning, by contrast with others of a different type.
6. Find out the contrast between the Old and New Testaments; between some zealous Christian and some zealous persecutor; between Jew and Samaritan.
7. Take a verse, sometimes, to pieces, word by word, and find when the potential words are used as elsewhere, and in what case.
8. Use all the helps you can get—if you haven't a commentary, put by the difficult passages to ask your minister the meaning of them.
9. Above all, endeavor to make your reading of God's word improve you in the article of self-examination and growth in grace.

Where the Trouble Was.

The following pleasant story is told by a pious minister about a monk of former days. He resolved to leave his monastery on the ground that he there too frequently met with causes of provocation, and was betrayed into anger and other sins. Accordingly, he retired into the desert, in the hope that solitude would enable him to serve God with an easier mind. One day, his pitcher happened to upset, and, when lifted up, fell a second time, which kindled his anger to such a pitch that he dashed it to the ground and broke it into a thousand pieces. When he came to himself, he said: "I now see that I cannot be at peace even in solitude, and that the fault lies not in others, but in myself." He then turned to the monastery, and, after many strenuous efforts, succeeded in subduing his passion, not by flight but by self denial.

Gone to Judgment.

So spake a Sister some time ago, when she heard announced the death of an ill-to-do neighbor. "What! Gone to Judgment!" yes, gone to Judgment. Momentous thought! But still more momentous place, the Judgment! Those few words of our Sister, have been a text that has caused profound meditation. It is appointed unto men once to die, and after that the Judgment." It is already nearly six thousand years since mankind have commenced going to Judgment. And in all this time myriads have gone thither; though the Judgment has not yet been set, and their books have not yet been opened. How little does the world think of "Judgment to come." And what is worse: how little do some people care. They live in the world, go along with the current of sin and folly through the world, without ever experiencing any change. And some even live to the full age allotted to man, in the pride of life, and according to the lust of the flesh. And when their whole career of sin and folly is run, they go to Judgment. So little do some people fear the consequence, that they will stand and swear, and damn themselves to hell, and curse the Almighty God who gives them life and breath; and curse the Lamb that suffered for their sins. But in that momentous day when they must all appear naked before the Judgment seat of Christ: when the book of each one's life shall be opened, and all shall see their own career as run in this world; the good and evil which they did, their own condemnations which they made, they can not fail to see how just and righteous is their doom. So we would think. But by referring to the word of him who is to judge the quick and dead, we find that only those who have been quickened by the Spirit, they will see the justness of his judgment, and will think themselves unworthy of their great reward. But the wicked in their blindness here, then will still be blind, and instead of seeing the righteousness of the Judgment, in their wickedness will justify themselves. Matt. 25, 44. Reader, remember, in a few more years, perhaps in a few more days, you and I will be gone to Judgment. And since the Judge has given us his law that we should judge ourselves, let us prepare ourselves by obedience unto his will, that we may be able to stand before the judgment seat of Christ. JAS. Y. HECKLER.

A Word to Stern Fathers.

It never can be too strongly impressed upon the mind that nothing releases a parent from his duties toward a child. No waywardness, no disobedience, no rebellion, no profligacy can ever justify a father in casting a son or daughter adrift. We hear of sons being cut off with a shilling, of daughters being forbidden their father's house; and, without any exception, such cases are proof that, of whatever sins the children may have been guilty, the father is even more guilty. No person can commit against society so great a crime as a father commits who is thus false to the trust which he himself has imposed—who thus thrusts off from himself the soul which he called into being.

A father should be governed by no motive but his child's best interests, and a child's best interests can never be severed by anything but his father's constant and loving care. If a child is so bad that his influence is feared on the other children, a separation between them may be effected. If it is feared that money bestowed on him will be for his injury, provision may be made against that in a variety of ways. But when a father, in a fit of anger, or as a reward for ill-doing, disinherits or refuses to see his child, he commits a crime which the laws indeed do not recognize, but whose guilt it would take many a legal crime to outweigh. There should be absolutely no limit to parental forgiveness and forbearance. Seven times and seventy times seven should the father receive the prodigal son who seeks his face; and if he never seeks it, if he goes, stubborn and rebellious, not one atom of fatherly care and interest should he relax; for the child is his child, his offspring, born of his will, and no vice or violence can release the man from his solemn obligation to guard and guide, so far as possible, the life which he dared to give.—Gail Hamilton, in Harper's Bazar.

Everlasting Giving.

"Oh this everlasting giving, giving, giving! Giving all the time! Never done! No sooner done with one thing than up comes another. It is for this, that, and the other, all the time! It is for churches, then for Sunday Schools, then for books and papers, then for missionary societies, aid societies, orphans, worn out preachers, tract societies, and the dear knows what all! I am almost tormented to death. How can we give to everything and to every one? Oh, this everlasting begging, begging, begging all the time. Every man you meet is a beggar. The very life is begged out of you. Every preacher that comes along is begging for something. I should think that he would get tired of everlasting begging himself. Must we always be giving? When will it stop?"

When the Almighty stops your mouth, sir. Stop, now, you have gone far enough! You speak not as a Christian, but as a miser! Yes, a miserable miser in the Church! Who gave you what little brains you possess? Where did you get that little narrow contracted heart of yours? Who gave you your eyes to see with; ears to hear with; hands to work with; feet to plod with? Who gave you muscles, mucilage, bone and body, food and drink? Who gives you the early and latter rain, seed-time and harvest, golden grain and teeming flocks? Why don't the Almighty bring charges against you, for complaining, whining, simpering? You are a consummate beggar yourself; you are continually begging and asking for strong hands, sound body and plenty of daylight? You are all the time begging for sunshine, and rain, and prosperous gales. You are everlastingly begging for a hundred fold. Begging for grain and gold, begging for greenbacks and for a long life, and small taxes. After all that you now complain. You ought to stop and be thankful that God bears so kindly with you, and never complain any more until you learn the art of giving which is Godlike, while withholding more than is meet tendeth to poverty and leanness of soul.

Christian Character.

There is nothing more amiable, and more becoming a professing Christian, than striving to attain to a high standard of christian virtue and morality. What can be more beautiful in any one, than a pure and spotless religious character—one which shines with the lustre of sincere piety and true holiness. Such a character elevates its possessor above the generality of mortals and makes him stand the highest of the human race for excellence in the sight of God and in the estimation of the good and great. It is an ornament which outshines the sparkling diamond, and is more to be appreciated than the purest gold. Who can estimate its value? Who would not acquire it? and use the most untiring and prayerful vigilence to preserve it untarnished?

Observe what a high commendation the Lord of Heaven gives Job in the 1st chapter and 8th verse of that book: "Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, one that feareth God and escheweth evil? Nothing is better calculated to build up the church, and advance the kingdom and glory of the Redeemer in this world, than a holy, pious, consistent walk and conversation on the part of the professed followers of our Lord and Savior. And on the other hand nothing is more detrimental to christianity, and the progress of pure morality, and undefiled religion, than glaring inconsistencies, gross immoralities, scandalous or unbecoming conduct of the professors of religion. How important it is that every one who nameth the name of Christ should depart from evil, yea, shun the very appearance of evil, and abstain from everything which will tend to bring odium upon the church, and tarnish his religious character.

"Happy are they, and only they,
Who from thy judgment, never stray;
Who know what's right, nor only so,
But always practice what they know."

But many a one may truly say:

"I know the right, and approve it too
I know the wrong, yet the wrong pursue."

None know when they cast off the impressions of a religious education or forget their professions and venture to neglect known duty, how far they may be left to proceed; they may rush downward in impiety and iniquity with accelerated force, as the stone falls to the ground, and go on heaping up wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, until they are overwhelmed in destruction and perdition.

We would warn the young especially, not to venture aside in forbidden paths which are often attended with the most fatal consequences, for many are given up of God, become hardened in sin and finally perish. ROBERT A. PATTON.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. 13.

CHRIST INSTITUTED THE ORDINANCES OF FEET-WASHING, THE SUPPER, AND THE COMMUNION.

They were nigh to the city of Jerusalem, when,in the beginning of "the preparation of the Passover," the disciples said to Jesus, "where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?" They had not far to go; they had no difficulty in securing a place, and it did not require much time to make the necessary preparation; for the room was furnished, and it was an easy matter to secure their lamb. Everything considered, it is reasonable to conclude that it was about the second hour of the night, or 8 o'clock in the evening, when he came and sat down to the supper with the twelve. Jesus now gave his apostles to understand that he could not realize his desire to eat this Passover with them for which they had made ready: that his active obedience to the requirements of the ceremonial code was completed. Having come to this juncture, he instituted certain ceremonies, to be observed by his disciples under his Testament, which he must, before the close of this day, establish by the shedding of his blood—by his solemn, painful, excruciating death.

We shall now proceed with a connected account of the important events of this day, and up to the morning of Christ's resurrection, in the order, and in connection with the probable time, of their occurrence; and then we will furnish a diagram illustrating the whole. After they had set down together, "Jesus, knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands," and that the time of his return to his Father was fast approaching, "Riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel and girded himself. After that he poureth water into a basin, and began to wash his disciples' feet,and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded" Jno. 13:3—5. His active observance of the ceremonies of the law being completed, he now enters upon the institution of a few significant ordinances, to be observed by his faithful followers under the Gospel dispensation. He first prepares himself as a servant, and then takes the water that had probably been provided for some purpose in connection with the feast, and uses it for his own purpose in instituting the very expressive ordinance of Feet-washing. "Then cometh he to Simon Peter; and Peter saith unto him,Lord, dost thou wash my feet?" (Ver. 6). All this seemed strange and new to the disciples; and Peter, struck with astonishment at the amazing condescension of his Lord, exclaimed, "Lord, dost thou wash my feet?" Peter had been acquainted with various washings under the law, and also with a custom of the times for servants, or menials, to was the feet of their masters, and of distinguished guests; but, that the Master should wash the feet of his servants, or the Lord, the feet of his disciples or subjects, was something beyond his comprehension; and he did not feel inclined to submit to it. "Jesus answered and said unto him, what I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." (Ver. 8) This was equivalent to saying, that they did not yet understand the nature and design of this service; but that he would give them an explanation, that would enlighten them in regard to it. But not being able to endure the thought of his Lord's stooping down to wash his feet, he remonstrated against it saying. "Thou shalt never wash my feet." To give Peter an idea of the importance of this service, and of the absolute necessity of being submissive to him, "Jesus answered him, if I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." (Ver. 8) Although our Savior's language has a spiritual signification, Peter understood him as having direct reference to the literal washing in which he was then engaged; and seeing the importance attached to it by his Master, and not wishing to lose his interest in his Lord, he said, "Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head." (Ver. 9.) But, as this washing was designed to be a symbol of an internal spiritual cleansing, and as the symbol must be suited to the thing symbolized, Jesus gave him to understand, that to wash more than the feet of those who had once been wholly washed as a symbol of the cleansing of the soul from the guilt of sin,would not be proper nor necessary: "Jesus saith to him. He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit, and ye are clean but not all." (Ver. 10.) By the expression, "ye are clean, but not all," he had reference to Judas; signifying that this washing had not in it a sin-remitting power, but a spiritual significance; for Judas had his feet washed as well as the rest, and externally, no doubt, he was as clean as they; but iniquity still reigned in his heart, and sin polluted his soul: "For he knew who should betray him; therefore said he, ye are not all clean." (Ver. 11.) Thus we see that it is possible to submit to the externals of religion, and at the same time be a hypocrite in heart. It does not show, however, that a truly regenerated soul, may or can reject or disregard these outward rites: no, not any more than the fact, that all men are mortal 'proves that anything that is mortal is a man. "So after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was set down again, he said unto them, know ye what I have done to you." (Ver. 12.) In this way he called their attention, not only to the service he had performed, but also to what he now purposed saying in reference to it. He first impressed upon their minds his high authority over them, and their consequent duty of honoring that authority by observing whatever he enjoins upon them either by precept, or example, or by both: "Ye call me Master, and Lord; and ye say well, for so I am." (Ver. 13.) Having impressed this fact upon their minds, he deduces therefrom their obligation "to wash one another's feet:" "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." (Ver. 14.) He then tells them that his object in performing this service was, to enjoin it upon them by his high, authoritative example. He says, "for I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." (Ver. 15.) Knowing that this service was of a humiliating nature, and consequently repugnant to the carnal mind, which is inclined to self-exaltation, lest they should spiritualize it away, or neglect it as of little or no importance, he declared with a "verily, verily," that they were not greater than he: to the contrary, it must be apparent to every right reasoning mind, that the Lord is above the servant, and he that sends is greater than he that is sent; and it follows, that any service that is not too humiliating for the Lord, is not too mean for the servant; and anything that is not too low for the commissioner or sender, is not beneath the dignity of the commissioned, or him that is sent. Hear him: "Verily verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his Lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him. If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." (Ver. 16, 17.) But all this notwithstanding, it occurs to day, that thousands upon thousands,—poor worms of the dust,—exalt themselves above the Lord from heaven; and they assume the prerogative to reject the precept, and to disregard the example of him whom they are sent to call their Lord and Master! All shame to their carnal pride! May the Lord bring them to see their arrogance and folly, and lead them into the way of humble obedience, is our prayer.

The text, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them," is full of meaning, and requires particular attention. Upon this we remark: "Things" is in the plural number, and hence denotes more than one thing. Different opinions prevail as to what things are meant. Without pausing to notice the different positions assumed, we shall proceed to give what we understand to be the real meaning.—To assist in arriving at the correct conclusion, your attention is called to the demonstrative "these." It has been clearly shown that "this" refers to the nearest of the class to which it relates. You will now bear in mind, that our Lord had entered upon the institution of ordinances to be observed by his disciples. He had already washed the feet of his disciples, and had enjoined the service upon them; and at the time he used this language they were sitting at the supper table, and about to eat. At the close of the supper, he instituted the Communion,—the bread and wine,—emblematical of his broken body and shed blood. Every reader will readily see, therefore, that he referred to Feet-washing, the supper, and the Communion, when he said, "If ye know these things;" for these were the nearest of the class of things to which he referred. The institution of ordinances was what he was engaged in at the time; it was what he had been speaking of just before; and it was what he afterward spoke of. While washing their feet he said, "What I do thou knowest not now;" after he had washed their feet, he said, "Know ye what I have done to you?" and after he had given them an explanation so that they understood that he was instituting ordinances for their observance, he said, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." This was equivalent to saying, "Inasmuch as ye now understand that I am to-night instituting ordinances for you to observe, happy are ye if ye observe them." He said: "If ye know these things,"—but they did know, for he had just told them,—"happy are ye if ye do them." The promise of happiness is not connected with merely knowing, but with doing the will of the Lord. "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin. Ja. 4 : 17. "And that servant which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes." Lu. 12 : 48. The foregoing we hold as being the true meaning of the text under consideration. With this view we are enabled clearly to understand what follows.

The Lord and his disciples are seated at the supper table; and they begin to eat this significant meal. An ordinary supper is an important meal. The toils of the day are over; the various members of the family are collected together; they seat themselves in proper order around the supper table, and together they partake of the provisions before them. Here is a scene for the pencil of the artist; and where is the Apellas that can fully depict its significance and grandeur? It seems to say: "We are one family: we are bound together by common interests and the endearing ties of consanguinity, and by the bond of love which knows no dissimulation; we bear each other's burdens, sympathize with each other in our troubles and share in each other's joys." Such is the language of the evening meal, or supper. Our Savior, as he and his chosen twelve are partaking of the Supper with each other, sees all the more clearly than we can who see through a glass darkly; and he intends this meal to be observed, not only as an exhibition of unity, harmony, and love, but as a type, pointing to the evening of this world, when the redeemed of the Lord shall partake with each other the rich provisions of the Lamb's table—"the marriage supper of the Lamb." But, ah, all families are not what the language of supper represents them to be; and although the heart almost refuses to indite, and the pen to trace, the fact,—for it is a fact,—this Supper company is not an exception. The Master knows this and says, "I speak not of you all; I know whom I have chosen; but that the scripture may be fulfilled, he that eateth bread with me, hath lifted up his heel against me. Now I tell you before it come, that when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am he. Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that receiveth whomsoever I send, receiveth me; and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me." But the fact, that in their little company there is a discordant element, that they are not all clean,—pressed itself upon him, and he is greatly troubled; for we read: "When Jesus had thus said, he was troubled in spirit, and testified, and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me." The language of the supper says, that they are one family; but they are not—that they have common interests, and are bound together by the bond of love; but there is a traitor among them. It is to be feared that there are too many discordant elements, not only around ordinary suppers, but around sacred meals. Now the betrayer is made known while they are eating. The four evangelists agree in testifying to this fact. Matthew says: "And as they did eat, he said, verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me," &c. Matth. 26: 21—25. Mark says: "And as they sat, and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, one of you which eateth with me, shall betray me." &c. Matth. 14: 18—21. You will notice particularly that Mark does not say, did eat nor hath eaten; but he uses the present tense, "eateth," signifying that they were eating at the time the betrayer was manifested. John says, as already quoted. "He that eateth bread with me, hath lifted up his heel against me:" not, did eat, nor will eat, but "eateth." Luke's testimony is substantially the same. He says: "But behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table." Lu. 22: 21.

It is worthy of remark that there is not a solitary word in the record of any of the evangelists, to show that there was any flesh used in this meal, but bread is mentioned by all of them. The reference to the sop, is not sufficient to show that they had flesh; for anything steeped, or dipped and softened in any liquid food, is as much a sop, as if it were dipped in broth, the liquor in which flesh is boiled. It does not, however, particularly concern us of what their supper consisted: we merely mention this fact, and pass on.

Another fact worthy of notice is this: There is nothing in the record of either of the four gospel writers to prove that they used unleavened bread at this supper. The law, indeed, enjoined the use of unleavened bread at the close of the fourteenth day; but this was yet near the beginning of the day. They may have used unleavened bread for aught we know, as there was nothing in the law to prohibit its use at any time; but as it is altogether immaterial to us, we leave it just where every other person is obliged to leave it: it is not good in such cases, to be wise beyond that which is written. Leaving these digressions, which,—although not so intended,—might be regarded as animadversions, we now return to our subject.

When the traitor was made known, "He then, having received the sop, went immediately out: and it was night." Jno. 13: 30. But there is yet a circumstance connected with the making known of Judas as the betrayer, that we must not fail to notice. After giving the sop to Judas, Jesus said to him, "That thou doest, do quickly." None of the disciples understood this; but "some of them thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him, 'Buy those things that we have need of against the feast; or, that he should give something to the poor.'" (Verses 27—29.) They could not comprehend their Master's meaning. The thought was suggested: Judas is to "buy those things that we have need of against the feast;" but that would not do, for Jesus had told them that he would no more eat the Passover. Then they thought that Judas "should give something to the poor." But they were undecided; for "no man at the table knew for what intent he spake this unto him." (Ver. 28.) We however learn one fact from this circumstance: we learn that the feast was yet in the future—that this was on the night of the preparation day. It is only by closing our eyes against clear, unalterable facts that we can avoid seeing this; for the fifteenth day was a holy convocation, in which the law prohibited all manner of work being done. It was certainly on the fourteenth day of the month, the day on which the preparation must be made, and those things that were needed against the feast were procured.

Doomed to be Disappointed.

Here is the 28th of March! A few more days and the first of April will be at hand. The first day of April is no more than the beginning of any other month, only here in Pennsylvania it is a day for general settlement, and squaring up of old accounts. And it so happens that we, too, have payments to meet at that time; but even that would be no cause for concern if we had the wherewithal to discharge the obligation. We delight in paying when we have the money. We have more than three times the amount of our indebtedness due us from our subscribers, and we had kindly, (we thought) asked them to pay us at least one-third before the first proximo, and until the present time we had still hoped that our petition would be heeded. Now we are beginning to despair, and are thinking of other resources. Our notice must have been overlooked by the delinquents. All our advance paying subscribers no doubt read it, and sympathize with us; but then it did not mean them We never believed in newspaper duns, and now we are convinced of their utter incapacity. They cannot be written so as to mean the right persons. And yet it is the only medium by which we can ask for our dues. But it shall be a long while before we publish another. This item is not a dun.

Late.

We have been somewhat behind time with our issues for several weeks past, owing to a disarrangement of the office for want of paper, our paper makers having disappointed us. In a short time we shall be all right again.

The Pious Youth for March is also much behind time from the same reasons. We hope to send it out with this week's issue. It will be good when it does come, being nearly an original number. Now that the Sunday-schools will be opening may we not expect large additions to our list? We do not believe there is a Juvenile paper published that teaches sounder doctrine, purer morals, and better literature than is taught in the Pious Youth. Send ten cents for specimens and examine for yourself. Address, H. R. Holsinger, Tyrone Pa.

Nos. 3, 9 and 10.

If we had a few copies of Nos. 3, 9 and 10 we could supply as many more full sets of back numbers of present volume. Those who have numbers 3, 9 and 10 to spare, and in good order, will please return them to us.

Crowded.

For sometime our columns have been so much crowded, that we fear some of our contributors will become almost impatient. Our manuscript box is chuck-full, with copy enough on the "hooks" for a week ahead. We rejoice that we are so favored, but regret that we cannot better accommodate. Now what shall we do? Shall we enlarge our paper, to about double its present size and make it a folio in form, like the regular newspapers? Or shall we get quite small type and crowd our matter closely together. We fear our aged brethren and sisters will not favor the last proposition. Or will our worthy contributors consent to use more brevity. Something we must do in order to give satisfaction all around. What shall it be friends? Let us hear from you. We will do anything to please that is right and fair, so far as our ability extends.

Answers to Correspondents.

Manuscript. No; manuscript for our paper, must be paid for at letter rates. Book manuscript may be sent at the rate of two cents for four ounces, but ours is not a book in the eyes of the law.

Sam'l Metzger. Yes; all right.

George Long. The money order has not yet come. Your last letter came to hand on the third day, including Sunday. There must be some one intercepting our communication.

A. H. Snowberger. Have sent those numbers again. If you should have duplicate copies of Nos. 3, 9 and 10, please return them to us, (if in good order) as we lack those numbers to make full sets. No others but those three numbers are short

A. B. Miller. It was our fault.—Hope all will come right now

L. S. Snyder. Your account is square, without allowing you any percentage.

John L. Stutzman Missing numbers sent except No 9 which is exhausted. Apply to B F. Stutzman who, it appears has had two numbers sent hitherto.

Covetousness. Slaughtering diseased cattle, or selling or even using them, is no doubt an indication of covetousness. And if you know of any of our brethren who are guilty of such a foul crime, you should have given us your name that we might have traced up the offender, and assisted in putting down the "flood gates of impurity which are opened from darkness upon the church," and thus save "the whole state of Christianity from ruin," for we agree that "a little leaven leavens the whole lump." We do not believe in "smuggling such conduct in the church," neither do we favor smuggling anonymous letters into papers. If such a crime has been committed let the accused and accuser be brought face to face, and if guilty, then let that wicked one be put away from among us.

Joseph L. Myers. You are right; thank you for the explanation; we see it all as clear as sunshine. If all our correspondents would give us such explanation, how easily and cheerfully we could attend to all their wishes. Hereafter you will receive but one copy of C. F. C. and none of the Youth. Distribute the extra copies as you think best, and they may aid you in filling your quota in the ten hundred call.

J. H. Crist. We have you credited with $14.25 cash, and $1.50 per centage, making $15.75, and have you charged with $17.25. Is that right?

J. R. Swigart. Weack nowledge it was all our fault, and ask pardon.—Will be all right now.

Grabill Myer's Report.

Lately visited the Mingo congregation, Montgomery county, Pa., and held a series of meetings Brother Reinhold of Lancaster City was with me part of the time The meetings appeared to be interesting, especially to the members. Was taken to Royers Ford by brother Coner where I took the cars. Arrived home about 8 P. M. without hindrance. So the prayers of my brethren and sisters, that I might get safely home, were answered Found my family all well Thank the Lord for his mercy, and the brethren and sisters for the kindness manifested towards us while in their presence. Farewell

Peace Principles.

Brother Holsinger:—I send you for publication in the Companion the following editorial, clipped from the Public Ledger of this city. Judging from these comments, the "address," upon which they are founded, sets forth Brethren's Principles as well as "Friends' Principles" upon the subject of war.

May we not hope, now that slavery, one "relic of barbarism" the very incipience of which was in wrong, outrage and war practised upon the inhabitants of Africa, has been removed from our country; its "twin relic," fratricidal bloodshed, may be, henceforth and forever, a thing of the past in the United States: and that soon that glorious time spoken of by the prophet (Isa. 2: 4) will be ushered in, when "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither learn war any more?" We have the "sure word of prophecy" upon which to found this hope.

However some of those, who claim to be ministers of the Gospel of "the Prince of peace," may inconsistently preach war; and, themselves buckle on the carnal weapon; thereby discarding and dishonoring "the sword of the Spirit;" yet the written, unadulterated Word of God," which is that sword, is being profusely disseminated, far and wide, over "all the world;" and the masses, in continually augmenting numbers, will read the Divine oracles, and compare its teachings with those of men; and thus be able to discern and rebuke the "lying spirit" which attracts those preachers who advocate war. In fact all men, who read the New Testament, both professor and non-professor, are becoming increasingly imbued with the conviction that it is not only inconsistent, but utterly impossible, for a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus to engage in bloody strife. Thus saith the Lord, "My word that goeth out of my mouth shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it. (Isa 55: 11) "He (Jesus Christ) shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into pruning hooks. (Isa. 2: 4) This is the word of the Lord, through the prophet, and it "will not return to him void."

SILAS THOMAS.

At a "meeting representing the religious Society of Friends, held in London the 6th day of the First month, 1871" an Address was adopted, which is now in course of circulation. The subject is the present war in Europe. The inconsistency of war and Christianity is put in strong language, fortified by lamentable facts. It is not our purpose to follow the reasoning, nor is it necessary. No doubt the Address has been or will be republished in this country. And the general sentiment of the religious teaching of the age concedes the truths which are the basis of "Friends' testimony" against war.

To oppose to the argument against war the declaration that war is a necessary evil, is to deny the power of Christianity and philanthropy to accomplish their work. And if we qualify the declaration that "war is necessary," by the addition of the words "in the present state of the world," then the question comes up: "Is it not this very state of the world that the new revelation, the religion of peace, is intended to remove?" A practical point, made in the address before us is: "When difficulties arise between individuals, whether from passion or mistake, these are no longer decided, as of old, by an appeal to physical force, but by law, administered upon principles of general application. Can we doubt that the happiness of the world would be promoted, and a vast mass of misery and ruin be averted, if a similar method were applied to questions arising between nations?"

It is very easy to smile at a proposition like this, as visionary, and, though amiable, impossible. So in the old times, when one feudal chieftain suffered wrong, or fancied that he did, from another, the readiest remedy was a "raid." The proposition to submit the quarrel to a law, or to arbitration, would have been regarded as in itself unmanly, unchivalric, cowardly and mean. The honor of knighthood scorned every mode of redress except what lay in the strength and courage of the person wronged or insulted. The "clans" could "right their wrongs wherever given." Nations, with these feudal antecedents, are but clans on a larger scale. And the same spirit of defiance rules monarchs and inspires the representatives of governments of whatever form. The old clanish spirit is preserved in national spirit. The reformation which among individuals has substituted law for violence, and public justice for individual retaliation, beginning with the people as citizens, has not reached governments, which are the instruments of the people. There is one code of morality for the man, and another for the nation; a distinction which it would be hard to defend, except with some such convenient formula as "our country, right or wrong!"

If the principles of the Christian religion are anything better than impossible maxims, there must come a day upon the earth when national disputes as well as individual will be adjusted on other terms than war. The condition of nations to each other at present is analogous to that of society, when each man depended upon his own arm, and the law of retaliation was the rule. In a savage condition of society, to reform social relations seemed an impossibility. But the gospel of peace and justice has accomplished that reformation, impossible as it seemed. And "Friends" believe that it is equally as competent to prevent, or at least to check murder by wholesale, as to restrain murder and violence in isolated cases.

The solution of the problem then rests upon the education of all civilized nations up to the necessity of some recognized tribunal, council or congress, before which national quarrels may come for adjustment. So far as the doctrines of "Friends" act on the conscience of individuals, they promote this result. Their best triumph is seen in the admitted fact that "peace principles" can no longer be regarded as distinctive of any one body of Christians. He who should defend war for itself would now be regarded as the apostle of a strange Christianity. Declarations of war always directly or indirectly include an apologetic defence for taking that course; and such an apology is the confession of the absence of plain justification for war itself. The advocates of war elevate "military glory," and the holders of "peace principles" can hardly have a better answer than in depicting the horrors of warfare, and its inevitable instances of individual ferocity and wrong. No matter how just the principle may be for which war is waged, there is no strength of military discipline which can restrain the passions to which war gives license.

All reformers appear at first to be singular; and "impossibilities" have never been accomplished, except by what the world terms 'one-sided men,' and "men of one idea." Admit that war is unavoidable "in the present state of things," and then the duty is presented to change that condition. Certainly something has been accomplished toward the "consumation devoutly to be wished." We accord all honor to the "singular" men who devote themselves to presenting in plain terms in plain truths against ingenious sophistry. They are "advanced pickets," "skirmishers" in the struggle for peace, and the main body of the great and peaceful army of thinking men is fast closing up. So far as the claim of men as men, whether called citizens or subjects, are recognized, just so far the hope of the cessation of war is encouraged. For no man will willingly vote destruction to his property and death to his children. A large part of the war delusion and a larger share of the war passion still exist, but the false glory of violence is wearing off, and when things are once seen in their true light, the claims of peace against war will be properly adjusted.

To Brethren in Kansas.

Brother H:—I have a few words of information to friend Golias Bonebrake, or whom it may interest. I traveled through Kansas in October and November and found Brethren there. I was not in Dauphan county but in Brown. Brother Jonathan Lichty and brother Daniel Fry live North West of Hiawatha, about 9 miles, on the north side of Pony Creek. Brother Lichty's address is Falls City, Richardson county, Nebraska, he living one mile from the state line. Those Brethren are ministers. I was told there was a brother Sawyer in Brown county, but whereabout I did not learn.

Brother Wm. Hoyle and myself left home on the tenth of October, 1870, 30 miles west of Chicago, and traveled with two horses and carriage through Illinois; crossed the Mississippi at Burlington, Iowa; thence through the southern part of Iowa to Hamburg; thence to Missouri. Crossed the Missouri at Brownsville, Nebraska. Thence down to Kansas to Brown County. Thence a south western course to Topeka, Emporia, Whitewater, Augusta in Butler county, in the southern part. Thence east to the Neosho Falls; thence south to Bellmont, and then north to Otowa and Kansas City, through Missouri to Quincy, Ill. Thence home. We traveled about seventeen hundred miles, and saw many brethren and sisters and friends on our journey. Came home on the 9th of Dec., and found all well at home. Thanks be to God for sparing us. Our journey cost each of us about $30.

How do we Worship in Spirit and how in Truth?

I hope it will not be deemed out of place if I yet present a few more lines to the query in addition to what brother Andes has given.

The Scripture referred to reads thus: "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in Spirit and in truth, for the Father seeketh such to worship him." "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in Spirit and in truth." John 4: 23, 24. We read in the first chapter of John: "and the word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Thus the words which Jesus left upon record; they are the truth. John 6: 63: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you they are Spirit and they are life. If ye love me keep my commandments; and I will pray the Father and he shall give you another comforter (after my departure) that he may abide with you forever, even the spirit of Truth whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him, but ye know him for he dwelleth with you (now) and shall be in you, (hereafter), I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you at that day. Ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you." John 14. Please read all the chapters of John, out of which I have selected quotations.

Being regenerated and born again we have received new life, we are changed from darkness into his marvelous light. Behold I make all things new. We believe the word to be the truth, and from the heart are willing to be governed by the Spirit of truth. Our spirits being made subject to the Spirit of truth, God, we can in the Spirit cry: Abba, Father, and worship Him in Spirit and in truth.

Are There any Brethren in Maryland.

The above question was asked by some brother some time ago, in the Companion, and I have been looking ever since for some one to answer it, and as I have seen no account of the Brotherhood, I will say what I know, to the best of my knowledge. There are ten churches in our State; all of them are seemingly alive, and stand upon the watch tower. They are all prospering and adding to the number, but as I am better acquainted at home than abroad, I will give a little account of our church on Beaver creek, in Washington Co. Md.

We have between two and three hundred members; 4 regular appointments, and six Brethren to labor in the ministry. The church was under a cloud during the war, but God has visited his people again. The drooping plants are reviving, and the good seed which was sown by the servants of the Lord, is now beginning to grow.

We believe that the Lord came to assist us in his mighty work, in sending brethren who were willing to spend there time for our soul's good, and for the honor and glory of our King. Some time during the winter brethren H. Baumbaugh and H. Hershberger paid us a visit. Then brother J. Steel and L. Furney. Then brother Grabil Myers and H. R. Holsinger, and lastly brother J. Oller and brother D. Good. All these brethren labored faithfully in the good cause. The bread which was cast upon the water, is now beginning to return. Fourteen souls have been added to the church within a few weeks, by baptism, and one reclaimed. There was a lasting impression made during themeeting of brother Myers and Holsinger. May the Lord reward them for their kindness, and when their labor is ended on earth, may we all meet in our Father's house, where sin and satan can never tempt us any more, is our prayer. Amen.

Now if any of our brethren can give a better statement than I did of the Brotherhood in Maryland, I would be very glad to hear it.

Annual Meeting of 1871.

According to previous notice, the Annual Meeting will be held, God willing, at the residence of John E. Mickey, in Berks county, Pa., commencing on Tuesday, May 30th, about nine miles North of Myerstown station, (8 from the town proper) on the Lebanon Valley R. R., 33 miles east of Harrisburg, and 21 miles west of Reading.

According to resolution adopted at the yearly meeting of 1856, Enc. Page 196, it is made the duty of "the church" (or district understood) "holding the meeting, to make arrangements to receive and entertain all the brethren and sisters privately. There shall be no boarding tent put up at the place of Meeting to entertain and feed a mixed multitude, as heretofore."

In view of which it is desired to have it understood, by our friends, that no arrangements will be made there, to feed and entertain any that are not members, since it is a council meeting for the benefit of members only; and no public preaching will be allowed at the place of conference.

By order of the committee of arrangements.

Brother Holsinger: I see in last No. of C. F. C., that you expect to be short in making your payments in April, and requested your agents, to do all they could for you. I don't think you consider me your agent; but I thought I would see some of the brethren and friends, and by a little talking, I got four new subscribers for the C. F. C.

Now if all your old patrons would do as much, I think you could make your ends meet in April. Hope all the rest have done more.

J. B. SHIVEL.

Yes, brother Shively, if just half of them would do what you have done, we mean half of the subscribers, we could make ends meet in April, and throughout the year. And no doubt, many of them could do as much if they would make the effort. We have put you down as one of our agents, and will cheerfully confer the appointment to all our friends who will do for us what you have done. We give you our thanks and have plenty more for similar favors.

SAND BROOK, N. J. }
March 17, 1871. }

Brother Henry: Through the mercies of God I am once more permitted, through the Companion, to make known to the brethren and sisters at large, that we, in this arm of the church have had a glorious refreshing from the Lord. On Christmas evening last brother Jacob Riner, from Line, Lexington, Pa. came to us and commenced to hold a week's meeting, and preached the word of God in such a clear and powerful manner that many that were halting between two opinions, were made to fall down at the feet of Jesus and inquire "men and brethren what must we do to inherit eternal life? They were told to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." At the end of the week thirteen souls were made happy in the Lord; but our brother had to leave us and go to his home. We felt like the brethren did towards Paul, to fall on his neck and kiss him, that may be we would see his face no more

After brother Riner left us, brother Poulson, Hoppock, and the writer continued the meeting until thirteen more took up the cross and said, by that act, that they were tired of sin. Twenty-four joined in with us. We were made to rejoice to see the heads of four families declare for Jesus. Our meeting was well attended throughout, and good order and the very best of feelings. On the day of baptism a very large concourse of people gathered around the water, waiting for the coming of the candidates. Presently they came, and then all was as still as death. Brother Paulson then offered up a most affectionate prayer, and after prayer led the candidates into the liquid stream and baptized them. O brethren and sisters, This will be a time long to be remembreed by us, for the out-pouring of the spirit of the Lord. O how good it is to see the young and rising generation give their young hearts to God, and be prepared to meet God; for, dear friends, how soon may God call you from time to eternity? If prepar'd it will be well with you; but if not, O the dreadfull death to be banished from God, and all the angels in heaven. Who can bear the thought. May God bless and save us all.

A German Periodical.

It has been requested that something should be said through the medium of the Companion in behalf of a German Periodical. There are in Pennsylvania and perhaps some other places, quite a number of German brethren who do not understand the English language, and they have no periodical, no reading matter except their Bible, and secular and sectarian papers of the day. And some of them at least, have great desire for a periodical of their own kind in their own vernacular tongue. Now it seems to me there is no very good reason why they should not have the pleasure, if not the blessing of reading essays, and of giving exchange to sentiments in the manner those do whose education is English. In a general way, great benefits have already been derived from reading both religious and secular matter. And all the objections that can be made against a German periodical, is that it "wont pay." Well, suppose it wont pay to make money on, perhaps it would pay to live by; and that would be enough. Suppose a small weekly be published on trial, for one or two years, at one dollar a year. Then let several agents go through all the German churches soliciting subscribers, and appointing agents in every branch where there are German brethren. And it is our opinion, in two years time a German serial would be in a fair way. If however, it should prove a failure, let this be the understanding in the first place, that if it fails the subscribers must help to make up the loss. That would be fair.

Railroad Privileges.

Whereas the last Annual Meeting, appointed me an agent to make arrangements with some of the Rail Road companies in the East and South East, for our brethren going to next Annual Meeting, and where as the Penn'a. Central and Sunbury and Erie companies require all using those roads to have an order, which if presented to the agents where they start, they will obtain a ticket at excursion rates; I therefore propose the that each district meeting appoint an agent to take up all the names in the district of those going over the above named roads to the Annual meeting, and send them to me with, the names of the persons and Post Offices plainly written, upon receipt of which I will send to each of those agents, as many orders as they send me names: or if not convenient for the district meeting to appoint an agent, a church or several churches may appoint and send the names of several as above directed. The brethren will please proceed with this business as soon as possible, as I will withold the printing of the orders until I am informed how many will be required; and would prefer having the number wanted before the arrangement with the above and other roads is completed. I would also state that this order arrangement extends to all brethren, sisters, and friends whose object it is to attend the Annual meeting. Full information of the excursion rates, will be given as soon as they are made with the different roads.

Information Wanted.

Brother Holsinger: I was asked the question a few days ago, in a Scriptural argument, by one of the preceptors of our school, "Why is it, if all Scripture is given by inspiration, that the four writers did not make a corresponding statement of the visit to the tomb of the Savior?" The forepart of the 28 chapter of Matt. the 16th of Mark, 24th of Luke, and 20th of John, certainly do differ in regard to the visit to the Sepulcher, in the rolling away of the stone, and in the angel's appearing unto them. I think I met him fairly on al other points we argued; but I acknowledge I could not tell him why the visit to the tomb did not correspond.

Brother Holsinger: Having become a reader of the C. F. C., since the first of January last, I have read it with much interest. We are well pleased with your paper, especially the anti-tobacco subject. I would be in favor of putting the filthy weed out of existence, if it could be done. King James said the use of Tobacco was a heinous sin. We merely mention this as a word of encouragement that you may plead against it as long as any good can be done.

We need a laboring brother with us here. There are twelve members of us in this settlement, and we have no organized church. Have preaching once every two months. My prayer is that the Lord may send us a ministering brother soon, that we may organize and be built up in the cause of Christ.

"Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed which a man took and sowed in his field, which indeed is the least of all seeds but when it is grown it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof. Matth. 13: 31, 32.

Will brother Henry or some other brother or sister that is not under the influence of tobacco please give through the Companion, an explanation on the above parable of the Savior. I cannot reconcile my mind, because tobacco seed is smaller than mustard seed.

THE

Christian Family Companion

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

For the Companion.

The Conversion of The Jews.

ANSWER TO M. MERKEY'S QUERY.

The Brother desires an explanation through the Companion of Solomon's Song. 5 : 9—16.

In the first place it should be borne in mind that "The Song of Solomon" is a prophetic spiritual poem, written during the Jewish, and pointing forward to the Christian dispensation; and that its language is in the highest degree figurative.

The passage under consideration is a question proposed by the "Daughters of Jerusalem" to the Spouse," as follows :—

What is thy beloved more than another beloved, O thou fairest among women? What is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so charge us?

It is my humble opinion that this text has reference to the very time in which we now live; and to the immediate future.

Explanations :—The "Spouse" represents the Church of Christ; "My Beloved," the Savior, and the daughters of Jerusalem, the Jewish people scattered over the world.

The daughters of Jerusalem inquire of the Spouse about the character of him whom she so much loves and adores. She no longer spurns their overtures, but describes in glowing language her beloved. This points to the time when the Israelites, abandoning their fallacies, will begin to inquire concerning the way of Salvation through their long rejected Messiah, and when the Church, divested of her persecuting spirit, Babylon being fallen, will in return preach to them "the glorious Gospel of the Son of God;" and they will accept it; as Paul teaches, Romans 11 : 25, 26 and 27. This acceptance is most tenderly and beautifully shadowed forth in the first verse of the 6th chapter of this Song, where "the daughters of Jerusalem" address the Spouse as follows :—Whither is thy beloved gone, O thou fairest among women? Whither is thy beloved turned aside, that we may seek him with thee?

I have ventured the opinion that the passage in question referred to the very time in which we live, and to the immediate future. My reasons for that opinion will now be given. Babylon is falling. Her power to persecute is fast receding from her, and soon will be entirely lost. A number of fallible men, to bolster up her sinking cause, have declared the Pope, another fallible man, to be infallible. This is not only the acme of absurdity, but of blasphemy.

Infallibility is an attribute which God alone can possess; and soon will the rider on the white horse, "whose name is called the word of God" smite "Mystery Babylon" with the sharp sword that goeth out of his mouth and she shall be utterly destroyed, for her wicked blasphemies and bloody persecutions. When this is accomplished the fullness of the Gentiles will speedily come in; and so all Israel be saved: that is, after Babylon shall have completely fallen, all heathen nations will soon accept Christianity, and the conversion of the Jews quickly follow.

There are at this time indications among the Israelites here in Philadelphia that many of them have grown weary of expecting their Messiah, and are beginning to inquire whether he has not already come into the world, and they knew him not. This sect pray God in their public worship, that if they, as a people, have been in the dark in this matter, he would enlighten their minds. Their Rabbi not long since declared in his preaching, that it was his firm conviction that they would soon abandon the rite of circumcision; intimating thereby that they would ere long exchange Judaism for Christianity. For this and other reasons the orthodox Jews, as they style themselves, call this sect of their brethren "The Christian Jews."

The Israelites in this country have for many years been comparing their treatment here with what it has always been in the Catholic countries from which they fled to escape persecution; and they have not been slow to comprehend that the difference can alone be correctly attributed to the fact that here apostate Babylon has lost her power to persecute, and the humanizing and fraternizing principles taught by Jesus Christ are predominant.

They have learned in the fact to discern between the gaudy "Whore" of Rome and the chaste "Spouse" of the Redeemer, and are beginning to inquire of the latter concerning her "Beloved."

Brethren let us pray that Babylon may soon fall; the fullness of the gentiles come in, and all Israel be saved. When these things have been accomplished by him whose vesture is dipped in the blood of atonement; and who goes forth "conquering and to conquer," then will be ushered in the glorious Millennium. For this we have "the sure word of prophecy." God speed the day. SILAS THOMAS.

"About—Those Who are Asleep."

"Every unconverted man is asleep towards God. He is under an illusion. He is totally inactive in God's service. He is blind to his own danger of eternal perdition. These are all conditions of spiritual sleep. The sources of this insensibility are very various. One is in the light of slumber of youth—the insensibility of sheer thoughtlessness. Another is so wearied and overtaxed with his schemes of self-seeking, that his conscience has become torpid.—Fashion has dragged another into insensibility for 'she who liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth.' Others are dragged with error, as with overdoses of opium. Others are secretly skeptical, with their hearts thoroughly hardened, and with that pistol of the suicide, infidelity, tucked under their pillow. This sleep of skepticism, generally overtakes those who have lived long enough to distrust all religious emotions, and have out-lived their own early sacred impressions.

"Beecher's Warning to His Congregation."

Beware of refined selfishness. Beware of aesthetic selfishness. Beware of aristocratic selfishness. Beware of the selfishness of prosperity and respectability. Beware of the temptation of the devil. Beware of anything that shall make you indifferent to the sufferings and to the condition of those who are cast down by the reason of their sins—for you, in your estate, are sinners, dependent, every hour and every moment, on the goodness of a pitying God. Be you to your fellows what God is to you."

Plagiarism.

Webster defines this word as follows: "The act of purloining another man's literary works, or putting them off as one's own; literary theft."

There can be no fault found with a man for reading all the good works he can get hold of, and treasuring up as many good ideas as possible, but for a minister to get up in the sacred pulpit and palm off on his congregation sermons at wholesale, committed to memory from sermon books, is a burning shame, as well as a reproach to the office of the ministry. A young man who does so will never come to much. He will never learn to think for himself, he will always be at the mercy of the thoughts of other men, he is likely to preach one doctrine in one sermon and an opposite one in the next, just as he happens to get hold of different books.

I once heard of a young minister being taken to account for preaching false doctrine. His answer was, "It was in the book I read." Another young man got hold of a sermon preached by a minister when the yellow fever prevailed at a certain place. He went on to describe how fearful the ravages of the epidemic and how necessary that men should prepare to die, just as if the yellow fever was raging while he (the young man) was preaching. Let me say to young ministers, study so as to be able to preach God's Word without depending upon the sermons of other men. Your congregations will soon learn your native capacity, and determine whether you are preaching your own, or other men's sermons. There are nearly always some persons in your congregations who are so well versed as to know when it is Spurgeon, Beecher, &c., and when yourself. A young man soon sinks in the estimation of his people when they discover that he does not study, but on Saturday evening looks up a sermon from some sermon book, and imposes it on them. If a man has not brains enough to prepare a sermon of his own, and still must preach, let him be honest and tell his congregation that he will give them a sermon from Brother——.

Some persons send to newspaper offices articles taken from other men's writings, and palm them off as their own. I have no objections to persons sending good articles for publication taken from books, but to head an article, naming the subject, then follow it by Elder A. B. C, as the case may be, when it is by somebody else, and only copied word for word by Elder A. B. or C., is to tell a bare-faced falsehood. It is a very hard thing to do this and not be found out. "Be sure your sins will find you out."

Oh, what vain creatures we are. We want to become great in the eyes of the people, and if we can't make that impression for want of native or acquired ability, we will sometimes get on to somebody else's shoulders and proclaim our greatness; but in the midst of our proclamations some one comes along and throws us off our stilts, and then what a crash. It is a little like the man who told his son to get money. He said, "My son get money honestly, and if you can't get it honestly, get money."

If a man wants to rise in the eyes of the people, let him convince them that he is doing the very best he can, from an honest heart, to glorify God and advance the interests of humanity without regard to being called great, and he will rise much faster and higher than he possibly can by trying to palm himself off for what he is not.

How Long Did Noah Preach?

In Companion No. 2, page 46. brother B. F. Koons requests that some brother give his views as to how long Noah preached to the antediluvians, and how long he was engaged in building the Ark. Brother Snowberger says the Bible does not inform us how long he preached, or whether he preached at all; but the Apostle Peter calls him a preacher of righteousness. Now I think the Bible comes very near telling us that he did preach, or at least that is the inference. By reference to the 6th chapt. of Gen., latter clause of 3rd verse, God says: my spirit shall not always strive with man thus, but his days shall be one hundred and 20 years. The German makes it much plainer. It says:

"Jo will thaen neb Jnah gi'a Zantzet und heaung Jobs."

This goes to show very plainly that he was yet to give them 120 years to repent, and if they were to have so long a time to repent, there must have been a preacher, some one to warn them of the danger that was awaiting them. Brother Snowberger thinks it is hardly probable that Noah preached 120 years to the antediluvians, and that the Ark was preparing so long. Now I think it is not improbable at all, for our ark which is the church, has been preparing, for over 1800 years, and preachers warning the people all the time to enter into the Ark of God, which is the church.

However I do not believe that Noah was so long building the Ark, but that he commenced preaching some time before he commenced building the Ark. Brother Snowberger argues from the date of Shem, Ham, and Japhet, that Noah was 500 years old when these sons were born, and that he was 600 years old when he entered the Ark. By reference to the 6th chapt. of Genesis we find that he said, I will yet give them time 120 years, to repent. A considerable time after this we read of the birth of Shem, Ham and Japhet. So we find that Noah preached repentance some time before these sons were born. I believe he preached a long time before he commenced building the Ark, and I farther believe that if a number, say one third of the antediluvians had repented, the world would not have been destroyed at that time; but that it would have been as it was at Ninevah under Jonah's preaching; because the Ninevites repented, their city was not destroyed. Thus I think I have shown Bible authority enough that Noah preached 120 years before the flood, but how long he was building the Ark I am not able to say, neither do I think it need concern us; our duty is to be ready at all times to enter into and continue in our Ark, and finally land safe on the other shore.

SOMERSET CO. PA.

BY C. H. BALTHASER.

There is such a thing as spiritual communion or acquaintance—a knowledge by the Spirit, of a very refined and endearing kind, of those whom we know not after the flesh. If we have been attentive to the phenomena of the inner life, we have, at least some of us, made the discovery of fellowship with persons whom we never saw, and do not expect to see in this life, more intimate, quickening, and joyous, than with some with whom we have daily personal intercourse. This fact accounts, in part, for my present communication. I desire, in this public manner, to express my joy in your deliverance from "the bondage of corruption," and your entrance upon the life everlasting. I propose in this and a subsequent letter, to call your prayerful and undivided attention to a few fundamental principles, without the exemplification of which no one can be an heir of grace. In a matter so momentous as the eternal weal of the soul, nothing should be taken for granted. Rightly apprehended, nothing comes more clearly within the range of positive knowledge, than a saving relation to God, although it may be seldom that we enjoy this privilege. Doubts and fears often harass the most holy. Even Elijah, the dauntless Prophet of Fire, had his weak hour. But every Gospel-promise, every whisper of the Spirit, and every providence in the economy of grace, tend to the blessed state of heart which finds its freest expression in the words, "I know."

As christians, the first thing that is indisputably manifest, to yourselves and to others, is your death to sin. "How shall we, that are dead to sin live any longer therein. He that is dead is freed from sin.  Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Romans 6:2, 7, 11. These two modes of life cannot exist in the same being. Tampering with sin, dalliance with the flesh in any sense-pleasing indulgence for the sake of gratification, unwillingness to take up the yoke of Christ in everything that involves the utter renunciation of self, testifies to an alarming illness in our new character, if not to the entire absence of the life of Christ. One Redeemer "thought it not robbery to be equal with God, but made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Himself the form of a servant." "Being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross"—the most rigorous and fearful conditions of Justice, in order to become both an Atonement for our sins and a faultless Model for our imitation. In His resignation to the will of Heaven you must be at one with Him, or you cannot cross the threshold of His temple. "He was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." To be cast in such a mould, and be new-created on such terms, and set forward by such an impulse, is to be truly dead to sin. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His" Here is an emphatic condemnation of a life that parleys with "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." As certainly as you nurse a sinful inclination, bias, or tendency, you invite satan into Eden—if indeed he has even been expelled—and practically support a principle that lies at the root of the primal insurrection that disturbed the harmony of Heaven, and gave many of "the sons of God" to the gloom of Hell, and to "everlasting chains of darkness." God was never mocked with impunity and a persistent preference of self inevitably incurs His wrath and insures destruction. There is no truth that needs to be more indellibly impressed on the minds of "all who name the name of Christ," than that there is no death to sin when there is a perpetual hankering after and delight in forbidden carnality. There is much tolerated in the brotherhood, where the evil lies principally in degree and not in kind, which is hostile to purity and the development of a Christly mind. The essential nature of holiness should be sufficiently plain to every disciple to reveal the sad truth that we may be shamefully and ruinously enslaved by the flesh in matters where the Church has no authority to interpose. "The lust of the eyes" is promptly and sternly condemned, while other lusts, more disgusting and debasing, are exalted as prime ministers of man-soul. The union before which you are to stand, and in which you are to see the Spotless Perfection into which you are to be transformed, is God Himself; and this awful thought should open such a gulf between you and the world, and beget such an aversion to its tastes and fashions and whims, that you should recoil from its companionship in sin as much as from sharing its guilt and punishment. Ask yourselves daily, alone in the presence of Jehovah, "am I dead to sin, crucified to the world, and the world unto me?"

The question is not, is sin no longer resident, but is it dominant? Is it in subjection, or does it reign? Is its course the habit of life, or does it come into the ascendant only in unguarded moments? It is not sinfulness that we surmount in conversion, but sin as a ruling power. To die unto sin so as to be alive unto God, is to get a new personality, as it were, which is by nature and not by effort superior to the flesh. The one is the ground and the other the instrument of salvation. We are to die daily by effort because we are made partakers of a nature which is wholly dead to sin. The sense in which we are dead inclines and enables us to "resist unto blood striving against sin," to weaken its dominion, and constantly triumph over its foul suggestions and dictations. A divorce leaves both parties alive, while at the same time they are dead to each other in the sense that formerly made them "one flesh." So death to sin does not mean that sin is dead, or that we are above the possibility of sinning, but that our new life and new relations places us into irreconcilable antagonism to it, divorcing us from it in every element of our being that shapes and controls the life.

Death to sin is not indicated by fear of its consequences. This may coexist with the most consuming desire to indulge in it, and exquisite pleasure in its commission. Fear may restrain us, and leave the nature that makes "the children of wrath" untouched. We may be outwardly abstinent from what is gross and reprehensible, while the soul secretly revels in sin, and longs for its overt exhibitions. Life may be branded by no salient immorality, while we have the mark of hell in our right hand, and our heart thronged with a legion of devils. Neither is death to sin the conformity of our lives to the requirement of a creed, or the standard of our fellow-members. Because we are as good as others is no evidence that we are as good as we ought to be. "We dare not make ourselves of the number or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves; but they, measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise." 2 Cor. 10; 12. The same apostle, in a former epistle, charged the same church, "be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." If we have any among us who can, on good ground, make this challenge, I would say, by all means follow him. Paul is dead, and he has no successor to wear his mantle. The social element in religion is a powerful incentive to growth in grace, if steadily held subject to the Supreme Law. It is intended for our consolidation in good, and by it we may also be compacted in evil. If not watchful we will simply copy each other, and be more influenced by the approval of the church than its Founder and Head. This, instead of being "dead to sin," would be "turning the grace of God into lasciviousnes." "Esteem others better than yourselves," "love the brotherhood," "give honor to whom honor is due," and yet so live as if God had set you as a pattern of holiness to the church, even "looking unto Jesus" as your supreme authority, and "the author and finisher of faith." Neither must we think that we are dead to sin because we reverence our conscience. The heathen do the same. Sectarians and truth-splitters put in this claim with great confidence. Conscience is pliant, and by wrong education may be accomodated to any theological absurdity. With "a good conscience we may blaspheme, persecute the church of God and waste it, as did Paul, while the terms of salvation are treated with bitter contempt. Diligent reading of the scriptures, much fervent effectual prayer, a plastic state of soul to the teaching and guidance of the Holy Spirit, unyielding opposition to every solicitation of inbred evil, will give us a conscience that may be trusted, and which even echoes the sense of right in the conscience of the Eternal.

To be dead to sin is to have no more sympathy with our former life, than with the dead, putrifying body, as such, of a friend. There is an aversion to sin equal to that which we feel when we enter an apartment filled with the suffocating odor of a decaying corpse. Sin is denuded of all its charms by a perception of its essential character. If otherwise, our change is at best only reformation, not regeneration. Conversion is not simply a higher motive and better conduct, but a complete severance from what is the deepest ground and highest power in mere morality—the very death of that—and the implantation of a life that men sinned, and cannot sin. There is a righteousness imputed as well as a righteousness personal; and so there is a living unto God which is voluntary, and in a proper sense proceeds from ourselves, while there is, as its substratum, the life of God, which enables us "to will and to do," and to "work out our own salvation with fear and trembling." If we are dead to sin, we stand related to the kingdom of darkness as Christ did during His humiliation. There must be no compromise with the flesh, no thirsting for the applause of the world, no mimicking of its sin-customs. "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God," and you have aroused eternal enmity to the world, promising never to wear its gaudy livery, never to prefer its convocations to the assembly of the saints, but steadily and consistently to oppose its spirit, meeting its hate and scan with meekness and love, returning blessing for cursing, giving bread for stones, and fish for scorpions, enduring the cross, despising the shame, taking into the embrace of christian affection those "who seperate you from their company, reproach you, and cast out your name as evil." You are to "esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches" than all the accumulated treasures and honors the world ever enjoyed or conferred, and have it as a principal glory that you are "counted worthy to suffer shame for His name—oh, this is to be indeed dead to sin! It is the grossest deception as well as the saddest delusion, to assume the Christian name while we are still in bondage to "the beggarly elements of the world." If you carry not "in your body the marks of the Lord Jesus"—the print of the nails in hands and feet—bearing in and upon you the undeniable evidences of crucifixion, you will not find "His yoke easy and His burden light." It would be all uphill work, with no Divine arm to aid you. Having no root in themselves, only a superficial skinning of conviction and reformation—such disciples are so ill-encouraged as to fall away.

You have made a profession, kneeling in the ice-bound stream, of so solemn a nature and so wide a compass, that it involves a total revalation of character, and reaches to the Throne of God and the Gates of Hell. You have been "baptized into the death of Christ," which is possible only where death to sin prepares for the symbolic burial, as death for sin prepared Christ for His interment. Your eyes must be filmed and darkened by the death-throes of the Adamic nature, all wordly show and glory must be to you as if you were in your graves. You are required, by the high and glorious meaning of your baptism, to give you back to the scourge, your head to the thorn-crown, your face to buffeting and spitting, keeping your fealty unweaked by the contumely and scorn of the world, personating Christ before His accusers when you are made the laughing-stock of the vain and haughty, and the butt of devilish malice. Lose every friend on earth, and bear every form and degree of insult and obloquy, rather than make shipwreck of faith, and sadden your Savior's heart, and grieve His Spirit, by your declension from christian rectitude. If men and devils combine to mix for you a cup bitter and scorching as hell's most venomous, burning gall, recur to your death to sin as a fresh experience, and contemplate "the joy set before you" if you prove faithful, and the perdition that awaits you if you prove recreant. "Reckon yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin," because you are so in fact, and meet every allurement and temptation of "the world, the flesh, and the devil" with this repellant, Spirit-indited interrogation, how shall we, who are dead to sin, live any longer therein?"

A donkey, the other day, stubbornly refused to come out of a boat which had brought him across the Mersey: at last, after many kicks had been applied, and other persecutions of that kind, a man stepped forward, addressing him affectionately, "Come along, brother"—and the donkey obeyed at once.

The way to be happy is not to try too much to be so. You can't catch sunbeams if you try; but you may enjoy their light and warmth by letting them shine unsolicited upon you.

Yellow Creek, Pa., Sunday School.

According to previous arrangement the brethren and sisters of the Yellow Creek congregation, Bedford Co., Pa., met on the 11th of March, inst., for the purpose of electing officers to conduct the Sabbath School, the present year, with the following result:

Jacob Furry, Supt.; Christ Snoeberger, Asst. Supt.; D. L. Replogle, Sec.; L. B. Replogle, Asst. Sec.; Geo. Brumbaugh, Treasurer.

First session was held, Sunday, March 19th, at which time the above officers organized. The exercises were opened by Elder D. Snoeberger. Next in order was the selection of teachers, with the following result.

FEMALES.

Rosie Snoeberger, Catharine Snoeberger, Barbara Snoeberger, Mary Teeter, Susan Stayer, M. A. Buck, Jennie Strait, Lizzie Berkheimer, Ella Ott.

MALES.

J. Z. Replogle, S. L. Buck, S. E. Furry, W. T. Hughes, John Shuss, L. H. Biddle, Isaac Replogle, Frederick Baker, A. B. Snoeberger.

The Superintendent then announced to the school, that they would commence reading at the Acts of the Apostles. Accordingly, 1st chapter was read, and a number of questions asked by the Superintendent. After which privilege was given the school to ask any thing in the chapter read that they wished to know. We think this organization (this session at least) will long be remembered; 52 female scholars and 19 males present, at the opening. We ask the blessing of God upon this well founded institution. In my weak judgment the selection of officers, is a good one, and that of teachers a good one. The interest manifested among children, parents, teachers, officers, and spectators—promises in the future an abundant harvest, ripe fruit, and a rich reward. The welfare and success of our school very greatly depends upon the effort put forth by parents. Now brethren and sisters is the time for us to work, while the officers and teachers of the Sunday School are making lasting impressions upon our offspring. We will encourage them in every possible way, to be obedient to their teachers and officers, and grow up alike an honor to themselves, their community and to their God, thus ever laboring to stamp improvement on the wings of time.

Christ is Precious.

"Unto you therefore which believe he is precious." 1st Peter 2:7.

In the chapter in which our caption may be found, the apostle addressed his Brethren as "new born babes," and admonishes them to desire the sincere and unadulterated "milk of the word" that they may "grow thereby," directing their minds at the same time, to the "living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God and precious." Again, "behold I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious, and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded." In chapter 1:18, 19, he declares, that they were "not redeemed with silver, and gold:—but with the precious blood of Christ."

Christ being thus precious, the apostle may well say of him, "their is no other name under Heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved," hence we remark, Christ being thus precious, every word that proceeded out of his mouth is precious for he "spake as never man spake," and as the word which he spake is "truth," and mortal man is "to be made free by the truth," he becomes exceedingly precious to them "which believe." As much so my christian brother, and sister that we should "hear him in all things whatever he has said unto us." Having as we trust "obtained like precious faith," and realized that Christ is our Savior and we are his, we may well rejoice with "joy unspeakable," and as we pass through life's transient night We may find him a "present help in every time of need." Oh! for an indwelling Christ, to sooth our sorrows, allay our cares, remove our doubts, and fears, and make smooth life's uneven ways. Not only so, but then how precious to the dying saint is Christ? Having confided in him through life, having relied on him and his sacred word, having 'tasted of the good things of God, and the powers of the world to come," he now in death reclines on his strong arm, and need "fear no evil." Then when we enter the bright clime of glory and are permitted to "see him as he is," oh! then we shall realize in the full sense of the term how precious is our Savior, for we "shall be like him," "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ."

But, "the ungodly are not so," unto them he is not precious, but a "stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence." You who are yet out of Christ, you who have not obeyed him, you who have not followed him in "the regeneration," permit me to appeal to you through this medium, will you suffer the precious blood of Christ, "to have been shed in vain? Behold him agonizing, bleeding, dying to open up a "fountain for sin and uncleanness." Oh! will you still continue to "stumble at the Word? Will you still refuse offered mercy? Oh! be persuaded, to forsake the error of your ways, turn in with the overtures of mercy, and turn now; yield obedience to the requirements of high Heaven, that you may realize the preciousness of Christ your Savior, receive the Spirit of adoption, whereby you may cry "Abba Father," continue faithful unto death, and through life, in death, and in eternity you shall realize all that I have attempted to portray above. And even more, for my feeble pen cannot fully discribe the joys, the comfort and blessedness of the "saints in light," the "redeemed in Heaven."

Finally may God the Father, in the plenitude of his mercy enable us all to consider the end to which we are hastening, that we may choose the part of wisdom, live humbly, live prayerfully, walk in all the "commands and ordinances of the Lord blameless." So shall this precious Christ be ours.

Who shall be Great.

An envious and jealous spirit is plainly visible in the human mind from the time that righteous Abel was slain by his envious brother Cain, even to the year 1871.

Notwithstanding the light of the Son of God shone in the time of the apostles, with superlative brightness, yet this spirit of jealousy is seen cropping out among them Listen! What do we hear? Why we hear the disciples of the meek and lowly Savior contending which of them will be greatest in His kingdom.

Before the kingdom is established, or the nature of the government understood some of these would be subjects are planning how they may be elevated above their fellows.

Jesus knowing such strife and contention in his kingdom would be detrimental to the best interests of its subjects, in His wisdom pointed out the man who should be great in His kingdom.

Unfortunately all do not agree as to the indentity of this great man. The Roman Catholics say it was Peter, and that Pope Pius the IX is his successor. Some denominations say the Bishop is the great man of the church. Others that it is the preacher or the deacon; but let us see whom Jesus said should be great in His kingdom.

"Then there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest. Jesus perceiving the thought of their heart, said unto them; he that is least among you all, the same shall be great."

From the Savior's language we understand that being Deacon, Preacher, or Bishop, does not make a man great; but he who can use his authority in such a quiet and lowly way, that it is said "he is least among all," deserves to be called, nay more the Savior says the same shall be great. May God help us all to be humble that all may be great.

Creation of Tobacco.

In reply to brother Jos. E. Bowser, see Companion No. 7, page 110, we would say it is plain from Genesis 1: 11, 12 that God did make tobacco. He also made all the deadly poisons that grow. The poison trees, vines, and plants were all made by him, why I know not: but I know that we should avoid all poisons, and warn others to do the same.

Sie auf der Kanzel.—Wer hat es ihn gethan? Ihr kalten Glieder, die nicht betet für den Prediger; die ihr nichts oder sehr wenig für ihn thut: die ihr gegen Alles erwacht was er zum Wohl der Gemeinde thun will; die ihr ihm noch schmäht und lästert, ihr seid es, die die warme Quelle seines Segens zu Eis erfrieren macht. Und dann kommt ihr noch mit der Axt und wollt das Eis entfernen! Thaut es lieber auf mit Gebeten warmer Liebe! Helft den "Frieden der Gemeinde," die mit Recht das Eis von der Kanzel zu halten suchen!

Encouragement.

Husbandman of God take heart!
Lo! the field is ripening fast;
Through the burden and the heat
Thou shalt bind thy sheaves at last.

Worker in life's busy hive,
Oft by weariness oppressed,
God shall crown thine earnest toil
With the benison of rest.

Pilgrim through the vale of years,
'Mid the gloomy overcast
Lo, the mountain top appears,
And the shadow lifts at last!

Mourner, lift thy troubled gaze!
Faith's fair rainbow spans the gloom
With its augury of peace,
Sweetly arching o'er the tomb.

Sufferer, sitting dumb with pain;
Hero, in the battle fray;
Martyr, in the van of right:
Lowly saints, who watch and pray.

Woman, by your lonely hearth
Living o'er the buried past;
Ye who work and ye who wait,
God shall crown your need at last!

Is There any Pasture Outside of the Door or Fold of God?

This query has been answered several times already, but never yet to my satisfaction; neither do I think that I can give satisfaction to all, but I hope I may give a little light to some one on the subject. In order to understand the Savior's language we ought first to understand his parable. I never read much history, but I read in Luke 2: 8, that there were "Shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their Flock by night." The german adds, bey den Hurden, which means, an enclosure, penn, or fold. The german calls it Sheepfold, or stable. Now we all know that the pasture is not in the stable, but on the field or mountain. But those folds were on the field: the place where they were led in at night to rest and be secure, then out again to pasture: so they went in, and out and found pasture. Now Brethren, the Lord's house is on the top of the mountain: Isaiah 2: 2. Micah 4: 1. Exalted above the hills: it stands right on the gospel field. The pasture is not in the house but in the field. The house is the place of rest and security; but the good shepherd will lead his sheep out on the good pasture at daylight, and at night he calls them in, so they go in, and out and find pasture. He called his own by name, and led them out. (John 10: 3). We also are first led out—but from under the law of sin and death, into the law of the spirit, of life in Christ Jesus. (Rom. 8.)—the perfect law of liberty, (Jas. 1: 25). Now if we know his voice, we will follow him; and he may lead us out on the mount through the 5th 6th and 7th chapters of Matthew, and we will find very rich, wholesome pasture: yes, we may go out through the whole gospel field. But we dare not cross the boundary line and forget our resting place; no, no, such an one has no God, (2 Jno. 1). If it happens to get dark when we are out on pasture, we must listen well for the good shepherd's voice, and he will call us in. We must beware of the false prophets, who come in sheep's clothing and would get us off of that high mountain to a hill, to get us astray that they may devour. See Jeremiah 50: 6. 7.

Some point us to plain clothing as the sheep's clothing. Very well: if Christians are the sheep, and the plain garment, or clothing, the sheep's-clothing, then you must admit that Christians have plain clothing. But I believe the Gospel is the sheep's-clothing. The woman that John saw, was clothed with the sun, (the Gospel) Rev. 12. Beware of those who come with the Gospel but inwardly are raving and devouring wolves. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? By their fruits ye shall know them: we have no right to judge any except by their fruits. Those who have all their food in the stable the church—and none on the field, I think must have dry feed. It may do very well as long as they have good shepherds to feed them, but when the shepherds fail, they are apt to fall also.

For the COMPANION.

He is Knocking.

"Behold! I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with me."

Jesus, in sending his message to the seven churches of Asia, closes each one with a promise of reward "to him that overcometh."

The above words are part of the message that John was to deliver to the church of the Laodiceans. It is not only a message to the church, but it seems to include all mankind: "If any man hear my voice." To all who have not heeded the voice of Jesus speaking by His Word and Spirit is this message sent. To you who are now reading these lines, if you are still impenitent, Jesus sends this message. At your door has the Savior often stood knocking. Look back and try to recollect the first time you heard that gentle knock and loving voice. Was it in the spring time of life when you were very happy and the pleasures of earth seemed lasting, that you heard Jesus saying: "Son, daughter, give me thy heart?"

At that season, when he stood knocking at the door of your heart, you could easily have left Him in. The door swung softly on its hinges and was often opened for friends to enter, but Jesus you never invited in.

Summer drew on, and still the Divine Suppliant stood at your door. Sometimes when you stopped a moment from your worldly cares, you felt that you might, and wanted to let Him in, but you were so busy gathering the harvest and the ripening fruits that you thought you had not time to attend to the guest who so earnestly solicited an entrance that he might sup with you.

You may have heard them saying: "Open to me, my sister, for my head is filled with dew and my locks with the drop of the night." Cant 5: 2. But you heeded not the pleading.

Autumn has come. The fierce blasts of adversity blew round you. Friends fall like the fading leaf and return to dust. You are beginning to feel the vanity of all earthly things. Sometimes at this season of life when the knocking becomes louder and more persistent, the soul looks out of an upper window and sees Jesus standing, as it were, weary with waiting. And as you gaze you wonder to see a visage so marred. You ask yourself why these wounds, and these garments stained with blood? Then this long forgotten scripture rushes to your mind: "Surely he hath borne our grief and carried our sorrows, yet we did esteem him, stricken, smitten of God, afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." Is. 53: 4, 5. And you have an earnest, longing desire to open the door that you might throw yourself at His feet. But you feel that you have contracted so many sinful habits in the long years that are past, and each one seems to have added a new bolt or bar against him who stands without. You fear you cannot undo the fastenings, and you doubt if He would enter if you could. Oh, make a mighty effort. You can open the door, only try. He who stands without is ready to help you. How can you doubt that He is anxious to enter; has He not stood an humble suppliant at your door these many years? Do you not hear the pleading and the promise? "Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man will hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him and sup with him and he with me."

Remember the winter of life is near when the heart becomes so ice-bound that the love of Jesus can hardly set you free. No doubt you have been exceeding sinful, and to the innumerable multitude of sins you have added this that you have kept the Savior waiting and pleading so long to be admitted into your heart. You would never have so cruelly treated any other friend. How wonderful it is that Jesus will return so often and knock at the door of our hearts. Have you any earthly friend who would have returned after being so often repulsed? Do you not wonder that He will come at all; that He would care to be admitted into so vile an abode as you know your heart to be? But He has declared in His Word that such as you He came to save. He is continually looking after the lost sheep that He may bring them into His fold. How full of encouragement and comfort is that expression of Paul: "It is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief."

You cannot be worse than the very chief of sinners, so Paul felt himself to be, and yet he became one of the Savior's most zealous servants. "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us."

When Paul was trying, by fasting and prayer, to unloose the fastenings to the door of his sinful heart, that he might let the Savior in, Jesus sent His servant with the message: "And now why tarriest thou; arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." And now by His Word the Savior sends this same message to every penitent. To you, if you are willing to receive Jesus into your heart, is this message sent. Why tarriest thou; arise and be baptized. "They that have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

The Birth-place of Genius.

It is one of the mysteries of life, that genius, that noblest gift of God, is nourished by poverty. Its greatest works have been achieved by the sorrowing ones of the world, in tears and in despair. Not in the brilliant saloon, furnished with every comfort and elegance—not in the library, well fitted, softly carpeted, and looking out upon a smooth, green lawn, or a broad expanse of scenery—not in ease and competence, is genius born and nutured, but more frequently in adversity and destitution, amidst the harrassing cares of a straitened household, in bare and fireless garrets, with the noise of squalid children, in the midst of the turbulence of domestic contentions, and in the deep gloom of uncheered despair, is genius born and reared. This is its birthplace, and in scenes like these, unpropitious, repulsive, wretched men have labored, studied, and trained themselves, until they have at last eliminated out of the gloom of that obscurity, the shining lights of their times—become the companions of kings, the guides and teachers of their kind, and exercised an influence upon the thought of the world amounting to a species of intellectual legislation.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. 14.

CHRIST INSTITUTED THE ORDINANCES OF FEET-WASHING, THE SUPPER, AND THE COMMUNION.

That the Communion, or Bread and Wine is an ordinance, and that it was instituted at the Supper, we have been considering, is not a matter of a controversy or doubt. It is not proposed here to examine the doctrines of transubstantiation, consubstantiation, etc., but merely to notice some circumstances connected with the institution of the solemn ordinance.

We notice first the time at which the communion was instituted. This we understand to have been at the close of the Supper, when Jesus had done eating and when the disciples were about finishing their meal. By a careful examination it will be seen that the giving of thanks for the cup, immediately succeeded the eating of the bread; and as both Luke and Paul place the cup after supper, it is plain that the giving of thanks for the bread was at the close of the Supper. Luke says, "Likewise also the cup after supper." Luke 22: 20. Paul says, "After the same manner also he took the cup when he had supped." 1 Cor. 11: 25. As they limit the cup in point of time after the supper, we will accept it so. But in reference to the bread Matthew says, "And as they were eating Jesus took bread and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples." Matthew 26: 26. Mark also says, "And as they did eat Jesus took bread and blessed it, and brake it, etc. Mark 14: 22. They both teach that he took the bread as they were eating, and we accept of their testimony. Combining the testimony of these four inspired writers we have the following: Jesus took the bread "as they did eat," and "the cup after supper;" but as they were proximate in time,—the wine immediately succeeding the bread,—we can come to but one conclusion, namely, that the Communion was instituted just at the close of the Supper. Indeed, it is not reasonable to suppose that the disciples continued eating while their Lord and Master blessed the bread, and so we conclude that the commencement of this blessing marked the close of the Supper: there was no space of time between the Supper and the Communion. We are not informed why our Savior took the bread before they had stopped eating; but, may it not have been to curb the mere gratification of the appetite; and to teach them that sacred meals should be partaken of with moderation? It presents itself to our mind in this light; and we accept it as a warning.

We come now to notice more particularly the relative time and order of these ordinances. It is necessary here to call to mind several facts that have been clearly shown. It was shown that Judas was present during the washing of the disciples feet; as Jesus, in reference to him, said, "Ye are not all clean." It was also shown that the traitor was made known during the eating of the supper, while Jesus was yet eating; and that when he had received the sop, he went immediately out. And it has also been shown that the Communion was instituted at the close of the Supper, and that the bread was taken up while they were eating. From these facts we deduce the following conclusions:

1. Judas was not present when the Communion was instituted. He went out while the Savior was yet eating; and he had completed his meal before he took up the communion bread. From this conclusion there is no escape.

2. The washing of feet was done, in point of time, first in order,—before the Supper, and not after it as some would have us believe. In case Jesus had washed their feet after the Supper, and Judas had gone out while they were eating, as we have shown he did, by what ingenuity could it be made appear that he was present during the service of feet washing? The most artful sophistry would certainly fail to give it even the faintest appearance of probability. If you place the washing of their feet after the Supper, you are obliged also to place it after the blessing of the bread and wine; for with all the force you can muster you must utterly fail to wedge in even the title of a moment between the Supper and the Communion. But you dare not place Feetwashing after the Communion; for by so doing you would deny that Judas went immediately out upon receiving the sop, and assume that he was present at the institution of the Communion. We invite those who place Feetwashing after the Supper to examine these facts with an unbiased mind and sanctified reason, and to abandon their untenable position and accept the truth as it is clearly revealed. The washing of feet was first; the supper, second; and the bread and wine, or communion, last. This is the gospel order; and you might, with as much ground for hope, undertake to change the relative position of lakes Erie, Huron, and Superior, as to to try to change the relative time and order of these ordinances.

One thought more in reference to the institution of the Communion. It is supposed by many that Luke speaks of two cups; one before and the other after the Supper. We regard this as a mistaken idea. Luke does not speak of two cups; but he twice mentions the one cup. This we think very clear when we notice carefully what the different evangelists say in reference to the cup. Matthew says: "And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament which is shed for many for the remission of sins. But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." Matthew 26: 27—29. Mark says: "And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them; and they all drank of it. And he said unto them, This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many. Verily, I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God." Mark 14: 23, 25. Luke, in his first notice of the cup, says: "And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this and divide it among yourselves. For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God shall come." In his second reference to the cup he says: "Likewise also the cup after Supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you." Luke 22: 17, 18, 20. Matthew and Mark in their account of the communion cup mention the following particulars:

1. The taking of the cup.
2. The giving of thanks.
3. The giving of the cup to his disciples.
4. The dividing of the cup among them.
5. The blood of the new testament.
6. The shedding of the blood for many.
7. His not drinking any more of the fruit of the vine.
8. His Father's kingdom—the kingdom of God.

Of these particulars, Luke, in his first reference to the cup, mentions five,—the 1, 2, 4, 7, 8; and another,—the 3—is clearly implied. In his second reference to the cup, he makes mention of the remaining two,—the 5, 6. Thus it is seen that Luke, in his two allusions to the cup, records substantially the same that each of the other two writers says of the communion cup; and three-fourths of the circumstances are noticed in his first reference. This fact ought to satisfy any one that Luke does not speak of two cups. The difficulty in this, as in some other cases, arises from the mistaken idea that the evangelists record circumstances in the order of their occurrence. A careful reading of the 22d chapter of Luke, will be sufficient to convince any candid person, that they do not pretend always to give an unbroken account of events in the order in which they occurred. For example; in the 20th verse Luke speaks of "the cup after supper;" but in the next three verses he alludes to the manifesting of the betrayer, which took place while they were eating. Luke's first mention of the cup seems to have been made because the language of Jesus, in speaking of the cup, is similar to that used in reference to the Passover. In reference to the Passover he had said: "I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God;" and of the cup he said: "I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come." Because of this similarity of expression, we understand, Luke makes mention of the cup immediately after his allusion to the Passover. But, having now mentioned the cup, and having omitted saying anything about the bread, he sets in at once to make a record of the bread and wine in their true relation to each other in relation to time; and that his former mention might not mislead any one he is particular in stating that the cup was "after supper." Having thus brought forward his account of the bread and wine, and having passed over the supper, he now speaks of it, or of what took place during the Supper.

Now the ordinances were instituted; "and when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives." Matthew 26: 30, Mark 14: 26. It is altogether reasonable to suppose that the instituting of the ordinances required about two hours and a half; and if so they went out in the middle of the midnight watch,—about half-past 10 o'clock at night. We fix upon this point as being the time when they left the guest chamber; and we feel certain that we are very few minutes out of the way.

A Home Wanted.

We commenced the publication of our paper at Tyrone by chance, so far as we know, at least not from choice on our part. We were engaged in the publication of a secular paper, at the time we matured the idea of issuing the Companion, and were not in a moveable condition; nor had we a better place to go to. Perhaps it was well for us to have been here. There are some advantages at this place which have their fascinations, but there are many objections; and we think the latter overbalance.—Tyrone is a thriving and pleasant town to live in, and we believe is destined to become a place of importance. Facilities for comfort and business are not wanting; but we do not feel at home here, on account of religious associations, and church privileges.—Have also a few other objections to making this place our permanent residence, which are not necessary to mention.

Now our object in writing this notice is this: Brethren at different places, knowing that we were not permanently located here, have manifested some desire, and have offered some inducements to have us take up our abode with them; and in order to do the best for ourselves, and give our friends an equal chance, we have thought proper to announce that we are for sale and are ready to receive bids. We do not claim that it would be any special advantage to any congregation, town, or neighbordood, to have the "Companion" family among them; but if there are any who can conceive of any, we are willing that they shall fix its value. We would not go farther east than Philadelphia, nor further west than Chicago. We must be at the Railroad, and at a full station We shall prefer a town that has a meeting-house of the Brethren, and members in the town and neighborhood. Would expect to make the change between the present time and next October.

We would recommend to brethren to consider the matter all around, and consult one another before making us any proposition, that they may make us no offer that they are not able and quite willing to perform, for in all probability we will accept somebody's proffers, if we should be so fortunate as to receive any.

Our Assistant, brother JOSEPH W. BEER and his family, are rusticating in Armstrong County, Penn'a, among their friends. A few lines from them announce their safe arrival at Pap. Beer's where we know their hearts have often been during the past six months, and where they will be well cared for. Hope they may have a pleasant time, and, when they have had enough of country life, return to their homes a healthier, wealthier,and happier family Expected Visit.

We are glad to learn that our esteemed brother, FREDERICK LOEHR, expects to pay us a visit while upon his way to the Annual Meeting. He purposes spending several months in our State. If successful in his arrangements he will start east immediately after the Northern Indiana District meeting, which convenes on the 28th instant. Brethren who desire German preaching especially should secure a visit from brother Loehr. He also speaks the English language quite readily. An invitation may be given him through us .

We hope others of our western brethren and friends will call to see us on their journey to or from the Annual Meeting. Those who intend doing so will notify us in advance, that we may make appointments for meetings and announce them in time. All who pass over the Pennsylvania railroad from Pittsburg to Harrisburg will come by our town, within forty rods of our house. Don't forget to tell the conductor, after passing Altoona, before he punches your ticket, that you wish to stop off at Tyrone.

The Pious Youth has gone forth upon its March visit, and we think will please its readers, unless they have become too much vexed by its tardiness. The April number is under way and will be out by the 15th of the month at the farthest. Contributors will please send their articles forthwith.

Is it right to teach little children to say Prayers? If not, please give reasons. D. G. HENDRICKS.

Simply to teach children to say prayers is time and labor lost, if nothing worse; but to teach children to pray by inculcating feelings of devotion, reverence, and gratitude to God, is a duty which no parent should neglect. Children are apt to learn by precept; and the best method to teach children to give utterance to their devotions is by your own earnest expressions before God, at the family altar. The Lord's prayer, may be taught as soon as its words can be understood, and no better prayer can possibly be composed. And as the mind expands, they may be taught to comprehend its continually unfolding beauties.

THE RESTORATION OF THE POPE.—A discourse by G. P. Breed Text: "For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased." An eloquent address, giving an elaborate sketch of the speedy downfall of the Pope. Hear a few sentences:

"Well, this coveted, this preordained exaltation of his Holiness whereby he is set up in terms, and his own wild fancy as a God and in the offended, disgusted judgment of a thinking world pilloried as an imbecile, was decreed, and on a day so dark that candles were needed to assist the eyes of the old man, amid a deluge of rain, blinding lightings, crashing thunders that terrified the listening crowd—the decree was read, closing with the ominous words: "If any have the temerity to contradict our definition LET HIM BE ANATHEMA!"

"Mark the order of events: July 15th, war proclaimed by the favorite son of the Church against that power on the continent most cordially detested by his infallibility; September 2d, less than fifty days from the commotion of elements that attended the deification of the Pope, and the opening of the war, Napoleon, the champion of the Papacy, a prisoner in the hands of Victor Emmanuel, and the Pope brushed from his throne as a fly is brushed from the brow of a giant! "For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased!" Published by J. E. GOULD, 923 Chestnut St, Philadelphia.

Notice.

"CRUMBS SWEPT UP" is the suggestive and somewhat peculiar title of a very interesting and readable book, written by T. DeWitt Talmage, of Brooklyn, New York, and published by Evans, Stoddart & Co., 730 Sansom Street, Philadelphia. The author is well known by the public generally as a popular lecturer and preacher. Being a man of the times, his sympathies are altogether with the present, and his views herein expressed show the fearless disregard of all old conventionalisms, and hearty appreciation of the advance of the age. In illustration of this, he is now engaged, with all his heart, in the "Free Church Movement," having so labored as to secure the co-operation of enough pecuniary and working assistance to rear a free tabernacle, capable of seating over three thousand people; and this, accomplished as it was in two years, with a congregation of less than one hundred, in an old church, in the immediate neighborhood of the great Henry Ward Beecher. The articles treated in "Crumbs," are illustrations of the many and various sayings of the present day, with pleasing sketches, all showing their application to a moral. They are written in a spicy and vigorous vein, humorous and pathetic. His articles written on his late trip to Europe, are also included. He has evidently viewed the sights with open eyes, and has a peculiarly happy faculty of word-drawing rarely surpassed; his style is decidedly original, and his many pithy and amusing aphorisms are wonderful. A few extracts will be found in the next issue, which illustrate his style. The price, $2.00, is within the reach of all, the publishers deserve lasting evidence to make it at once popular and cheap. As it is published by subscription, it will not be found at the bookstores, but will be mailed to any address, free of postage, on receipt of the price by the publishers, by whom reliable canvassers, male or female, are wanted to act in the sale. We advise any of our readers, wanting employment, to apply for the agency

GOYMLEYS CORNERS, CANADA W. {
Feb. 21st, A. D. 1871. }

H. R. Holsinger: Dear Friend! I am not personally acquainted with you, yet I will take the privelege to write a few lines to you.

I live in York County, Canada; 24 miles North of Toronto, and belong to the denomination, known in the States, as "River Brethren." Here in Canada, we are called Dunkards: but we call ourselves the "Brethren." There are none of your brethren in Canada, to my knowledge. I was on a visit to the State of Ohio last fall, and, on the 15th of October, was at a large and solemn meeting of your brethren, about three miles from Dayton. It was the largest meeting of the kind I ever saw, (that is the largest number of members) and I rejoiced to see such nice regulations, and good order kept; and to see so many whom I believed, desired to serve the Lord. It seemed to me very solemn, it was the first meeting of your denomination that I ever was at. I did not notice any important difference in the devotional exercises, to ours in Canada, yet I did notice a little difference in breaking of the bread—the minister broke the bread for the sisters: and also in "feet washing,"—they washed feet before supper. Here in Canada we wash them after supper. John 13: 4. "He riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself. After that, he poureth water into a basin, and began to wash the disciples, feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded." I do not recollect of hearing the ministers make any particular remarks, or give explanations on that subject. I understand from the foregoing, that our Savior washed the feet after supper: yet would I not be too firm in my own, always feeling a willingness to be taught. I would therefore like to hear an explanation on that subject.

I remain yours truly,
SAMUEL BAKER.

REPLY:

Dear Friend; The tone of your letter breathes the true spirit of christianity—willing to be taught—willing to be led into truth—willing, to have "the way of God expounded more perfectly." Acts 18: 26. Were this disposition possessed by all who profess the christian name, different views, and different practices would to a great measure cease: warm discussions, debates, and controversies would be far less frequent; love and harmony would more generally prevail. That noble disposition prompted the "Bereans," to "search the scriptures daily whether these things were so." Acts 17: 11. That same disposition actuated our brethren when yet in Germany; for their writings tell us that at first they washed feet after the communion, but by searching the scriptures they were led to see otherwise: and washed after supper but before the communion. and, that aftea an other translation of the New Testament was published and a brother came among them who understood the Greek language, they were led to see still differently, and adopted the order that you saw observed last fall, on the occasion alluded to, which order has been observed by the church at least one hundred and fifty years; and I am aware this very subject has been a point of difference between us, or the two denominations, as far back as memory serves me. I do not, however, make this statement with the view to claim the order orthodox, because of its age; if it has no better ground to stand upon. it will fall.

If I understand aright, you appear to base your argument chiefly on the expression: "He riseth from supper." Let us now reason together in that spirit of meekness and love, which will ever characterize and signalize the children of God. Although John says "he riseth from supper," yet he does not say, or intimate thereby, that the supper had been eaten; indeed, by looking at the matter properly, I think the reverse is quite evident. I am aware that some of your brethren place much stress on the words: "Supper being ended:" and this appears to have been the perplexing passage to our brethren, already alluded to, and which led them to practice as they at first did: but when John Henry Reitz's translation was published, they learned, from the text and foot notes, that, where Luther says "after supper;" King James "Supper being ended," the original signifies: supper being come, ready, or prepared. This view, to my understanding, agrees best with the chapter throughout, for it is evident, they were eating together in the same room, at the same table, and in the same night, where, from which, and in which Jesus arose to wash his disciples' feet; and that too, after the feet were washed.

And again, as Jesus never did, or said any thing without meaning, or signification, fe etwashing, must have a design, or spiritual representation; namely that of cleansing, and in this sense seems more in place before, than after supper; especially if we may look to, and be governed by the usages and customs that had been observed before our Saviors's time, and to which he also alludes in some of his sayings. See Luke 7: 36—44. While Jesus sat at meat in the pharisee's house he commended a certain woman for having washed his feet with tears, whereas the pharisee had given him no water wherewith to wash. From this I draw the conclusion, that, wherever feetwashing was observed as an act of hospitality, it always was observed before meals. Had this not been so, the pharisee might have replied; there is yet time to attend to that duty. Wherever mention is made of its observance as such, throughout the Bible, it always is spoken of as having been attended to before meals: as in the case of Abraham's servant &c. These however were but acts of hospitality, and are only refered to as testimony of the prevailing custom among the ancients.

In Ex. 30: we have an account of a religious washing of hands and feet under the law: and although, its observance does not stand connected with the eating of a meal, it nevertheless, has some bearing on the subject. The priests were to wash their hands and feet. "When (or before) they go into the tabernacle of the congregation." "Or when they come near to the altar to minister, to burn offering made by fire unto the Lord." Herein was shown, that the purification, or cleansing should precede the exercise in holy things.

Now it must be admitted that eating, or partaking of the symbols of the broken body and shed blood of Christ, is one of the most holy and solemn exercises that the children of God can engage in, and therefore, if any ordinance is instituted, by which a cleansing, or purification, is either intended or signified, that ordinance surely ought to be attended to first. Should it be objected however, that it is the supper, and not the communion which has been alluded to; that, in my estimation makes no difference; for the evangelists that record both, give us plainly to understand that there was no room between the supper and communion for feet-washing: "As they were eating &c." Hence that must have been attended to before supper, or, after the communion. And as I presume there is no difference of opinion between us, as regards feet-washing, and the communion, it seemeth to me we ought also to be able to see alike in regard to feet-washing and the supper.

Now from what I have said this is the sum: Jesus rose from a prepared supper, laid aside his garments girded himself, poured water, washed his disciples, feet; took his garments, sat down to the same prepared supper from which he had arisen, and while eating instructs his disciples, as to the necessity and design of feet washing also, reveals the traitor by giving him the sop, who went immediately out: and at the close of that supper, he took bread, gave thanks, brake it, &c.

To show that St. Matthew and St. and Monday buried with Christ by John record the very same supper I will refer you to their testimony. Matthew 26: 21. "And as they did eat he said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me." John 13: 21. "When Jesus had thus said, he was troubled in spirit, and testified, and said, Verily, verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me." By a careful observation of the above passages it is quite plain, first, according to Matthew's testimony, that the traitor was revealed during supper, and before the communion: and second; by John's testimony, that he was revealed during supper, but after feet-washing; and in connection with these facts, considering that there is no intimation of any interval between the supper and communion, all these testimonies favor the idea, if not conclusively prove, that feet-washing took place before supper. May this suffice for the present.

You say there are none of our brethren living in Canada. I am aware that there were some living in that country, forty or fifty years ago, who emigrated thence from the States, and it is not improbable that the seed from which your denomination sprung up, was sown by them, but receiving different training, it grew into a differently shaped tree. Among them was a family by the name of Reichards.

Your in Love.

DANIEL M. HOLSINGER.

Tyrone, Pa.

Western District of Penn'a.

To the delegates and others who contemplate attending the approaching District meeting, Greeting: By the kind permission of the Editor we desire to make a few explanatory remarks in connection with some directions:—First, then, it sometimes happens on such occasions that appointments for preaching are announced in the vicinity of D. M. place, prior to the time of business meeting, some of which are in a measure disappointments. We do not desire such to be the case on the occasion approaching; hence these extended remarks.

We want preaching—as much as can be supplied with a reasonable degree of certainty. Ministers coming by private conveyance, via, Johnstown and Belsana, should be at the later than Friday eve, April 28th, and if some could come a day or two earlier, all the better: such will write to Daniel Brallier, Ebensburg, Belsana Box, in time to publish appointments. Apointments are also contemplated at Manor church. Ministers who will respond, inform Jacob Replogle, at Penn Run, Pa.

Ministers coming by Railroad will be needed at different points between Indiana and Fyock's. Ministers, Delegates, and others, writing to Jacob Fyock, Utah, Pa., will be met at Indiana Station on Friday and Saturday at 1 o'clock Trains. Those coming from the North West can make themselves useful by addressing Peter Beer, at Decker's Point, Pa. Hoping that all concerned will understand and appreciate these remarks, we close in the fond hope that these calls will be responded to; to this end let us pray.

Written by order of the Church.

JOSEPH HOLSOPPLE.

To Brother Myers and Holsinger.

Permit me in behalf of the churches in which you labored whilst among us, to express our most grateful thanks, that under a kind and beneficent providence we enjoyed the pleasure of your society, as well as the benefits of your labor for the advancement of Christ's Kingdom, in this part of our moral vineyard. The only regret we have to express is that your ministrations among us could not have been more extended, as the longer you remained, especially at Parkney's the more interest seems to have been manifested. The seed sown just began to germinate ready to spring forth the green blade, awaiting the refreshing dews of Heaven to give it vitality that in due season we might have the full grain in the ear. But we thank the Lord that the ark of truth is still moving onward. Ten precious souls who have felt a Godly sorrow for sin: were on last Sunday baptism into death. Oh! that all who live without Christ and the hope of eternal life, would lay hold of the plan of redemption, relying upon the atoning efficacy of the blood of Christ properly applied, never doubting the essentialities flowing from it, if it was essential for Christ to suffer and die for us that we through him might have granted repentance unto life, why is it not just as essential that we accept in the most comprehensive sense to which the finite mind can attain, all the demands made upon us as integral parts and parcels of his great plan of redemption which was perfected in him. To him is ascribed the authorship. He had all power in Heaven and earth given him; a name above every name Lord of Lords, King of Kings. Principality and power is the sceptre of his dominion; to detract from which is but to rob the Almighty of the divine attributes confered upon him by the Father, who has so significantly assured us "this is my beloved son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him." We may rob man of peculiar prerogatives; but God never. Dare we have the presumption to resist the legitimate and evangelical fruits of his suffering, death, and resurrection to redeem a lost and undone people from the law of sin and eternal glory, by giving licentious and liberal sway to a subterfuge of immaterialism being carried away and tossed by every wind of doctrine not in harmony with the traditions which we have been taught by word and epistle: but after the tradition of men, heaping unto themselves teachers, having itching ears; making the word of God of none effect by detaching from it the full significance ordained by the word of eternal truth; assuming an illegitimate ambition based upon a mere matter of feeling that does not find its confirmation declared from the word of the living God. Then, my dear brethren, is it not expedient that we be always ready to give an answer with meekness and fear relative to the hope within us, based upon humble submission and true obedience to the divine will, that will carry us safely into the harbor of security; where we may cast our anchor safely moored in that land of pure delight, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more forever. Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ; and may grace divine be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Amen.

P. S. NEWCOMER.

Boonsboro, Md.

Brother Holsinger; The C. F. C. for Feb. 28th, brought us the intelligence that you were on a visit to Maryland. We were glad to see that you did take a furlough and try to recruit a little, for we believe it was constant labor and close confinement that brought you to what you were. And the place you went to was just the place to make you feel comfortable, as I am acquainted with some of the families you named. How pleasant it is to see the names of those whom we know.

THOMASBORO, ILLS.

Dear Brethren:—We are called upon to report to you a sad event which transpired here a few days ago. March 8th, about sun-down, we were startled by a heavy report of lightning, which appeared to frighten the entire vicinity. Little did we imagine that it carried one of our loved brethren into the boundless eternity. Brother Jacob Knapp was returning from Champaigne City, in a wagon, and when within about one mile of home, was struck and instantly killed by a stroke of lightning. He had purchased a wagon load of furniture, and was seated on the top of a bureau, when he was struck. Nothing in the wagon was hurt, save the spliting of two chair posts. Two boys were on the wagon at the time; one was knocked off, but not hurt. One of the horses was knocked down, while the wagon escaped uninjured. Brother Jacob had just moved from Piatt Co. to his new place, in this county (Champaigne) and was not here quite one week before he was killed.

Jacob Knapp was born in Shenandoah County Virginia, June 22nd 1827, and died March 8th 1871, and was consequently 43 years, 8 months, and 16 days old. He was a loved and consistent member of the church, being respected by all who knew him. He leaves a wife and a large family of children to mourn their loss. Funeral services by brother John Wine, of Piatt Co., from Matthew 24: 44.

JOHN H. MOORE.

Visitor, please copy.

Brother Henry:—Please publish in the Companion that I consulted the President of the Cumberland Valley Rail Road, concerning half-fare privileges going to and from the Annual Meeting, over said road. He granted that those passing over the road to meeting will be allowed a free return. Now I want the ministering brethren of such congregations that are likely to pass over said railroad, to ascertain as near as they can how many from their branch are likely to pass over said road, and send the number to me by the 30th of April, so that I can get the necessary arrangements made. The president requested me to see him again on the subject in due time, for this purpose.

Correction.

Brother Henry:—I should have said that those coming to the Missouri District Meeting on the H. and St. Jo R. R., should stop off at Hamilton, notifying me at Mirabile. The above was omitted either by me or the printer. C. C. ROOT.

Brother Holsinger: Please announce that our address will be hereafter Marion, Douglas County, Kansas, instead of Centropolis. Marion Postoffice is a new office, a short mile from our residence, and Centroplis about 4½ distant. Send my C. F. C. to Marion:

I desire an explanation of Luke 18: 16-26. A. JACOBS.

Brother H.: I have just returned home from a mission to a place where the brethren had never preached before; and where we have been quite misrepresented. We hope by this time the citizens of Wabash county, Ills., know more about the "Dunkards" than heretofore. I also found a subscriber for the C. F. C, for which find the money enclosed.

MICHEAL FORNEY.

Parkersburg, Ills.

Brother Holsinger; I have delayed sending you the money for the C. F. C., until the present, but I hope you will forgive me, as I have obtained one new subscriber, and now enclose you the money for both. Hope this will make up for the delay.

WM. C. HIPES.

Lime Spring, Iowa.

Yes, that makes all right, and we commend your example to about one thousand others on our list, who are in arrears. Brethren and sisters who owe us for subscription, send us a new subscriber with the cash for your own and his, and we will not enter a word of complaint against you.

The Great Remedy.

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever. From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and sells readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. To Nebraska, California, and Kansas, and the B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The "Burlington Route," as called, lies right in the path of the Star of Empire. It runs almost immediately in the center of the great westward movement of emigration. Crossing Illinois and Iowa, it strikes the Missouri river at three points.

These three points are the gateways into three great sections of the trans-Missouri region.

The Northern gate is Omaha, where the great Pacific road will take you to the land of gold and grapes, sunny mountains, and perpetual summer.

The middle gate is Plattsmouth, which opens upon the south half of Nebraska, south of the Platte river, a region unsurpassed on the continent for agriculture and grazing. Just here are the B. & M. Railroad lands, concerning which Geo. S. Harris, the land officer at Burlington, Iowa, can give you all information, and in the heart of them is Lincoln, the State Capital and present terminus of the road.

The Southern gate leads to Kansas, by connections with the St. Joe Road at Hamburg running direct to St. Joe and Kansas City

The trains of the Burlington run smoothlyq and safely, and make all connections. It runs the best of coaches, Pullman Palace and Pullman dining cars, and should you take the journey for the journey's sake alone, you will be repaid; or take it to find a home or a farm, and you cannot find either better than among the B. & M. lands, where you can buy on ten years' credit, and at a low price.

THE

Christian Family Companion

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

A Fragment.

TO A SISTER ON THE BED OF AFFLICTION.

BY C. H, BALSBAUGH.

"These things saith the First and the Last, which was dead, and is alive; I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty—but thou art rich." "Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer. Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." The text of your life is suffering and trial. The experience of your sickroom is an unwritten avangel, known and read by men and angels. In the "loss of all things" "then rich." The Prince of sufferers has left on record a prayer which is designed for all who have fellowship with him in his sufferings: "Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me: nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt." The hand of the Lord is heavy upon you, but he is only true to his word spoken many centuries ago: "as many as I love, I rebuke and chasten." When we contemplate the love of Christ we may well apply to him the appellation of the Prophet—"WONDERFUL." You love those whose name and blood you bear, and whose history you partly constitute, and your heart breaks with love when you think of the dear little household treasures which you have laid in the grave; but our love, when deepest and most glowing, is as a taper in the glare of the midday sun, when compared with the love of Jehovah-Jesus. In Romans 5: 6—8, we have this stupendous wonder set forth in terms of surpassing power and comfort. "Christ died for the ungodly." "Scarcely for a righteous man will one die." "Peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die." But now comes the wonder of wonders: "God commendeth His love to us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Is it a wonder that we are to forsake all, and endure all, for such a Savior? "We love Him, because He first loved us." Is it a wonder that true christians are so knit together that they are willing to die for each other? When the love of God is shed abroad in their hearts, they can no more help loving Christ and His saints with all the heart, than the sun can help shining. The sun shines because he is full of light, and the believer devotes himself to God and His cause and His people, because he is full of love. Is not Christ dearer to you than the dearest friend on earth; and is not His love sweeter to you than all the honey of sense concentrated into a single drop? Are not those moments brightest and happiest when you feel that Jesus is near? And are you not saddest and most heart-broken when the Blessed Savior seems to hide His face and withhold His love? This, my beloved, attests that your heart is wedded to the Bridegroom of the elect, and that you are His in the dear, sweet bonds of an everlasting covenant. If you feel yourself so vile and unworthy that you can hardly believe that you are one of Christ's, He will not love you less because of your poor opinion of yourself; only so that you have a good opinion of Him Every saint is filled with wonder that Jesus can love such a poor sinner. Hope on, dearly beloved, trust on, pray on, weep on, fight on, the love that bled and died when you were yet in sin and enmity, will never, never forsake you. Rom. 5: 9, 10. Give yourself wholly to Jesus, and He will give Himself wholly to you.

A well regulated home is more attractive than any other place on earth; although people do sometimes want to get away from home for a short time. The causes making home attractive are numerous, and are best understood by those who have no place they can call home; or those who are under the necessity of being absent when not in good health, in need of the comforts and advantages of home, among stangers without the sympathy or care of home friends. The crying, sobbing child says, take me home; the young man in sickness or trouble says I would like to be at home; the middle-aged strive to make home attractive and pleasant and the old cling to their homes when all the objects of life have ceased to be attractive. An humble cottage with a competency among friends is better than a place among strangers. A home where we can feel that we have a right to enjoy life without asking leave of any one; and a claim upon the sympathies and assistance of those who surround us

"She Has Outlived Her Usefulness."

Not long since, a man in middle life came to our door asking for "the minister." When informed that he was out of town, he seemed disappointed and anxious. On being questioned as to his business, he replied: "I have lost my mother; and as this place used to be her home, and as my father lies here, we have come to lay her beside him."

My heart rose in sympathy, and I said. "You have met with a great loss."

"Well, yes," he replied, with hesitancy, "a mother is a great loss in general; but our mother had outlived her usefulness. She was in her second childhood, and her mind had grown as weak as her body, so that she was no comfort to herself, and was a burden to everbody. There were seven of us, sons and daughters; and we agreed to keep her among us a year about. But I have had more than my share of her; for she was too feeble to be moved when my time was out, and that was more than three months before her death. But then she was a good mother in her day, and toiled very hard to bring us up."

Without looking at the face of the heartless man, I directed him to the house of a neighboring pastor, and returned to my nursery. I gazed on the merry little faces which smiled or grew sad in imitation of mine,—those little ones to whose ear no word in our language is half so sweet as "mother,"—and I wondered if that day could ever come when they would say of me. "She has outlived her usefulness—she is no comfort to herself, and a burden to everybody else!" And I hope that before such a day should dawn, I might be taken to my rest. God forbid that I should outlive the love of my children! Rather let me die while my heart is a part of theirs, that my grave may be watered with their tears, and my love linked with their hopes of Heaven.

When the bell tolled for the mother's burial, I went to the sanctuary to pay my only token of respect to the aged stranger; for I felt that I could give her memory a tear, even though her own children had none to shed.

"She was a good mother in her day, and toiled hard to bring us all up—she was no comfort to herself, and a burden to everybody else!" These cruel, heartless words rung in my ears as I saw the coffin borne up the aisle. The bell tolled long and loud, until its iron tongue had chronicled the years of the toil-worn mother. One—two—three—four—five. How clearly and almost merrily each stroke told of her once peaceful slumber in her mother's bosom, and of her seat at nightfall on her weary father's knee. Six—seven—eight—nine—ten—rang out the tale of her sports upon the greensward, in the meadow and beside the brook. Eleven—twelve—thirteen—fourteen—fifteen—spoke more gravely of school-days, and little household joys and cares. Sixteen—seventeen—eighteen—sounded out the enraptured visions of maidenhood and the dream of early love. Nineteen—brought before us the happy bride. Twenty—spoke of the young mother, whose heart was full to bursting with the new, strong love which God had awakened in her bosom. And then stroke after stroke told of her early womanhood—of the loves, and cares, and hopes, and fears, and toils, through which she passed during those long years, till fifty rang out harsh and loud. From that to sixty, each stroke told of the warm-hearted mother and grandmother, living over again her joys and sorrows in those of her children and children's children.

Every family of all the group wanted grandmother then; and the only strife was who should secure the prize. But, hark, the bell tolls on! Seventy—seventy-one—two—three—four. She begins to grow feeble, requires some care, is not always perfectly patient or satisfied; she goes from one child's house to another, so that no place seems like home. She murmurs in plaintive tones, that after all her toil and weariness, it is hard she cannot be allowed a home to die in; that she must be sent, rather than invited, from house to house. Eighty—eighty-one—two—three—four. Ah! she is a second child—now "She has outlived her usefulness, she has now ceased to be a comfort to herself or anybody"—that is, she has ceased to be profitable to her earth-craving and money-grasping children.

Now sounds out, reverberating through our lovely forest, and echoing back from our "hill of the dead," eighty-nine! There she lies now in the coffin, cold and still; she makes no trouble now, demands no love, no soft words, no tender little offices. A look of patient endurance—we fancied, also, an expression of grief for unrequited love,—sat on her marble features. Her children were there, clad in weeds of woe, and in irony we remembered the strong man's words, "She was a good mother in her day."

When the bell ceased tolling, the strange minister rose in the pulpit. His form was very erect, and his voice strong; but his hair was silvery white. He read several passages of Scripture expressive of God's compassion to feeble man, and especially of his tenderness when gray hairs are on him and his strength faileth. He then made some touching remarks on human frailty, and of dependence on God, urging all present to make their peace with their Master while in health, that they might claim his promises when heart and flesh failed them. "Then," he said, "the eternal God shall be thy refuge, and beneath thee shall be the everlasting arms." Leaning over the desk, and gazing intently on the coffined form before him, he then said, reverently: "From a little child I have honored the aged; but never till gray hairs covered my own head, did I know truly how much love and sympathy this class have a right to demand of their fellow creatures. Now I feel it. Our mother," he added, most tenderly, "who now lies in death before us, was a stranger to me, as are all of these, her descendants. All I know of her is what her son has told me to day,—that she was brought to this town from afar, sixty-nine years ago, a happy bride—that here she has passed most of her life, toiling as only mothers ever have strength to toil, until she has reared a large family of sons and daughters—that she left her home here, clad in the weeds of widowhood, to dwell among her children—till health and strength left her. God forbid that conscience should accuse any of you of ingratitude or murmuring on account of the care she has been to you of late. When you go back to your homes, be careful of your example before your own children; for the fruit of your own doing you will surely reap from them when you yourselves totter on the brink of the grave. I entreat you as a friend, as one who has himself entered the evening of life, that you may never say in the presence of your families nor of Heaven: "Our mother had outlived her usefulness—she was a burden to us." Never, never!—a mother can never live so long as that! No; when she can no longer labor for her children, nor yet care for herself, she can fall like a precious weight on their bosoms, and call forth by her helplessness all the noble, generous feelings of their hearts.

Adieu, then, poor toil-worn mother, there are no more days of pain for thee. Undying vigor and everlasting usefulness are thy inheritance.

The Broken Vow.

Many young people are in the habit of making promises very freely, which they often find it very hard to keep. Sometimes even they do not try, but dismiss the matter very lightly from their minds. Such a custom soon undermines the character for truthfulness. One who has little regard for his word in any other respect. The Lord has pronounced his severe judgments against those who are untruthful. Especially does he call those to a strict account who make promises to him which they do not perform. "It is better that thou shouldst not vow than to vow and not pay."

A poor lad went to the city to seek his fortune, and was so successful his heart was full of gratitude to God for his kindness to him. So he promised, on his knees, to give a tenth of all his gains to the Lord. This he did cheerfully until his title amounted to over two thousand dollars a year. That seemed like a very great sum to give away, so he thought perhaps he need not be quite so particular. But the Lord sent a warning to him in the shape of a loss of seventy thousand dollars.

As he mourned over his lost ship he renewed his promises to God, and began again his benevolent contributions. For some time he persevered, but worldly associates at last won him away from the right path. His charities were once more stopped, and with blow after blow the Lord swept away his immense fortune, until he became almost as poor as when, an errand boy, he entered the city. While he scattered his goods they rapidly increased, but when he came to withholding more than was meet, it tended just as rapidly to poverty.

Be very cautious how you promise, but when your word has been once given, fulfil your promise, even if it is a disadvantage to yourself.—Presbyterian.

Christian Duty.

"Is any sick among you, let him call for the Elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord. And the prayer of faith shall save the sick.

This language is addressed to you and to me for it was written to the general church, and not to one particular branch of it. We profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly lamb of God, and we believe that all the holy apostles wrote by inspiration; then why not obey their commands? This is a command directly addressed to us by the apostle James. Yet as a general thing it is disregarded; we make light of it by not obeying it. Brethren let us be careful how we treat so important a subject as this. How many of us live up to this command? When we get sick do we call for the elders of the church? Nay verily, but in lieu thereof we call for the pill bags first, and put off calling for the elders of the church as long as there is any hope in the pill-bag. When it fails and we see and feel that a change is near at hand, then some of us as a last resort when life is nearly gone, avail ourselves of the privilege of calling for the elders of the church. James did not say is any going to die; but is any sick." Therefore I claim we ought not to wait till we think we are going to die before we obey this commandment. "Seek [illegible] the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all else shall be added unto you."

Now what is the righteousness of God, if it is not to obey his holy commandment. This certainly is an important part of that righteousness.—The Savior says on one occasion: "He that says he loveth me and keepeth not my commandments, is a liar and the truth is not in him." Therefore brethren let us be careful and not pass over these things so lightly. We profess to be a people that obey all the commandments, yet I think herein we often fail. We do not first seek the righteousness of God, but we first seek the righteousness of men, or the virtue contained in other creatures.

However, I claim that when a command is once violated or neglected to be attended to at the proper time, we can afterwards make no retribution for that particular time. Understand me, we are not to put off till to-morrow what should be done to-day. For example, if we put off coming to Christ till to-morrow, and die to-night, we die out of Christ, and therefore have no promise of eternal life. This is what I mean by not obeying a commandment at the proper time. We put off calling for the elders of the church until every other means is exhausted and life is just about gone. Then, as a last resort, some feel like trying to obey this commandment, and a great many let it run on and never have it attended to. Instead of seeking the righteousness of God, in obeying him, they seek the riches, yes and may I not say the foolishness of this world. The Savior says on a certain occasion "the wisdom of this world is foolishness in the sight of God." However, they seek the perishable things of this world instead of seeking the pearl of great price, they strive to add house to house and farm to farm, without so much as once thinking of the words of the Savior: "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee."

I think our ministers are not doing their duty here, by neglecting to teach the people more in reference to this matter. I believe I have ever heard but one sermon preached on this subject. There are numbers of our brethren that do not know that such a thing is practiced at all by the Brethren.

Now I leave the subject, which I have written has been written out of pure love. I love the cause of my master, therefore I try to defend it.

The Faith Once Delivered to the Saints.

The faith is the one faith which precedes the one hope of our calling. And there is but one faith and one hope for the children of God and always has been but the one self same faith and hope ever since God promised that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. Mother Eve believed it and hoped for it, hence when Cain was born, she said: "I have gotten a man from the Lord. She thought the promise was now fulfilled; but alas for her vain hope, she was disappointed; her first born was a murderer, and her second a martyr. It is written the creature was made subject to vanity, yet not willingly, but by reason of him who subjects the same in hope.

The faith of the above heading is nothing more nor less than to believe God tells the truth. Noah believed God when he told of the destruction of the world which then was by water, and prepared him an Ark according to directions, for the saving of his house. And about four hundred and twenty nine years after the flood, God called Abraham to get out of his country and his kindred, unto a land that I will show thee. Abram believed God and left the land of the Chaldles and came into the land of Canaan, and there the Lord said to him: "Lift up thine eyes and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward, for all the land, which thou seest to thee will I give it and to thy seed forever, for I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth, so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Arise walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee. Now the promise was made to Abram and his son Isaac, and his seed after him. But now God requires Abraham to take his son Isaac and sacrifice him upon the altar; this very son unto whom the covenant was made. But Abraham staggered not at the promise of God, believing that God was able to raise him from the dead, from whence also he received him in a figure of the resurrection, at the coming of Christ, for the promise was made to Abraham while in uncircumcision that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; for this promise that he should be heir of the world was not to Abraham, or his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith, for if they which are of the law, be the heirs faith is made void and the promise made of none effect; but the promise is of faith, that it might be by grace, or favor; to the end, the promise might be sure to all the seed which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of all the faithful. For says the Apostle: "if ye be in Christ, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." What promise? The promise we are just writing about, which God made to Abraham and his seed which the Apostle says was Christ. And we too, if we be in Christ, for it is evident that the promise was not fulfilled in Abraham's time, nor in the time Christ was on earth, for Stephen, just before he was stoned to death, told the Jews of the promise God made to Abraham, that he should be heir of the world, and then declares that he did not get so much as to set the sole of his foot on. Then it remains yet to be fulfilled; for God that cannot lie hath promised it; but not until after the resurrection, then will Abraham with his heirs, according to the faith, enjoy the city he looked for, which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God, which undoubtedly is the Holy City, New Jerusalem, which John saw coming down from God out of Heaven.

The Apostle Paul also says the scriptures foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abram and tells us just what that Gospel was, that had been preached to Abraham, saying: "in thee shall all nations be blessed."

Now Abraham believed the Gospel which God preached to him, it was counted to him for righteousness. Now if we desire to obtain the righteousness through faith, as Abraham did, we must believe in the promises made to him and his seed, Christ, in order to have the faith of Abraham. And having that faith we have hope in God; that hope too that maketh not ashamed, having God for its author, it is both sure and steadfast. This was the hope that the apostle Paul suffered persecution for. Hear him in his appeal to King Agrippa: "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers, unto which promise our twelve tribes instantly serving God, day and night hope to come, for which hope" sake King Agrippa I am accused of the Jews. And for the hope of Israel, which was the resurrection, Paul was bound with chains. He farther says: "having therefore obtained help of God I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come, that Christ should suffer and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead." The Bible readers will not wonder that Paul contended so earnestly for the resurrection of the dead, while all the precious promises of the Gospel are to be fulfilled after the resurection. Here in this life, we are to suffer as Christ did, and then die (if it be ours to die) and after the resurrection enjoy the glorious promises. The Apostle Paul plainly tell us that if in this life only we have hope in Christ we are of all men most miserable. For here we only have the earnestness of the promised possession, or as Peter calls it, a lively hope, God having given us the assurance of it in that he raised Christ from the dead. Hence the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth with patience for the manifestation of the sons of God, by, or through the resurection from the dead; for Christ says, "they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

I will conclude by saying with the Apostle, "let us examine ourselves and see whether we be in the faith, and whether we are contending as earnestly for it as we should, for we are told that "in the latter times some shall depart from the faith."

Why is It?

Why does the world with its popular religion condemn the Brethren? Is it because they are meek and humble followers of our Savior? Is it because it is impossible for them to see as we see? Or is it because "the god of this world has blinded their eyes," and the lust of the eyes, the lust of the flesh and the pride of life is so suited and grounded in their hearts that they will not see with their eyes nor hear with their ears. This must surely be the reason. It seems strange that the people of God are neglected by the world because they obey God in keeping his commandments, and walking in his statutes, and too, when they are always ready "to give a reason of the hope that is in them."

Why is it Brethren that the world condemns us? Why is it that they say we are wrong? Because we do not follow the world in its fashions. Because we do not climb the highest pitch of fame and receive from man honor. Oh, yes; here is the great trouble. Here is the stumbling stone, the rock of offense. And whosoever shall fall upon this stone shall be broken; and upon whom it shall fall, it will grind to powder.

There are many reasons why the religion of to-day rejects and condemns the Brethren, and not one of them on account of disobedience. Then is it not strange that we should be accused of not doing right? We walk too humbly! We condescend to men of too low estate! We profess to imitate Christ in the principle of justice and right. The Brethren profess to know something about the scriptures. They have been at Bethlehem, and have seen the Babe in a manger, wrapt in swaddling bands. And the servant is not above his Lord. All we know we have learned from Christ, and we believe his life and example is worthy of imitation. But this is why the world rejected Christ. Because he did not come as the world expected. Because he did not do as the world did. Because he did not speak as the world spake. And if Christ was rejected and persecuted, so it will be with his people; for "if they do these things in the green tree, what will they do in the dry?"

Then my Brethren, it is not strange that professed ministers and Bible readers should reject the commandments of our Lord, and reject those who follow him.

If obedience is right it cannot be wrong. And if disobedience is right what is it that is wrong. We have not so learned Christ. We do not take disobedience for obedience. Why should the world be divided when we all have the same book, the same rule and the same law. Probably there is some dear idol that cannot be given up; some pleasure of the world that hangs close to the heart, that we feel loth to part with; perhaps confidence is lacking. If any of these things should hinder our union with Christ, there cannot be a union until we give them up.

O let us take the word of God, and this alone and we will be on the safe side, for if God be for us who can be against us? Let the world speak about us what they may, and if they see fit to condemn us, because we feel it our duty to obey God rather than man, this will not make us any the worse. SAMUEL C. BASHOR.

The River of Life.

The doctrine of a Millenium, aside from the various opinions of its character, could not be sustained if we had not the twentieth chapter of the Revelations. The Old Testament prophets are all silent about it. Even Daniel whose vision extended to the time of the end, says nothing about it. Though several of them speak of the waters of life. David says, "There is a river, the stream whereof shall make glad the city of God." Ps 46. 4. Joel 3: 18. says, "and a fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord, and shall water the valley of Shittim."—But Ezekiel is more explicit; he commenced the 47th chapter by telling how the water issued out of the house which he saw in his vision, and then farther relates how he saw the waters increase until the stream became a great river that could not be passed over. He farther relates about the fish, of which there shall be a very great multitude. He also tells us about the fishers, and about the trees along the river. The river and the trees are coincident with those which John saw. Rev. 22: 12.

Now it is quite clear to me that this is that water of which the Savior spake to the Samaritan women, saying, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." John 4: 14. And then; "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, if any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." John 7: 37, 38. And this is that stream which commenced to flow by the preaching of John the Baptist, which stream became larger and larger until the day of Pentecost, when it became a great river, that no man could pass over. But the men who saw the wonders, and heard the words of Peter, were made to inquire "Men and brethren, what must we do?" After being told what to do; "they that gladly received his word, were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." This was a large stream, "a river that could not be passed over." The fishers were the apostles; and the fish, such as they caught; in accordance to what Christ said to those two brethren, Simon and Andrew, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." "But," says the objector, "the stream which Ezekiel saw, is not identical to that which John saw;" since the latter proceeded out of the throne of God and of the Lamb; while the former proceeded out of the house.—But this difference is owing to the stand-point from which the stream is viewed. Ezekiel saw it from beyond the Babylonish captivity; and the house from which he saw the waters issue, was the house of Judah and Israel. He saw from afar in a vision how and where the stream began to flow. But John saw the stream after it had been flowing sometime, already when it proceeded from the throne of God and of the Lamb, as it now does. "The Spirit and the Bride say, come. And let him that heareth say, come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Now if this river is only to commence flowing with the Millenium, as some of your Literalists would have it, we are at a great loss to obey this Scripture. But by their literal explanations, they only expose their spiritual blindness. For now the river is flowing, and we are commanded to take of the waters of life freely. If this commandment would be more generally obeyed, there would not be so much grappling in the dark. JAS. Y. HECKLER.

A Duty not Neglected.

A few weeks since Dr. M——— pastor of the Baptist Church, in one of the thriving cities of New Jersey, received the following note:

"Dear Doctor, you will greatly oblige one of your parishioners if, at an early date, you would preach on Ecclesiastes iii, last clause of the 4th verse.—A time for dancing."

On the following Sabbath evening the Doctor created quite a sensation in his congregation by reading the note, and adding:

"When I have become fully satisfied that the important duty of dancing is neglected in my congregation, most assuredly I will give all needed admonition on the subject."

Unspotted from the World.

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." James 16 : 27.

Dear brethren and sisters; it is not for popularity that I attempt to pen a few lines, but if I know my poor heart, it is to do some little good if possible. In reading the Holy Scriptures, this beautiful Lord's day morning, the latter clause of the above Scripture penned by the beloved Apostle James, bore with considerable weight upon my mind, and by the help of God I will try and point out some of the worldly spots.

The Apostles of our Lord and Savior, while they were in this sinful world, preaching the Gospel of Christ, pointed out in unmistakable language a great many "spots," that the follower of the "meek and lowly one" must shun. Paul in his letter to the Ephesian brethren 5 : 3, 5, says: "but fornication and all uncleanness or covetousness, let it not once be named among you as becometh saints, neither filthiness nor foolish talking, nor jesting which are not convenient, but rather giving of thanks. For this ye know that no whoremonger nor unclean person, nor covetous, man, who is an idolater hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God." And in Revelations 22 : 15 we find some wordly spots mentioned, and among them that is not enumerated in the above, is: "whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." This I believe includes all those that love to circulate false reports about their friends or neighbors; as well as novel writers, and novel readers — Dear reader, if your delight is in reading such poisonous literature, let me say to you, as one that desires the welfare of your soul: Oh stop and consider your well being before it is too late—before the deadly poison penetrates to, and fastens on your inmost soul, with the iron grasp of the Father of liars, the devil." I know that I have some dear friends whose eyes will see and read these imperfect lines, if death does not intervene, and I feel like saying to them, cast off such worldly spots, repent of your sins, believe on the "only begotten," and become obedient to the mandates of heaven, and no doubt, if that form of doctrine is obeyed from the heart, your delight will be in the law of the Lord, instead of in the devil's choicest literature. Remember that with these worldly spots you will have to take your abode with the "Father of lies," with all that is filthy, wicked, and abominable in the sight of the great "I AM."

Dear brethren and sisters, we can not be too careful in selecting reading matter for our children. The child only knows what it is taught, and impressions are easier made, and more lasting too, than they are at a riper age; hence the necessity of imparting good thoughts, and right views at an early age. "As the twig is bent the tree is inclined to grow."

"Whosoever loveth and maketh a lie," is indeed a black worldly spot, covering, I fear, a large portion of the human family; but it has a twin sister—intemperance? Yes that is its name. There are a great many things we can be intemperate in, and that to a very sinful extent; but time and space forbid me noticing but one—the intemperate use of spiritous liquors. I feel at a loss for language to express myself, knowing that there has been so much spoken and written against the savages of this soul destroying tyrant, and to all human appearance so little heeded, but believing as I do that it is the bounden duty of every one that is trying to obey the will of high heaven, to raise his voice against drunkenness.

It is a fact that will not be disputed by any sane mind, that hundreds are filling a drunkards grave every year, and must go to a drunkards hell, for the Bible says in substance that a drunkard shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven. Paul to Ephesians 5 : 6, 18, says: "be not drunk with wine wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit." If these lines should be read by any one addicted to strong drink, Oh! let me exhort you to pause one moment, and take a calm survey around you, can you not see the danger you are in? The brittle thread of life may snap at any moment, and you sink down to irretrievable woe; just think of the misery and crime entailed on the human family, by King Alcohol, to say nothing of the immense amount expended in its use, that might go far toward spreading the Gospel and relieving the poor and suffering of our land. Intoxicating drink will degrade, debase, and damn everything that is excellent, virtuous, and noble in man or woman. Oh brethren! would it not be a shame if this monster spot should draw its hideous form over some that profess to keep the commandments of him who "spoke as never man spoke." If there are any such, I feel like saying to them, in the language of Paul: "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils." 1 Cor. 10 : 21.— We must make choice; there is no middle ground; we cannot serve God and mammon. You that have stain d your souls with this degrading "spot," fall down at your Savior's feet, and plead for mercy, before it is too late to obtain mercy. Oh bring not the accursed thing into the church of the living God, but let it stay where it belongs; with all Satans engines of destruction—the dance, circus, theater, pic-nic, fairs, fashions, and all the spots and blemishes mentioned by the apostles. Yes, let them all go to destruction together. The Christian needs not their company; he will not keep such company if he is sincere and knows his duty to God and his fellow man. We can persuade men and women to forsake their sinful ways without mixing ourselves in with the follies and vices of this world. Brethren, "as strangers and pilgrims, let us abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul," and heed the kind admonition of the beloved Apostle Paul: 2 Cor. 6: 17: "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye seperate, saith the Lord and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you."

A young lady once observed: "When I go to the theatre, I am very careless of my dress, as the audience are too attentive to the play to observe my wardrobe; but when I go to church I am very particular in my outward appearance, as most people go there to see how their neighbors dress and deport themselves."

All things work for the best with those who fear the Lord and keep his commandments.

The Narrow Way.

The straight and narrow way as delineated in the divine scriptures, is that in which the children of God are traveling to the heavenly land: it is the way and the only way, that Christ came into the world to establish, for all them to walk in that would become his disciples here, and heirs of an inheritance at his right hand in the upper world. That it is the only way that terminates in endless happiness above, is sufficiently demonstrated in the word of God; and he who attempts to make his way to heaven, exclusive of the way that Christ has appointed, will be sadly disappointed in a coming day. It is a straight and narrow way; and consequently is found but by a very few; yea, a great many that profess to know the way, and to be traveling therein, are instead, traveling the broad road which will finally lead them in to utter ruin and wretchedness. Christ declared in the most emphatic language, that he is the way, and that besides him there is no other, whereby man can be saved: neither can any man come unto the Father, but by him. And to follow him in the way which he has revealed unto us, it is absolutely neccessary to obey him in all things whatsoever he has commanded us to do. This is the only way in which we can follow Christ acceptably, and be adopted into the family of God: and to pursue any other course, would be treading the downward and that terminates in eternal shame. "I am," says Christ, "the way and the truth; and the life," John 14: 6: and to follow him is the way to heaven and happiness. It is a straight and narrow way; and is only found by a small number of those that profess to know the way; and to be doers of the will of God; as he says to his disciples, "strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." The chief hindrance to them in finding of the way, is, their unwillingness to deny their selfish principle, which is altogether repugnant to the word of God, and subversive of the plan of salvation, on the part of those in whom it reigns: and it is explicitly declared, that, except a man deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Christ, he cannot be his disciple An unwillingness to deny one's self of the things that are antagonistic to the plan of salvation, is a glaring obstruction in the way of many, in finding the true and established way that Christ has appointed unto them to be saved. "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." This is an established truth: man may pursue whatever course he will in life; and adopt whatever system of religion he will, yet as long as he declines accepting the offers of salvation upon the terms promised in the word of God, he cannot walk in the strait and narrow road that leads to endless life beyond the present scene. Man cannot realize the promise of salvation by following the way that is most agreeable and consistent to the inclination of his own will, regardless of its harmony with the word of God. This would be pursuing a most dangerous and melancholy course with regard to man's eternal redemption. The promise of salvation can only be realized by strictly obeying the requisitions of the word of God; and in guiding our feet in the strait and narrow way, which Christ himself constitutes. "He that will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." This is what Christ demands of every seeker of salvation that would become his disciple in truth, and an heir of heaven with all the saints of God. Failing to observe this essential duty, is invalidating everything that pertains to the plans of human redemption on the part of man; and involves an exposure to future punishment. It is truly lamentable, when we consider how few there are that find the same way which Christ has established, compared with the number that profess to know the way and to be walking therein.

It is an opinion almost universally admitted, nowadays, that man has the privilege of following any way he will, in order to be saved if only he makes a profession of religion. Groundless as this opinion is, it has gained the credence of a vast majority of the christian professors at the present age. There is not an inch of ground in the word of God to support it, neither can it stand the solemn test in a final judgment day; for Christ has said, "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. It is true that man is a free agent, and is endued with the capacity for doing good or evil, and has the privilege of following which ever way he will in order to be saved, yet the word of God is unchangeable, and demands strict obedience to the same in all things, in order to its fulfilment, regardless of the agency of man. Salvation does not depend upon the religion a man pursues and adopts; but it depends upon a judicious observance of all the things that the word of God enjoins upon us. Man may pursue whatever course he will with regard to his eternal redemption; yet, if his profession of religion be not consonant with the will of God as revealed in the divine scriptures, his pretentions to religion will prove utterly vain in a coming day. Hence it is evident that man cannot secure his eternal redemption, by following the way that is most consistent with his natural inclinations, not regarding whether it be in agreement with the word of God or not. Salvation is only promised conditionally: and that by renouncing everything that is contrary to the word of God, and by submissively complying with every ordinance and precept imposed upon us in the house of God. By thus observing the requisitions of the gospel of Christ as laid down in the sacred volume, we can safely claim the promise of obtaining a blessed home at God's right hand in the future world. They who follow Christ in his footsteps, and guide their feet in the straight and narrow road alone can claim the promise of salvation in a coming day; and not the half-way profession, and those who make light of the word of God, by observing only a part of the things which it demands of the followers of Christ; for the observance of only a part of the arrangements of the divine economy, would evidently be approaching a species of mockery at the word of God; instead of fulfiling its requirements as laid down in the scriptures. For the holy scriptures were delivered unto us for our counsel and instruction in the divine life; and to annul a single part of them, would be invalidating the entire scheme of redemption on the part of man. It is a reckless procedure, in divine life to attempt a fulfilment of the gospel of Christ, by observing only a part of the things which it imposes upon us for our eternal welfare. The divine scriptures enjoin no more upon us than what the Author of them designed; and it is the will of God that we obey him in everything they demand at our hands; and it is the only way that we can guide our feet in the strait and narrow path which Christ deliniated for us to walk in; in order to become the child of God, and heirs of an inheritance in the realms above. There is but one system of religion that will ever guide us to endless life and happiness, and meet the divine approbation of God in a coming day; and that is the religion which the holy scriptures unfold to our minds, and teach us to follow and practice while here on earth, in order to share a home with all the children of God at his right hand in the heavenly state: It is not the popular religion of the world; but it is the religion which all the saints of God that ever passed through the world observed and practiced, and it is the pursuance of that alone that will prove beneficial on our part, in a final day of reckoning; it is that which guides us in the narrow way that leads to endless joy and blessedness beyond this scene of mortality. It does not consist in observing only a part of the things that the gospel of Christ enjoins upon us, but it consists in carrying out the principles of the gospel of salvation, as they are laid down in the word of God. By thus judiciously observing the things that Christ commanded us, we can guide our feet in the paths which will finally terminate in eternal life and salvation in the mansions above. It is the will of our Father in heaven that we should obey him in all things; and observe with gladness of heart his sacred ordinances and commandments, as they are delivered unto us. Considering that it is for our own individual welfare and happiness in the future world, to prosecute the religion of christianity as it is revealed in the divine scriptures, this is all and the best that we can do with regard to our eternal interest. Man cannot change the word of God, so as to be more congenial to his natural inclination, but we can subvert his own eternal redemption by disobeying the word of God. It is evidently manifesting a principle of mockery and deception, to attempt a prosecution of the Christian rules without executing all the divine ordinances and precepts contained in the house of God. Yet multitudes are relying upon what the word of God apparently condemns, for their soul's eternal salvation. The narrow road which alone leads to heaven and happiness is altogether contrary to the natural inclinations of the human will, for which reason it is not found by so many that profess to know the way, but are instead wandering out of the way and pursuing a course that will eventually terminate in utter darkness. It is not a wide gate nor broad way that leads to heaven, as that which leads to endless woe, but it is a narrow road and but few there be that find it. Were it a broad road that leads to heaven, there would be no necessity of any at all, for all would go there, and if all people were to dwell together in the kingdom of heaven in the future world, heaven could be no better place than the present state. Then as we are thus favored with the word of God for our guide and counsel in the right way, we ought to hail with pleasure the blessed privilege of working out our salvation in peace and quietness, and thus prepare us for the enjoyment of a happy home in paradise. True pursuance of the religion of Christ should be our ultimate end and object, and ever speed our journey on as time advances towards heaven and happiness, laboring to rise higher in the kingdom of divine grace and thus become better qualified for the prosecution of the service of God while here, and for the employments of the heavenly state hereafter. Little Crosses.

Christ comes to us morning by morning to present to us, for the day then opening, divers little crosses, thwartings of our own will, interferences with our plans, disappointments of our little pleasures. Do we kiss them, and take them up, and follow in his rear, like Simon the Cyrenian? Or do we toss them from us scornfully because they are so little, and wait for some great affliction to approve our patience and our resignation to his will? Ah, how might we accommodate to the small matters of religion generally those words of the Lord respecting the children. "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones." Despise not little sins; they have ruined many a soul. Despise not little duties; they have been to many a saved man an excellent discipline of humility. Despise not little temptations; rightly met they have often nerved the character for some fiery trial. And despise not little crosses; for when taken up, and lovingly accepted at the Lord's hand, they have made men meet for a great crown, even the crown of righteousness and life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.—Goulburn.

Extra Chewing Tobacco.

A SHELL TO BE THROWN INTO THE TOBACCO CAMP

We noticed this morning an advertisement, which reminded us very strongly of a "jewel in a swine's snout." It set forth tobacco, cheap, and extra for chewing, under all sweet names. Among them were, "Brothers gold leaf," "Golden Twist," "The Diadem," "Emerald," "Nectar Leaf," "Virgin Gold Leaf," "Eldorado," &c. &c. Now we presume there are those, (possibly some whose eye may fall on this scroll,) to whom the loosened leaf of "plug," or the rich "twist" of "nigger-head," looks golden. Perhaps there are those to whom the juice nicely and neatly expressed between the teeth realizes the ideal of mythological "nectar." But we confess our utter inability to get up a desire for a single sip of it. For its taste we cannot vouch; but it certainly looks tasty! Nor can the verbiage of sweet, golden nectarious names so conceal its ocular, quintescent filthiness, that we can make up our minds to employ it, however highly recommended, whether as a health restorer, lip cleanser, tooth polisher, or breath odoriferator. A word to the wise is always sufficient.—

RECOGNITION ON EARTH.—The following is suggestive of an evil which exists in certain city churches:

"A Boston minister says he once preached on The Recognition of Friends in the Future, and was told after service by a hearer that it would be more to the point to preach about the recognition of friends here, as he had been in the church twenty years and didn't know any of its members."

Brother Holsinger; We are deprived of reading your paper: it was dear to us for we love its teaching, and it was always a welcome visitor in our family circle, and it would be thrice dear to us now, as we are deprived of the society of the church, and do not hear preaching of any kind. I sometimes think we are like the lost sheep of the house of Isreal; but I pray that my faith may not fail me, and that I may not lose sight of the prize that I trust we all shall one day gain. There are brethren, some where in Kansas but I do not know how near they are to us here. If any are near enough to call and visit us, or even write to us, we would be so thankful for we would like to have preaching here among us There are only two of us here, sisters, and I think a greatdeal of good might be done here if we could have preaching occasionally. We would be glad to learn if there is an organized church near us in Howard County. We will not be able to subscribe for the Companion this year, as our means are somewhat limited and we will have hard work to get along until we can raise a crop. We would be glad to have any of the brethren coming here to see the country, come and see us.

To The Brotherhood in General.

And especially to those who are interested in spreading the gospel, we would say that brother John B. Allensworth proposes, the Lord willing, to emigrate from this place to the brethren in Oregon, to assist the brethren in preaching and spreading the gospel in that part of God's heritage. Brother Allensworth has been in the ministry here about one year, with considerable ability and zealous in trying to preach the gospel as practiced by the Brethren, and well respected by those who know him. His health has been rather delicate for some time, thinking a change of climate would improve it, besides he thinks he might be beneficial to the church in going where the brethren need ministerial help. His pecuniary circumstances are very limited. It will require nearly all he can raise to pay the expenses for him and his family. What do the brethren think of the proposal, and if approved would it not be better for the brethren to raise money, and pay his expenses in going there and let him use his own in providing a little home for himself and family when he gets there? We ask the brethren to consider it prayerfully. Could it not be presented to the brotherhood at the general council meeting, and arrangements made to some effect through this coming summer, so that he could move in the fall? Those brethren who wish to correspond with him on this subject can address him at Parkersburg, Richland Co., Illinois. SAMUEL M. FORNEY.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. }
March 31st, 1871. }

Brother Holsinger; Please inform our numerous friends and brethren in the east, through the columns of your paper, that we started for Kansas, on the 28th, at Huntingdon station, at half past twelve, P. M., and arrived in Kansas City, on the evening of the thirtieth, 10 o'clock P. M; all tired and worried with our journey. Made all the connections and had no accidents. The family stood the journey very well. Truly we can say the Lord favored us and prospered us on our journey. His name be praised for his protection over us. This morning finds us with our brother G. R. Holsinger, where we are now writing these few lines. We were met with a hearty reception, and this leaves us all well. Thanks be to the good Lord. Brethren, still continue to pray for us.

Yours with respect.

GEORGE MYERS.

Addresses Wanted.

I should be pleased to have the names and addresses of a few brethren, in the following counties, where there are organized churches, viz: Polk, Harrison, and Fremont counties, Iowa; Richardson county, Nebraska, and other places in Nebraska. Address me at Chatham Centre, Medina county, Ohio, or give notice through the C. F. C.

I like the reform measure advocated in the Companion, for the people need it very much at the present day. I am practicing "Health Reform," of Hygienic principles, and know the benefit or reform.

JOHN FISHER.

Remarks and Questions.

As I was reading the Companion to-day, I fell on J. K. Teeter's article, on page No. 197, read it, and was almost confounded by the time I was done, and I came to the conclusion to propound some questions regarding his assertion that Jesus Christ is the "unoriginated and eternal God," and that the Bible declares that He is the Almighty and called Jehovah, the mighty God." Again, "and as there can be but one Almighty, Jesus Christ must be the Almighty." I concluded when I was done reading that the import of his article is: Jehovah, the Godhead of the whole universe, took upon himself a human body, who was called Jesus Christ. If this is so to be understood, where shall we find Father, Son and Holy Ghost? How explain the passage, "Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness?" How understand the expression, "Behold, the man is become as one of us," etc., using the plural number the second time?

Again, how can Christ be the Father, when, at his coming out of the water the Holy Ghost lit upon him in the bodily shape like a dove, and the heavens opened and a voice came from above, saying, "this is my beloved son in whom I am well pleased?" Why did Christ call upon his Father in Heaven, in his prayers, so many times, if he was Father himself? Why say in his dark stage of suffering: "Father into thy hands I commit my spirit?" How explain the sitting of the son at the right hand of the Father? How explain the three witnesses in Heaven, the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost? And how explain the consolation John gives the children of God in regard to the "advocate we have with the Father, who is the propitiation for our sins?" We might multiply questions on this head, but let this suffice. I will just say in conclusion, is not the son the offspring of the Father; are they not two individuals and can still be of one mind?

WILLIAM HERTZLER.

"The Truth Will Make You Free."

In thinking over achievements and victories won by man by forming resolutions and carrying them out, and thereby bringing about much good both to themselves and others, it was vividly brought to my mind what the church accomplished by taking a firm stand and using the proper means (for means must always be used to accomplish an object) against King Alcohol. I have not seen a brother take a dram, as a beverage, for more than ten years, whereas forty years ago there were brethren who kept it by the barrel in their cellars. There may be found here and there one who uses the creature, but if they do they do it in secret, and are careful it don't tell on them.

Time also was when a few brethren sold slaves, or were in some way contaminated with the same; but the church took a positive stand against it, and the thing is no more in existence with us; yet thousands feel the dire effect to day, and it may take an age to wipe its curse from the nation. I speak of involuntary servitude. But there is a kind of slavery which men enter into with their free consent, and are not aware that they are losing the control of themselves until it will cost them very dear, if they ever shall become free again. Nevertheless they may free themselves by making a firm resolution. "For whatsoever man has done man may undo."

I remember now an old brother by the name of Andrew Utz, who, while plowing in his field, thinking over his past life, remembering the many struggles he had to overcome, his lusts and sins, and the success he had by the grace of God, and that the truth had made him free by using the means prescribed by the truth, except in one instance, and that was the habit of using tobacco. He resolved at once to become free, with the help of God, and consequently emptied his pockets of the foul stuff. But he found it necessary to use a substitute, for his hand would unconsciously reach into his pocket every few minutes. So he broke a lot of sassafras in small pieces and filled his pocket, and though he was a man of sixty, yet he was emancipated, and the joy he expressed on account of it would do me good to hear, being then young and in the prime of life.

Now, dear readers, since the "armistice" has fully expired in the "tobacco war," I feel like making a proposition in what way we will prosecute the war so as to save the most lives of the common people, and be enabled to take captive the King himself.

In the first place, by way of caution, I would say, don't be too sanguine and say "On to Richmond" before the preparations are made, because there are more of them than there are of us," and we must not push the matter too vehemently. Remember sheep must have time to be taken through a narrow place, and if you push them too closely they are apt to break out and run away and the wolf may catch them. It is indeed a great undertaking and it costs a great self-denial for a brother that has been habituated to tobacco until it has become a second nature.

My proposition would therefore be let every brother that chews tobacco use a substitute for a while by having some tansy or yarrow with him. He can chew this and be seated in company or church, for in swallowing the juice his stomach will be strengthened to digest food. I am no medical man, but the above has served a good purpose, as some of my brethren can testify.

And as for the habit of smoking, let some medical brother prescribe a substitute. Then let every brother begin each day with God. Let him habituate to think of God, first when he awakes, instead of tobacco. This will be a hard struggle, and it requires time, but perseverance will overcome all obstacles. And should the desire for the fleshpot of Egypt return, don't murmur at your friends, for they are willing to sacrifice something too, for they will deny themselves of taking food for a space of time, though they wash themselves and anoint their heads, and are in solemn prayer to God in your behalf, well remembering that some kind of evil spirits cannot be cast out without fasting and prayer.

Now I wish to make a solemn appeal to all my brethren and sisters from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean, and from the extreme south to the extreme north, all that are free from the habit of using tobacco to unite with me to fast and pray, that God would emancipate the church from the intemperance of tobacco and all other forms of intemperance, and give it into the heart of his people to apply the means thus saved to more noble purposes, for which there are calls everywhere and at all times, and thus "lay up treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal."

F. P. LOHR.

Bloomingdale, Mich.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: For eight days I have been upon the bed of affliction, and am now just able to sit up again, and I have been reflecting upon Matthew 5:16: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in Heaven."

This we are to do by our daily walk and conversation; by being good to them that do evil to us, and praying for them that persecute us. Let us not absent ourselves from the worldly people, but let us welcome them to our homes, and if they would ask any favor of us, let us not turn away from them, but do them all the kindness we can. By so doing they may be enabled to see the difference between a Christian's life and a sinner's life, and thereby be constrained to come out on the plan of salvation.

Let us also endeavor to encourage our speakers, who are standing betwixt God and man, to proclaim the gospel to a dying people. Let us consider, were we to be in their places, would we not want a word of encouragement, or a little assistance if necessary. We are commanded to do unto others as we would have them to do unto us, whereon hangs all the law and the prophets.

And farthermore let us strive to live in peace with all mankind, for peace is the very motto of our religion. It forms one of its most glorious peculiarities. It is one of its grandest objects; a point to which its precepts, provisions and influences confessedly tend as their final result. Its spirit pervades our Holy Writ. Our Heavenly Father is the God of Peace. Our Redeemer is the Prince of peace. The Holy Ghost is the spirit of peace. Heaven is the abode of perfect and everlasting peace. Peace was a leading theme in the instructions of Christ, and a prominent trait in his charater. His entire doctrine was peace; his spirit was the very essence of peace; his whole life was an exemplification of peace; peace was the special legacy he bequeathed to his Disciples; and, just before bowing his head in death on the cross, he prayed for his murderers, and thus set an example for all his followers down to the end of time. Then why. Oh, why! should not peace prevail with us at present, especially in the church and our home circle? It will make us more happy in this life, and happy in all eternity. And if we live in peace, we will also love one another, without which Christ says that we can not be his disciples. But if we are bound together in the bonds of gospel love and affection, then we can know that we are his disciples: and if his disciples, then heirs of God; and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Oh what a precious promise: then let us all strive to obtain that promise.

And you, young people, who are in the bloom of life, and have not yet made a start in the cause of religion, this promise is also to you, if you will only live up to the principles of salvation, and comply with the requirements of God. Now just stop and think a few moments, to be an heir of God, and a joint heir with Jesus Christ, which is worth more than all your riches, or all your worldly honor, or all that this world can bestow upon you. And what will it cost you to become an heir of God? Why nothing that is beneficial to your soul's salvation. All the riches and pleasures of this world are perishable, but these things that God will bestow upon you in that heirship are life, peace, and happiness through all eternity. Is it not reasonable that we serve our best friend and try to please him? Jesus is your best friend; he loves you, he died to redeem you from everlasting destruction. He is now interceding for you. He is your best friend. Then why not serve him? Why serve the Devil, your enemy? What as he to give you for your service? Nothing but misery and woe, which you do not want. Remember the wages of sin is death." To serve your best friend Jesus, is eternal life. Then come to Jesus, and he has promised that he will in wise cast you away. Brethren and Sisters; let us encourage our children in the good cause, and raise them in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. And there is a reward laid up in Heaven for us.

ALX. KINTNER.

Defiance, Ohio.

Brother Henry: On the 22d of January we commenced a meeting and continued it until the last day of the month, when we received twelve members; eleven by baptism and one reinstated. Elder Jacob M. Thomas preached three sermons, brother Jos. Bickner one, and the balance of the labor was performed by Michael Thomas and the writer. We thank God for his mercy, and for operating upon the minds of the children of men in bringing so many precious souls to Him through his powerful word and spirit.

JACOB BEEGHLEY.

Somerfield, Pa.

Brother Editor: In reviewing a book called the "Pious Companion," we found the following, on page 123: "Inasmuch as the church is clothed with authority to make rules and dictate in matters where we have no positive scripture." How can this be? See Paul to the 1 Cor. 3: 11: "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ. We cannot see how there can be any power where there is no Gospel. Will some kind brother or sister give us light on this.

MARRIED.

By the undersigned, March 23d, Mr. ALEXANDER YEATER and Miss SARAH BEASTON, both of Juniata county.

On the same day, Mr. ROBERT LOVE, of Huntingdon county, and Miss MARY A. FULTON, of Juniata county. C. MYERS.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Jonathan's Creek congregation, Ohio, December 13th 1870, JACOB, son of Robert and Catharine LAMPTON, after an illness of sixteen days, during which his suffering was intense, from Scarlet Fever; aged 4 years, 9 months, 5 days. Funeral service by the writer. E. HORN, Jr.

In Amboy, Hillsdale county, Michigan, March 12th, LAVINA JANE, daughter of brother Jesse and sister Nancy LONG, aged 1 year, 8 months and 29 days. Funeral services by the writer, from Matthew 19: 14.

DAVID RITTENHOUSE.

In the Clover creek congregation, March the 20th, 1871, ELIZABETH, daughter of brother David and sister Hannah BURGET, aged 10 years, 9 months and 5 days. Funeral services by the brethren from the first seven verses of the 14th chapter of the gospel by St. John.

The subject of the above notice was a bright and intelligent girl. She was far above her years in many things. Many persons of more mature age were not equal to her in good, sound, common sense. She was so kind, so pleasant, in fact almost everything that one could wish to see in one so tender in age; but all this could not save her from an early grave; the grim monster paid her a visit and she must respond to the call. Young, beautiful, and intelligent, yet all this could not save her. All that kind friends and tender parents could do could not save her from death.

This was a very, very solemn and pititul case. But a few weeks ago the mother of this child was standing beside the corpse of her only remaining brother in the flesh, her only sister having died some years ago. Little did she then think that so soon she would have to part with her own little Lizzie, the very center of attraction in their family; but, dear sister, do not sorrow as those must sorrow who have no hope. Your little Lizzie will be missed in the family circle; her chair will be vacant at the table, but rest assured that she fills a place in that upper and better world, where sickness and death cannot enter. There was a seat prepared for her at the throne of God and she now fills that place, and is better cared for than you could have cared for her. Temptation cannot reach her. She died

"Ere sin had seared the breast,
Or sorrow 'woke the tear."

Then be consoled by these thoughts, and let this dispensation be the means of drawing you a little closer to God, with the bright assurance that you can meet little Lizzie in the realms of bliss, where you will not any more be called to part. J. L. WINELAND.

In the Beaver creek branch, Maryland, March 15th, brother HEZEKIAH WILLIAMS (colored), aged 39 years, 9 months and 8 days. Disease, consumption. Some three weeks before his death he made application to be baptized. Two persons led him about two hundred yards from his house to a little stream of water, where he was immersed in the presence of many witnesses, according to the commission of the great head of the church. He died in hope of a glorious resurrection, and was followed to the grave by a large concourse of people and sympathizing friends. Funeral discourse from Job 14: 14. "If a man die shall he live again?" By brother Leonard Emmert and the writer.

In Frederick county, Md., on the 18th of March, our friend JACOB KOON, aged 71 years, 7 months and 6 days. Funeral discourse from the word "we do all fade as a leaf," by W. Palmer (Winebrennarian) and the writer. ELDER ANDREW COST.

In the Big creek congregation, Richland county, Illinois, March 4th, sister RACHEL FORNEY, consort of brother Michael Forney, aged 53 years, 10 months and 2 days. She leaves a kind husband and nine children to mourn her loss. Not only do they miss her in the family circle, but her seat is vacant in the church. We will miss her at our love-feasts. The whole neighborhood will miss old Mother Forney. She was good among the sick, free and kind-hearted; always willing to lend her help in distress. She told her husband that it would not be long till he would follow her. She left bright and cheering words, and bore all the pains of death with smiles. She has left good examples for all her children and for mothers. Funeral by brother Ira Calvert and others, from Philip 1: 20, 21. J. B. ALLENSWORTH.

A most desirable home in Clinton County Missouri.

I am the widow of Isaac Shoemaker, formerly of Fayette County Pa. I am 76 years old, and all my children have gone to themselves. I am living on our old home farm, which contains 260 acres, about 100 under fence, the balance timber, all joining and lying about ½ mile from Plattsburg, where two important Railroads, (just completed,) cross. We have about 70 members here; and our new church building is close by—on the place.

Being too old to manage any longer, I offer this place for sale, but would much prefer selling to some of the Brethren.

To Nebraska, California, and Kansas, and the B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The "Burlington Route," as called, lies right in the path of the Star of Empire. It runs almost immediately in the center of the great westward movement of emigration. Crossing Illinois and Iowa, it strikes the Missouri river at three points.

These three points are the gateways into three great sections of the trans-Missouri region.

The Northern gate is Omaha, where the great Pacific road will take you to the land of gold and grapes, sunny mountains, and perpetual summer.

The middle gate is Plattsmouth, which opens upon the south half of Nebraska, south of the Platte river, a region unsurpassed on the continent for agriculture and grazing. Just here are the B. & M. Railroad lands, concerning which Geo. S. Harris, the land officer at Burlington, Iowa, can give you all information, and in the heart of them is Lincoln, the State Capital and present terminus of the road.

The Southern gate leads to Kansas, by connections with the St. Joe Road at Hamburg running direct to St. Joe and Kansas City

The trains of the Burlington run smoothly and safely, and make all connections. It runs the best of coaches, Pullman Palace and Pullman dining cars, and should you take the journey for the journey's sake alone, you will be repaid; or take it to find a home or a farm, and you cannot find either better than among the B. & M. lands, where you can buy on ten years' credit, and at a low price.

THE

Christian Family Companion

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Born in Sin.

In Companion No. 7, we noticed an article bearing the above caption. In our humble judgment, the brother's views are not in exact accordance with the tenor of scripture. He says: "We often hear it said, that we are born in sin, or that we are born sinners. I fail to find the fact recorded in the word of God." We think, we can discover some difference between the terms, "born in sin," and "born sinners." That children are born in sin we believe, because we think the word of inspiration testifies to this; but that they are born sinners, we do not believe, because we think inspiration denies it.

David testifies to the former fact most implicitly, for says he, "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me." We think Paul also bears witness to the same fact. He says, "I was alive without the law once, but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died." "Sin revived,"—surely then it must have existed, for had it not, how could it revive? Revive, means to restore, or bring back to life. See also Rom. 5: 12. Here we are told, "Death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." In Rom. 6: 25: "The wages of sin" are said to be death. As children are subject to death, they cannot be wholly from sin.

Having now, as we think, shown that we are born in sin; we shall next try to prove that we are not born sinners. In Rom. 5: 13 it is written, "For until the law, sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed when there is no law." Again; "By the law is the knowledge of sin." Again; "For where no law is, there is no transgression." Again, "Without the law sin was dead." The above scriptures, clearly prove our latter position; that we are not born sinners, for sin is the transgression of the law.

If then we are born in sin, or are born with an innate principle prone to evil, and yet are not sinners, some counteracting influence must be exerted over us, which keeps this latent power under control. In Luke 11: 21, 22. The Savior speaks of a strong power overcoming the power of Satan. Jesus the second Adam, through his obedience, and suffering, has become the federal head, of the human family. They now come under his control, he stands as their surety, their righteousness. He shields them from the effects of sin, and from the power of the law. Inbred sin is dormant. Christ is now to them, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. Surely, he is the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. Though we must admit that we are born in sin, yet we have great cause to rejoice that so large a part of the world is not under its control.

The writer farther says: "Who will look at a little child, laying asleep in its cradle, or on its mother's lap, when sweet innocence is beaming from its countenance, and dare say there is sin there." Yes dear brother, we think we dare say sin is there, but blessed be God, it (sin) is under the control of one stronger than it. Though we know the child is diseased, yet we know that the great physician holds the disease in check. We instinctively tremble when we think how soon this check will be removed, and sin which is now dormant, will revive, and sway his scepter over that heart. When we remember this we can only pray this dear Shepherd to love them still; to win them back to his fold ere they wander far away. When we admire the innocency of our children, let us not lose sight of him who purchased for them this rich legacy. And when we think of the travail of his soul, let our hearts flow out in gratitude to him. It is indeed difficult to realize how much Jesus has done for us. But while we thank him for our own happiness, let us also thank him for the happiness which our children enjoy.

We believe it is an established law of nature, that parents transmit to their children their own peculiarities, not only physically, but mentally, and morally. Adam, according to this law, stamped his own image upon his offspring. The effects of this depravity are everywhere apparent. We behold in children, a proneness to evil, ere they are capable of knowing right from wrong. During this time of minority, though sin is present it is not imputed, When we become old enough to distinguish from wrong, the commandments is given, did we obey, we would not fall under condemnation. But the apostle says when the commandment came, he died. This shows that he must have transgressed; when he thus knowingly transgressed, sin which had been dormant revived; but innocency, and peace which had been alive, now died. He had now sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, and consequently received the full effects of his fall.

Did not inbred sin exist, it would be reasonable to suppose, that some at least, would obey, and not fall under condemnation, but observation, as well as revelation, teaches us that all partake of Adam's sin, when they arrive at years of accountability.

One more quotation, and remarks and we have done, "It is supposed that Adam was the disobedient one through whose disobedience many were made sinners; and Christ the obedient one by whose obedience, many shall be made righteous. True had Adam eaten of the tree of life, instead of the forbidden fruit, sin would never have come into the world; and very likely we neither; because it was after the transgression, that it was told Eve, "In sorrow shalt thou bring forth children." Hence we might say, that by one man's disobedience many were born into the world, and inherited the inclination to run into sin, so by the obedience of one, (Christ) many shall receive remission of their sins, that they may have committed, by obeying that obedient one, and thus become righteous." We must say, we fail, to see the force of the brother's arguments in the last quotation, "It is supposed," does he call that which follows, a mere supposition? Is it not an established fact, founded upon the word of God? See Rom. 5. Here Paul argues at length upon this subject. In verse 19 he asserts, what the brother says, "It is supposed." Ah! we may more than suppose, we know it.

Again we can see no cause to think, that the propagation of the race should have been the result of sin. True it was said to one ancient mother after her fall, "In sorrow shalt thou bring forth children." What might have been said to her before this we know not, but we think it more reasonable to suppose, that the phrase "In sorrow," was added after her sin. But for sin, this event, would not have been associated with such untold agony. We do indeed think the brother's exposition of the apostle's language is untenable. See latter part of quotation.

The above has been written in love; we hope no offence will be taken by him whose article we have imperfectly reviewed. We are commanded to be helpers together. Truth should not be despised, though it come from an humble source. If our views are erronious, we hope to be corrected, in the spirit of love.

Philip's Text.

"He was led as a sheep to the slaughter: and like a lamb dumb before his sherer so opened he not his mouth." Acts 8: 32.

We like to talk about a good sermon. And could the evangelist's sermon which he preaches from the above text have been recorded, undoubtedly it would be read with amazing interest, by all seekers of divine truth. Let us imagine what was the topic of his discourse. And ye who cannot preach only to "crowded assemblies," mark well the result of a sermon of one of God's holy men of old, which was spoken in the presence of but one individual. Philip's sermon was preached to an earnest inquirer of the inspired word. Alas, how many are left to grope in the dark and cry "out Lord what must I do"? If we had more Philip's, who at the bidding of the Holy Spirit sought out one poor sinner, and preached to him Jesus Christ and him crucified, there would not be so many communities ignorant of the true meaning and force of the gospel.

His subject gave him a fair chance to speak about the life, the sufferings, and the death of our glorious Redeemes. "He was led as a sheep to the slaugeter." He was slain in the most cruel way, yet he was the meekest man ever on earth. He was spit upon, derided and shamefully treated, yet to say nothing of his honor he did the most good of any man that ever walked "where the sinless hath trod."

The noble mission of Christ on earth must have been the subject of Philip's discourse. He had before him a faithfull worshipper; but ignorant of the light and power of the gospel one who could not look from this vale of tears to the mansions of eternal bliss, because of the blindness of sin and his load of guilt. One like many in this age, dead in sin, and lost as to what he should do for the salvation of his soul.

Though Philip, seeking the happiness of but a poor eunuch spared no pains in removing the dark curtain from his mind "that the light of the glorious gospel" might shine in his benighted heart. And his sermon only ended when he came "unto a certain water," (Acts 8: 36), where the eunuch demanded baptism. What! had Philip been preaching baptism to his lonely hearer? He certainly did, or one so ignorant as not to understand the simple text heading this article, would not have appreciated the importance of baptism. The fact was, Philip had undertaken to expound the gospel of Christ to one ignorant of its true light. And like all other ambassadors of Christ, he declared the whole gospel. He preached Christ as "the way," and "the door," of the true church. And to preach an effectual sermon he must preach Christ as the christian's example, and of course he must tell his lonely hearer something about the example of Christ. And to preach the example of Christ it behooved him to say something about the baptism of our blessed Savior. How he went down into Jordan and was baptized by his forerunner John.

And his sermon had its desired effect, and brought another soul from the clutches of satan, and sent it on its "way rejoicing."

Suggestive Paragraphs.

Ruskin, in one of his Oxford lectures, says: "I pray you with all earnestness to prove and know within your hearts, that all things lovely and righteous are possible for those who believe in their possibility, and who determine that, for their part, they will make everyday's work contribute to them. Let every dawn of morning be to you as the beginning of life, and every setting of the sun be to you as its close; then let every one of these short lives leave its sure record of some kindly thing done for others, some goodly strength or knowledge gained for yourselves; so from day to day and strength to strength you shall build up indeed, by art, thought, and by just will, an ecclesia of England, of which it shall not be said 'See what manner of stones are here,' but 'See what manner of men.'"

Prayer.

"The duty of prayer is urged by every consideration. None but God can provide for us; none but he can forgive, and guide, and support us; none but he can bring us to heaven. He is ever ready to hear us. The humble he sends not away empty. Those who ask receive; and those who seek, find. How natural and proper then is prayer! How strange that any can live, and not pour out their desires to God! How strange that any are willing to go to eternity with the sad reflection, "I have gone through this world, spent my probation, wasted my strength and am dying, and have never prayed!" How awful will be the reflection of the soul through all eternity, "I was offered, eternal life, but I never asked for it. I lived from day to day, and from year to year, in God's world; breathed his air, rioted in his beneficence, forgot his goodness, and never once asked him to save my soul!" Who will be to blame if the prayerless soul is lost!—Barnes.

DELICACY AND TENDERNESS OF FEELING.—The best parts of human qualities are the tenderness and delicacy of feeling in little matters, the desire to soothe and please others, the minutiæ of the social virtues. Some ridicule these feminine attributes, which are left out of many men's natures; but I have known the brave, the intellectual, the eloquent possess these gentle qualities; the braggart, the weak, never! Benevolence and feeling enoble the most trifling actions.

It is not required that a man shall always be perfect in order to be a true Christian. But it is required that he should be a sincere seeker after perfection. It is required that he should be moving forward, and advancing up the straight and narrow way of life.

Life has been called a warfare. Blessed, then, is the periodical armistice of the Sabbath. Blessed not merely as a day of rest, but also as a day of retrospection. It is only in the pauses of the fight that we can see how the battle is going.

Kindness soothes the sorrow stricken, and lifts the drooping heart.

It Is So?

In reply to brother Jonathan Myers, of Antioch, Cal., in his criticism, entitled "Is it so?" on an article written by brother D. M. Mohler, vol. 6, page 702, C. F. C., in his review of an article written by brother J. L. Forney, under the head of "Mutual Forbearance." This reply is written by the undersigned to fulfill a promise made to his son-in-law, brother D. M. Mohler, who said to me that brother Forney's article in C. F. C should be noticed, and be shown that the moral character of dress, as believed in and practiced by the brethren could be made to appear as clear and evident as to command and mode, by the same method of connecting the testimonies in God's word, on that subject, as baptism, the Lord's supper, the washing of the saints' feet, or the salutation of an holy kiss, as to time or place for this, or the anointing of oil, as to what part of the body the oil should be applied, or the prohibition of plurality of wives can be made clear, or in harmony with the church's practice, by connecting the testimonies in the word and their reasonings on those subjects.

I replied: "Well, you do it." No, said he, it would be better for some older experienced brother to do it. I said the way to have old experienced brethren in the church when we are dead, is for young ones to go to work. Well, said he, I will try, provided you promise to help sustain my position, should it be assailed. I said I will if you let me see your article before you send it off for publication, which he did.

Brother Mohler begins his review of bro. Forney's article by saying: "1st. The brethren administer baptism by trine immersion, not because we have a verbal, thus saith the Lord for it but we must have some mode." Webster's 6th definition of the word verbal is literal, having word answering to word Hence bro. Mohler's meaning is that we have it not in so many words, meaning to say in one verse or connection of verses in any one chapter, that the minister is to take the applicant into the water and have him kneel down, and then dip him into the water in the name of the Father, and a second time to dip him in the name of the Son, and a third time to dip him in the name of the Holy Ghost. And in this he is correct, and every Bible reader knows it; hence the world knows it, and I am glad to hear it of them, for this shows that they have at least been reading some for themselves and not had others to do all their reading for them. And when they refer to this truth we should admit it. I have been trying to preach the gospel for twenty-one years, and the world has often said to me, that you, brethren, have not got it in the scriptures in so many words for your way of baptizing, and I have just as often admitted it, and not to my disadvantage either. But brother M. says "we must have mode," and in this he is again correct. And in saying we must have mode, he does not say that Christ gave us no mode, and that the old brethren had to go to work and make one, for he frankly says that we clearly infer from Matthew 28: 19, and other scriptures that this is the mode (trine immersion) the apostles practiced, and that there is nothing in the scriptures that will not harmonize itself to this mode, and so confirmed does he press himself in his article that the scriptures, when harmonized, command trine immersion as the mode, that he says the church has no right to baptize by any other mode, or words to this effect. Yet after all this, brother Myers thinks it might be throwing dust into the eyes of some of the readers of the C. F. C., and would have them believe that, according to brother Mohler's way of reasoning, his article did not sustain the Brethren's doctrine or mode of baptizing as being but merely a tradition of the old brethren. But brother Myers does not do the reading for everybody, and I think the readers of said articles generally will see that brother Mohler believes that trine immersion is commanded by Christ, and that the only difference between the two writers is as to how plain the commission makes trine immersion, just in its own words as recorded by Matthew, without calling up other scriptures and reasonings, and other grammatical constructions, and other sources of information. I understand brother Myers as taking the position that to every honest reader the commission, of and in itself, reads to all such that they must be dipped three times, once at the naming of each of the three persons in the Godhead while brother Mohler and you say it does not, but that it requires explanation by other testimonies in scripture, and reasonings and illustrations to make it so plain that every honest, sincere reader may see its meaning. And this everybody knows that knows anything about it. If brother Myers is correct, why is it that brother Quinter and other brethren who are good English readers, cannot, by the mere reading of the commission as recorded by Matthew, remove all the seemingly plausible scriptural arguments and reasonings advanced by others, that single immersion was not right? Yea, that even pouring and sprinkling are wrong by only reading the text.

Now as to the word infer, it was not, I think, improperly employed. Webster says infer means to deduce, to draw or derive as a fact or consequence. He says from the character of God as Creator and Governor of the world, we infer the indispensable obligation of all his creatures to obey his command; we infer one proposition or truth from another, when we perceive that if one is true the other must be true also. Again he says inferences result from reasoning, as when the mind perceives such a connection between ideas as that if certain propositions called promises are true, the conclusions or propositions deduced from them must also be true. How very appropriately then has brother Mohler used the word infer, as to what, and how we can better understand what the commission teaches. For it being established that the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost are three separate and distinct persons, each officiating in his distinct several offices for the salvation of man, and baptism, by scripture evidence meaning dipping, how much more conclusive is the argument drawn from the reading of the commission, that if we are to be dipped in the name of the Father, that we should also be dipped in the name of the Son, and likewise in the name of the Holy Ghost. I think that if brother Myers reflects a little more upon this matter, he, too, will understand it, as I think the brethren and sisters generally do. He now seems to be a little grieved to think that the moral character of dress should stand upon equal footing with the other gospel commands, and would rather have it classed with what he is pleased to call traditions of the brethren, or of their conclusions in the absence of a thus saith the Lord for it. But I hope it is not from a desire to do as brother J. L. Forney says Christians ought to do, that as God has made flowers and placed them in the world to show his matchless skill and power, that he too feels himself at liberty to make a flower of himself by adorning his person, especially while young, until his face becomes furrowed or wrinkled by old age, or that he becomes too poor that he cannot or gets no office to place him in rank with those in high stations in the church, so as to place him beyond inducement by the lust of the eye and flesh and honor of the world, he will then only feel it his duty to fully mortify his members which are upon the earth.

This command to give to dress a moral character, was not originated by the old brethren of the eighteenth or nineteenth century, but by Christ and his apostles. Brother Myers says he must confess that he has heard brother Mohler's kind of reasoning from other denominations, and that they thereby reason out of existence every ordinance and observance that we find in the word of God. This is a mistake, and the reverse is the fact. The world cannot touch the ordinances and observances of the word of God injuriously, by harmonizing the truth as has been done, for truth supports truth. But other denominations do more like brother Myers has done in his criticism. They take a passage of scripture and either insist upon its meaning so, or they will call up such testimony as seems to favor their views and leave a host of witnesses out that would be directly against them.

Now it is very clear to me that the New Testament scriptures on many subjects are not arranged in a regular systematic order, as to the arrangements of the truth on many of its subjects, and that many of them cannot be plainly made out until the various testimonies of the apostles and of Christ on those subjects are harmonized. Such is the subject of baptism, as to its mode, as well as many others. Again brother Myers says, "we understand brother Mohler not as opposing any of those ordinances, but trying to establish other things by them. It is this feature we object to, that by so doing we lower the high tone of the great plan of salvation, and bring it on a level with rules and regulations that are made and changed at the will of humanity." That the scriptures that give to dress a moral character, were made or can be changed at the will of humanity is a fearful assertion, and it is truly a singular conclusion that baptism, a command of Christ, ought not to be referred to on account of its holiness as a proof that the command of God as given by the holy apostles of Christ, (that we should not fashion ourselves according to our former lusts as in the days of our ignorance) should lower it in its high tone. God disgraced with God! Did you ever hear the like? We will notice another point, and that is, that brother Myers indirectly says that when brethren writing with no more precaution than brother Mohler did, the adversary will seize their pen and thrust a hard blow at the precious cause of Jesus. In reply to which I will yet say to brother Mohler and all young, plain brethren, go on and live out in practical life as well as write in the spirit of meekness these principles, and instead of injuring the cause or yourselves you will be instrumental in doing honor to it and save not only yourselves from corruption, but I trust others also, and if not able to do much, still each one may roll a sand out from under Satan's devices, and finally be found to have been helpers with Christ and holy men, to destroy the works of the devil. For that class of brethren who came out on the side of the Lord, casting down imaginations and every high thing, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ, ought to be much encouraged.

Lastly, we ask brother Myers, or any of that sentiment with him that say the moral character of dress, with the form of it, is not as clearly revealed in the Christian scriptures as baptism is with its form or mode, as practiced by the brethren, to make their showing of that thing, if they can. We say they ought to do it, or else let the two commands stand beside each other, as the scriptures have placed them. I mean by saying beside each other, they are both in the scriptures, and one is not a big command and the other a small one. If they do not do it, we will suppose they cannot. JOHN HARSHEY.

Selected for the COMPANION.

Come to Jesus.

Perhaps you think it will be as easy to repent at any future time as to-day. This is a most dangerous delusion. Impressions of all kinds wear away by repetition unless they are made permanent by being acted upon. If you ever lived near a noisy mill, a roaring river, or the sea, you have found that the sound, which at first disturbed you was afterwards scarcely noticed. Just so the truths of religion may deeply impress the mind; but if those impressions are not cherished by acting in accordance with them, those truths will affect the mind less and less till they are heard with total indifference, Jesus says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock."

He knocks by sermons, books, conversation, conscience and solemn warnings. The sound startles you; but if you do not rise and open the door it will startle you less to-morrow, till at length you will not hear it at all. How many who once felt deeply about religion now feel nothing, and are quickly and quietly traveling down to hell. On the narrow hedges of the steep cliffs of the Yorkshire coast multitudes of sea-fowl lay their eggs, by gathering which, some persons obtain a perilous livelihood. It once happened that a man, having fixed in the ground his iron bar, and having lowered himself down by the rope which was fastened to it, found that, in consequence of the edge of the cliff bending over the rocks below, he could not reach the narrow ledge where the eggs were deposited without swinging himself backward and forward. By this means he at last placed his foot on the rock, but in so doing lost his hold of the rope. His situation was most dreadful. The sea roared hundreds of feet below. It was impossible to climb either up or down. He must soon perish from want, or fall and be dashed to pieces on the rocks. The rope was his only way of escape. It was still swinging to and fro, but when it settled it would be out of reach. Every time it approached him it was farther off than before. Every moment he wasted his danger increased. He made up his mind the next time the rope swung toward him he would spring forward, seize it and reach the top in safety. Sinner your salvation is farther off every moment you wait. Hell is below. Death will soon cast you down, but Jesus is near to save you. He invites you to lay hold on him. It is your only hope. Grasp him by faith. You cannot miss your hold. He will hold you and bear you up to heaven. But the difficulty and danger are greater every moment you delay. Come to Jesus now.

Query—"Revival Meetings."

"What should be done with a brother who takes an active part in revival meetings of other denominations? And give us your views on the subject through the COMPANION." So writes a beloved correspondent, who seems to have the prosperity of Zion truly at heart. In answer, I would say, by all means admonish him, with "Consider well his way, lest he be deceived." It seems plain to my mind, the adapting principles of the gospel give us to understand what is true Christian consistency relative to such matters.

"Christ is not divided," therefore his body, the church, the only fit representation of him on earth, must be an organization of believers acting in union and harmony with each other, all teaching the same thing, and having minds alike relative to the gospel plan of salvation. "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," may well be applied to religious worship, as well as to some other things. If we are the true followers of Christ we are in the yoke with him. How dare we, then, put our shoulders to the "yoke" of the "beast," and with might and main help to push the car that is running along on the road of "popular" religion, so very pleasant, seemingly, to all those who wish to go to heaven while lolling in the easy chair of worldly pleasure? Take care, brother! take care, sister! that you do not be instrumental in helping to foster the great spirit of deception in the minds of those of your very household! "What concord hath light with darkness, or Christ with Belial?" asks the great apostle to the Gentiles. The answer is, none. If then we are the children of light, we will not be found giving aid to the "unfruitful works of darkness."

Why is it, that sometimes certain persons, when called upon to sing or pray in the church, where order prevails, seem to be ashamed, or seem rather backward, who, at those disorderly revivals, can sing and pray as loud as any one, and as often as called on? Can it be because they love darkness rather than light? We hope not. Again, others who are sometimes dilatory in attending regular appointments of the Brethren for worship by day, will, night after night, appear at the night meetings, where disorder is the rule, rather than the exception. Is it because there is excitement and reveling manifest at such places? We are not altogether willing to believe that this is the prominent reason, but believe it is because such scenes and doings are not looked at in the proper light.

Now, dear brother, or sister, let us just dissect this noisy "beast," and look at him in all his parts. The first of all he wants a crowd, next, vociferous oratory, or downright terrible thunder, and as much loud singing as possible. The consequence often is a mesmeric influence, a power of man over man. Now, the more noise the more "spirit," and often, under a high pressure, the mesmeric influence over the animal passions is so great as to cause prostration and a state of unconsciousness for hours, and even days. Others are differently affected—an extraordinary feeling is experienced; and the delusion ends often in fixing on the mind the belief that it is true religion and the work of God, when it is a fact well known by many that the same mesmeric influence, with like results as to unconsciousness, pleasant feelings, etc., may be gotten up and exerted over man by man, where there are no pretensions made as to its being religion.

And again, it is true that it makes no difference how much error is preached, if believed, other things being equal, the same result will follow as if all truth were preached. Now, can we for a moment believe God gives sanction to and approves of such a mode of worship, when we know that he is a God of order, and to worship him acceptably, with the assurance of his blessing, we must worship him in spirit and in truth: that is, in accordance with his true spirit and his word, which is truth?

Know then, dear brethren and sisters, that the propelling power of these "spasmodic revivals" is excitement. See to it, then, you do not help to fan the flame of excitement by your singing and praying; and if married to the Church of Christ, let us be true to him—our love, indeed—and not be found courting the favors and kneeling at the feet of the "great whore," and committing spiritual fornication with her! "Be ye separate," love only Jesus—in his courts only be found. Then, as chaste virgins, he will own and accept of us. "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation."

Satisfaction.

"I shall be satisfied, when I shall awake with thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15.

Whenever you find a man contented with his lot, satisfied with his condition, you find one who approaches very near the summit of earthly bliss. "A contented mind is a continual feast," is not only the sentiment of scripture, but the natural dictate of human reason. Contentment will make the bleak mountains of the North look lovely in their frozen grandeur; it will modify and mitigate the parching heat of the South, and transform the burning sandy desert into a blooming garden. It will trace lines of gladness on the rude, mud-built walls of the cottage home, and enable the laborer to feel rich when he is miserably poor. It will warm without fire, satisfy without food, clothe without raiment. Contentment is one of the highest of the Christian excellences, and by him by whom it is secured, a precious prize is won. To woman it is more beautiful than robes of silk and vestures of satin; to man it imparts more glory than the habiliments of royalty; to youth it imparts more honors than a crown of gold; on age it confers more respect and veneration than does the hoary head. It makes sickness sweet, and arrays blushing health in the adornments of a meek and quiet spirit. But while contentment in all matters of earthly moment is inculcated, no man is forbidden to improve his condition and seek for purer and more excellent attainments. The wise man may strive to become wiser; the pure man may seek for greater purity; the holy man may aspire to a greater degree of holiness. The wants of the body may be all supplied in this life, hence it may be completely satified with the things of this life. The soul has infinite wants, they can be supplied only in the future, hence the soul can be satisfied only with the future and with things that are infinite and eternal. The Christian can never be satisfied with the largest earthly fortune. Money is not the soul's highest good. In its place it is valuable. It can purchase a hundred objects to gratify our curiosity and satisfy our wants. God has shown in his word that an idolatry of money, like an idolatry of dead images, will ruin the soul. He has exposed the tendency of money to corrupt the heart and lead the soul down from its high position and chain it to the dust; but he has never made money an insurmountable obstacle to eternal life. Many of the most pious men of past times, and of our age also, are men who have been favored by God with property, and these men will shine as bright, and no brighter, in the future life, as poor men who have had an equal degree of personal piety. Thus, while I would not dissuade men from the pursuit of wealth under proper circumstances, and to be used for proper objects, I would caution every man who is making money, or who is now in the possession of riches, to beware lest it corrupt his heart, poison his spirit, consume his piety, and corrode his hope of heaven. The good man will ever be comparing his riches with the pearl of great price, the fine residence in which he lives with the house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. And as he looks at one, the value of the other will diminish, and in proportion as his title to the heavenly world is sure, will his grasp upon wealth lessen. He will feel that this world can yield no permanent pleasure. Awaking in the likeness of Christ, and having the same physical, mental and moral image, all wisdom, all piety are his. There is no height beyond to which he can climb, and though his course may be progressive, it will be rather a progression of heaven itself, along which he will be borne from infinity to infinity, from eternity to eternity, always as happy, always as wise, always as holy as his nature can be. This is the portion of God's people; for this they wait, to this they aspire, and this they will surely reach. My brethren, if we should be satisfied only with the likeness of Christ, how humiliating it is that so many are striving to content themselves with barely as much goodness as can keep them from making a total shipwreck of salvation. The nature of religion is to reach forward. The spirit of Christ is progressive; and yet some disciples of Jesus seem to desire only as much piety as will give them a right to stay in the church and number themselves with the people of God. The great aim of the Christian life is a likeness of Christ, and yet but few are seeking it here.

Go Into All the World.

"Go ye therefore and teach all nations." Matthew 28: 19.

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Mark 16: 15.

The above scriptures declare a sending somewhere, for some purpose or design, some work to be done. This all would imply some necessity. The necessity seems to be that the human family had fallen into sin; and as sin is abomination to God, he has wisely laid a plan that, through the preaching of the word of the Son of God, man might be brought to a state of purity, or to favor and friendship with God. Now the church, by which the "Go ye therefore" is enforced, says to certain ones who are properly authorized, "Go and fill the commission."

Some one will say, "What are they to preach?" Why, the all things contained in the word of God; not your weaknesses, or shortcomings, short memories, or your unwillingness, or your difficulties, or the shortcomings of your neighbors, or the faults of those who can't see just as you do. But to the subject.

The word says "Go." This does not mean when you cannot help it. Do not have to be induced with invitations time and again, but go wherever they will hear, to the small and great. All have a claim to the word, and we think there is a fault, and a serious one, when there are calls time and again, where those who are sent by the churches, or can be, do not go. When the calls are not filled, perhaps the blood of some soul might be required at their hands, if those who are sent are not able to fill all the calls, to say nothing about the going where they are not called, but where the Spirit would seem to direct them to go. I would say, lay the subject before the church for the consideration of the case; and pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers, or to qualify such as are sent, that the work of the Lord may be carried on; that the gospel may be preached everywhere; that the light of the gospel may shine in the remotest parts of the earth, and that the foul places of our towns and cities may be lighted with the true light of the gospel. There are many places where the truth as taught by the brethren is not known. And where is the fault? Is it because they are too timorous? If it is this it ought not to be. But I believe the cause is there are not enough sent, and perhaps not caution enough in sending some who are sent.

Having briefly touched on the subject of sending or going to preach, I hope some one will treat it more fully.

"JESUS WILL GO WITH ME." A little girl four years old grew ill. One day her father was sitting beside her little bed, and as she turned to him with the question:

"Papa, does the doctor think I shall die?"

Her father with a very sad heart told his little daughter the truth. Then her pale face grew very sad, and she mused awhile on the dark graves she had looked down into, where the people were buried.

"Papa," she said tearfully, "the grave looks very dark. O, it is very dark, indeed. Papa, won't you go down with me into it?"

The strong arm she had been accustomed to lean on seemed to her a safguard in every hour of dread and danger.

With a bursting heart, her father told her he could not go with her till the Lord called him.

"Papa, won't you let mamma go with me?"

If she could nestle close in that loving bosom, and feel those loving arms around her, the grave would lose its gloom. The same answer almost broke the father's heart to give! She turned her face to the wall and wept. The dear lamb had been taught of Jesus, and she poured her heart out to him with a child's full faith. Soon she looked up with a joy-lighted face and said:

"Papa, the grave is not dark now Jesus will go with me."

"What is Your Life?"

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

The wish to die, bounded simply on the past or present of life, is unnatural. Apart from the Divine foreknowledge, which includes what is decreed absolutely as well as what is decreed conditionally, what is contrary as well as what is according to the Divine will, man was made to live forever. Death is no part of the scheme of God's dealings with man, except in so far as it embraces the possible yet undesirable results of man's free agency. After the All-Perfect had pronounced all things "good," death was introduced by the perverted exercise in man of the power that was designed to keep the finite in harmony with God forever. This exquisite mechanism, so "fearfully and wonderfully made," has been brought under destructive influences by the enemy of God and the hater of all good. Whatever its constitution may have been, as fitting it for a probation that may possibly issue in ruin, it was not meant to see corruption. "Death entered into the world by sin," and "the devil sinneth from the beginning." Rom. 5: 12. John 8: 44. 1 John 3: 8. He has "the power of death." Heb. 2: 13. "The wages of sin is death," temporal and eternal: and therefore Christ "tasted death for every man," in its physical and mental forms, that he might deliver them, who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage," and give them assured hope that they "shall not be hurt of the second death."

Through the catastrophe of the fall "we all do fade as a leaf." "Here have we no continuing city." We are as "a shadow that continueth not." "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of the grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away." "What is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." James 4: 14. This is not only an appropriate, but unspeakably momentous question for every one, at all times. "What is your life?" And the answer given is deeply impressive. It reveals the brevity of our earthly sojourn, the vanity of earthly pursuits, and the urgent necessity of "fleeing from the wrath to come," and "laying hold on eternal life." It is amazing that poor, sin-infected, wrath-smitten, death-threatened men and women, hastening with rapid strides to the tribunal of final judgment, can be so engrossed with the pleasures and hopes, gains and cares of this world, that they lose sight of the solemn thought that life is but a vapor, constantly growing thinner and less vital, and must ere long vanish into the gloom and agony and debasement and self-reproach of the second death, if "by well-doing" it end not in the light and joy and glory of Heaven. Not only the unregenerate, but the saints likewise, are often so eager in the pursuit of what is seen and temporal, that they too rarely pause to ponder the shortness and uncertainty of life. "The cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches," if they do not "choke the world, and render it unfruitful," so preoccupy the heart that it is not unfrequently difficult rightly to class them—whether with the elect or with the reprobate. With pain and alarm we must often witness a zest and avidity in the pursuit and enjoyment of what is temporary, which plainly indicate that the heart has its treasure on earth, and the pressing interrogatory of the Apostle is forgotten: "What is your life?" The increase of wealth, the desire for popularity and position, the lack of sympathy with measures that contemplate the advancement of Christ's kingdom by liberal contributions of dollars and cents, are sad evidences that even the children of God generally place a disproportionate value on the present life an end. Did we all believe verily that life is a vapor which is constantly vanishing, and will soon be all gone, we would put more into the "bags which wax not old," and lay up "treasure in the heavens that faileth not," and less in the bags that perish, for moth and rust to eat, and heirs to quarrel about. Every believer should inscribe the startling question of the Apostle as with the point of a diamond upon the mind and heart, so that the awful realities of the eternal world be not overshadowed and excluded by the interests of the present. "What is your life?" However it be employed, it is but a breath, a gasp, before we launch into eternity. It is an inch of time on which hang the destinies of our immortality. It is the "bud of being" which is to efflorese into the bloom of everlasting fragrance and beauty, or be blasted into the unsightly fungus of everlasting corruption and misery. In this ever-diminishing vapor are found the elements that are to make for us an endless duration of "joy unspeakable and full of glory," or a measureless era of unmitigated wretchedness. In this fragment of being are crowded the activity and development of soul which are to share the bliss and glory of Uncreated Majesty, purity and beauty, or the guilt and horror and punishment of "the devil and his angels." With renewed interest and overwhelming emphasis the question returns, "what is your life?" As breath after breath of the vapor vanishes into air, what is the record that is ever filling up to our account in the Court of Heaven? With what character, and in what relation to God and our fellows, does each moment, as it vanishes, leave us? Has the old year witnessed in us the death of a single carnal inclination? Has the vanishing of life been a vanishing of sin? Has there been a germination and development of the principle that, when the last atom of vapor disappears in the dark valley, will issue in the reconstitution of our mortal tabernacle in deathless vigor, youth and beauty? Does the new year look back on any buried evil which we have entombed with the year 1870? Are we more amalgamated to-day with the untainted, unearthly, death defying life which Christ brought into the world, than we were a year ago? Does the passing vapor leave behind it a face wan and haggard, looking into a rebuketul past, or radiant with hope, looking into a wished-for future? Is the evanescence of life a matter of joy rather than regret to us, in view of its issues beyond the shadowing portal of death? Misspent moments are misspent blessings, which have been purchased with the blood of Emmanuel. It cannot be otherwise than shocking to right-minded people to note the low estimate in which many of our brethren hold the span of time which God has allotted for our preparation for the world to come. Too often their visits among each other, instead of being occupied in edifying conversation, reading of scripture, singing and prayer, are spent in the idlest gossip, of scurrilous dissection of the conduct and motives of absent members, caricaturing some humble, heavy-tongued minister, and dishonoring their profession generally. Oh, brethren, you have forgotten, or never truly pondered, that "your life is a vapor," steadily diminishing, and that "we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ," to render an account "for every idle word." With life's wasting energies, and the evidences of the approach of the pale-horse rider, are we as trees planted by the rivers of water, bringing forth fruit in season, covered with leaves which time cannot wither, and amaranthine blossoms that exhale the sweetness of the Upper Eden? "What is your life?" Is it a well-spring of ever-gushing aspirations Godward, or is it a greedy pursuit of filthy lucre, a restless, unsatisfied groveling in the ever-vanishing and debasing pleasures of sense? Is "our life hid with Christ in God," so that the vapor, as it vanishes here, gathers into a golden cloud of unspeakable splendor in the uncreated firmament, or is it in the service af the flesh and the interest of Satan, eventually to sink in the stygian gulf of damnation, where the vapor will reappear in the dense clouds of guilt and terror which constitute "the blackness of darkness forever?" Oh, the solemn, all-comprehending question: "WHAT IS YOUR LIFE?"

A Rejoinder to Bro. A. B. Miller

Brother Miller, in his last epistle, in current volume, page 141, still contends that Caleb and Joshua were all of the six hundred thousand Israelites that left Egypt with Moses and Aaron, who were permitted to go into Canaan. He offers as an evidence "that everybody preaches it that way." The Savior, while upon the earth, said, "Wo unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets." Luke 6: 26. Hence this kind of evidence does not amount to much. I know the generality of people differ with me on this subject; but I find my views coincide with the best theological works of the age, and some of our ablest brethren, that the tribe of Levi was not debarred from going into Canaan, like the other disobedient tribes were. It is true, some of them fell in the wilderness on account of their disobedience, even Moses and Aaron; but as to the Levites as a tribe, I think I showed clearly, in Vol. 6, page 790, that they did go into the promised land.

Brother Miller has conceded this point, but he now takes the position that the Levite tribe was not recognized as Israelites, and consequently was not counted with the six hundred thousand who crossed over the Red Sea dry shod. He offers as one of his proofs upon this point, the 49th chapter of Genesis, where old Jacob, before he yielded up the ghost, called around him his twelve sons to make known to them that which was to befall them in the latter days. Brother Miller said: "For some reason best known to that old patriarch, Levi did not receive a blessing." We will notice this chapter a little, and see whether Levi did obtain a blessing or not. We find that Levi received the same blessing that Simeon did, as they were addressed jointly. And in the 28th verse of the same chapter, after Jacob had spoken concerning each of his twelve sons, we read: "All these are the twelve tribes of Israel; and this is it that their father spake unto them, and blessed every one, according to his blessing he blessed them." Now, if there is a shadow of evidence in this chapter indicating that the tribe of Levi was not to be counted Israelites, I have failed to notice it; but I think it establishes the fact clearly that they were, for it reads, "All these," referring to the twelve sons of Jacob, "are the twelve tribes of Israel." In 1 Kings, 18: 31, we read, "And Elijah took twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob, unto whom the word of the Lord came, saying Israel shall be thy name." Is not this sufficient evidence to settle this matter beyond controversy? Further proof upon this point would seem almost unnecessary. But I will notice another argument adduced by the brother, and then bring my article to a close. He refers to the third chapter of Numbers, where the Lord chose the Levites from among the children of Israel in lieu of all the first born, who had been dedicated to God, in commemoration of his slaying the first born of the Egyptians and preserving those of the Israelites.

Now let it be remembered that this was after the Levites had proven their integrity to the Lord at Mount Sinai. Moses, after he had been upon the mount forty days communicating with God, came down with the law and found the people making a great noise, worshiping the golden calf, which Aaron had reared up for them to pacify their rebellious dispositions. Moses, after severely rebuking them for their unfaithfulness, "Stood in the gate of the camp and said, who is on the Lord's side let him come unto me and all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him." He then instructs them what to do, "and the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses," for he had said: "Consecrate yourselves to-day to the Lord, even every man upon his son and upon his brother, that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day." Previous to this time the tribe of Levi was known only as common Israelites. But this act of obedience in separating themselves from the other idolatrous tribes, (for it is evident they were not engaged in worshipping the golden calf) and gathering themselves unto Moses, which caused the Lord to say, "Behold I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel instead of all the first born that openeth the matrix among the children of Israel, therefore they shall be mine." Numbers 8: 12. Now their being consecrated unto the service of the Lord is no reason that they were not still recognized as Israelites. And to illustrate this fact, suppose the President calls out a certain number of his constituents for some particular purpose, would this disqualify them from being counted citizens of the United States?

Long after the Israelites had possessed the promised land, good, old Elijah still recognized the tribe of Levi as Israelites. After he had discomfited the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal, "he took twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob," and with them he built an altar in the name of the Lord.

LIFE AT HOME; or the Family and its members. By Wm. Aikman.—Published by S R Wells, 389 Broadway, New York. Price $1.50.

We seldom review a book that we can recommend with as much freedom as we do this one. It affords useful instruction to every member of the family, and ought to be read by all. We give an extract from the preface:

"At a time when the sacredness of the marriage relation is so much called in question, and when the bonds which hold the family together are in danger of being lightly esteemed, any attempt to exalt the family life may be hopeful of good.

The failure to reach the highest happiness of married life, and the best results of family training are caused, we may believe, not so much by willfulness as by ignorance or inexperience. If, at the outset, a few cautions and suggestions, founded on maturer thought and larger observation, were received, mistakes could be corrected and errors avoided which too often occasion long years of disappointment and sorrow. If this book shall make such suggestions, its design will be accomplished.

The Bible is incomparably the best manual for the regulation of the family In these chapters much has been made of its teachings, and it will be an unspeakable reward if the writer shall have done anything to enhance its value in any home.

All that is hopeful for our country and the world is from the family.—Christian homes are the want of the world. Have them, and the future of the Church and therefore the well-being of the race is secure. These pages are sent forth with a very deep desire to bring, if possible, the blessed light of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ into the family circle.—That light will fill any home with a radiance of peace and joy."

We also offer the following paragraphs from the chapter headed the "Family Relations," which we are constrained to endorse:

"Proof from the Bible is sometimes asked against the practice of polygamy. I reply that the whole Bible is against it, from the first chapter, where God said, "I will make a help-meet for him," to the last, where the "Bride the Lamb's wife" is seen descending out of heaven from God.—And every metaphor, without, as far as I know, an exception, has in view simply and only one wife. To add a plural would be to rob figure and illustration of all their force and beauty, and in many cases to make them only absurd.

The first creation was that of one wife. Why, when the earth was to be peopled, when, if ever, it would be expedient and necessary that there should be a plurality of wives, why were not more than one created, if the well-being of man were best promoted by such an arrangement?

And what was the fact at the beginning, has been continued as a fact ever since. The race has been propagated in pairs, with a continuance and precision which is wholly inexplicable on any other theory than that of an original intention of the Creator and Preserver of men. An equal number of each sex has been born into the world from century to century, through all the variations of time and circumstances, and has perpetually been declaring that one husband with one wife meets and fills the idea of the nuptial relation.

Our Lord's words, "They twain shall be one flesh"—A man shall leave father and mother, and "shall cleave to his wife," point unerringly to the same truth, and clearly do not countenance, even by implication, a plurality. A man shall cleave to his three wives! They four shall be one flesh! You smile at the absurdity, while the grand and beautiful truth which he taught has vanished away.

This general drift of the Bible, an equatorial current that sweeps in one direction through it all, is to my mind a mightier argument than a direct precept could have been. An announced command might be limited and confined to the time and the circumstances in which it was given, and its force be evaded, as many ordinances of the Bible are, by arguments built upon the changes of the ages. Not so this, which through all the forty centuries of the Bible, presents the same conception of the family life, upon which every figure and illustration is based.

That ideal of the family contemplates only one husband and one wife. It presents one father and one mother at its head, and children who are fruit and pledge of their one love. Think, if you can without a smile, of a family gathering round the family altar, where the father, as priest of the house, offers up their worship, with a number of wives and mothers around him, his wives and their mothers! Is it a lovely type of the church of Christ or of the family in heaven?

No, polygamy is born not out of the chastity but out of the lusts of men. Only what is animal in man asks for it. No true man desires more than one wife, and that wife ceases to be a woman in the highest and holiest sense when another woman sits equal with her as wife and mother. All that is purest and best in us cries out, Let there be one husband round whom one wife can throw her arms and say, proudly and joyfully, "He is mine, mine alone! I know that no other is on the throne of his heart!" Let there be one wife upon whom a husband may look, while he holds her to his bosom with inexpressible affection and says, "She is beyond and above all others dearer and better. I want none else, she is queen of my heart and life!"

Supplement.

With our next issue we expect to send out an extra, or supplement, of eight pages, COMPANION size. It will be entirely devoted to the subject of tobacco, and we hope it will receive a careful reading. We shall print an extra edition, which we will supply at the rate of $2 per 100, postage paid. It is an item of no small expense to us, but feeling a deep interest in the reform of tobacco users, we are willing to make some sacrifice for its success.

Brother Beer and family have again returned, pleased with their visit, and at least somewhat improved in health, but we regret that brother Beer is not entirely restored. We still hope that the summer will bring increased health and strength.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Bible the Word of God.

"The Bible the word of God?" "No," says a young skeptic who had been reading an infidel book. "No! it is the invention of men."

But the Bible claims to be the word of God, does it not?

"Yes, the men who wrote it pretend that they 'spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost,' and that what they said was a 'thus saith the Lord.' That was only a cunning deception, in order to make men the more readily believe it."

If the Bible, then, is not what it claims to be, it is, you think, an imposture, and its writers are deceivers and liars?

"Yes, that is what I believe."

Good men will not lie and deceive, would they?

"Of course not."

Then the Bible, you are sure, could not have been written by good men?

"I feel certain it was not."

And, if not the work of good men? It must have been the work of bad men.

"I believe it was."

Now answer me candidly, does the Bible condemn sin, and threaten bad men with punishment?

"Yes."

Does it forbid and condemn lying and deception?

"Yes."

Does it declare that liars shall perish; that Ananias for lying was struck dead, and that false prophets who speak deceit in the name of the Lord, and all who love and make a lie shall be shut out of the kingdom of heaven?

"It does."

And would bad men, false prophets, deceivers and liars, make a book that condemns their own sins and threatens themselves with everlasting punishment?

"They would not be likely to, certainly."

Then the Bible could not have been written by bad men, could it?

"I must admit it is not easy to see how it could."

If, then, as you admit, it could not be the "invention" of bad men—because they could not be guilty of an imposture, who else could be its author but God? And if it is God's book, why not believe it and obey it?

The true character of the new religious movements in some of the eastern States is gradually developing itself. We have from the first regarded it as essentially at variance with an acknowledgment of the inspiration of the Bible, but were not aware that it is planted so squarely upon an anti-bible platform as it now appears. One of its most zealous adherents and eloquent advocates gives expression to the following: "In my opinion the first thing to be overthrown is the doctrine of the inspiration of the Bible. That is the citadel that must be knocked to pieces before we can get an inch of religious progress." This then, is one of the primary objects that "free" religion would accomplish. In other words, its great aim is to deliver men over to their natural passions, affections, propensities, etc., under the sole guidance of reason and human wisdom. If any parts of the Bible suit their views they will accept them, not as God's word, but the word of man. No one who has any faith in the Bible, and believes that "all scripture is given by inspiration of God," can indulge these errorists with a hearing. The battles for the Bible are not all fought yet. The devil has gone church building, and is trying the new tactics of preaching religion, but a religion that first of all denies that there is a religion of inspiration.—Church Advocate.

Have at least one book in your library in which all the good children did not die. My early impression from Sunday-school books was that religion was very unhealthy. It seemed a terrible distemper that killed every boy and girl it touched. If I found myself some day better than common, I corrected the mistake for fear I should die; although it was the general opinion that I was not in much danger from oversanctity. But I do not believe that children may have religion and yet live through it. Timothy lived to grow up, and we are credibly informed that little Samuel woke. Indeed, the best boys I ever saw occasionally upset things, and got boisterous and had the fidgets.—From Crumbs Swept Up.

When the christian entereth into a contract he considereth well whether he shall be able to fulfil the conditions thereof.

Justice should reign supreme in the principles of all.

Love of the Lord is better than fear of penalties and punishment.

Modesty is brighter and more attractive than precious diamonds.

Neutrality in the disputes of others, enables us to act as peacemakers.

Obedience to the laws of God and man smoothes the pathway of life.

Piety and purity dispel the clouds of adversity and sorrow

Virtue and integrity are the pillars of justice, peace and safety.

A Report of The Church in California.

RELATING TO THE VISIT OF BRETHREN MILLER AND STURGIS TO THE PACIFIC COAST.

Whereas, we are constantly receiving, letters from many parts of the Brotherhood inquiring: "What the mission was for?" "What was done?" "Why did they return home so soon?" "We gave our money to send them to California and Oregon, to preach, and now we hear they are at home. What is the matter?" and many other such inquiries: hence, we feel it our duty to give a report of the proceedings of said brethren, while they were with us.

They reached the house of Eld. Geo. Wolf, Oct. 12th, 1870, and remained a few days with the brethren in the immediate neighborhood; and on the 30th October sailed from San Francisco for Portland Oregon. Made their visit, and returned to California on the 19th November, and occupied their time, in preaching, and visiting their relatives and brethren in Nappa, Stockton, and after places, until the 10th of December and on said day the brethren of California assembled in Church council, it being the time of our quarterly church meeting, Eld. Miller and Sturgis met with us. After singing, exhortation, and prayers, we proceeded to try the standing of the church, by receiving our baptismal covenant, as our custom is to do. Eld. Geo. Wolf, presiding, he immediately proceeded, to take the voice of the church, when it was found there was not a dissenting voice; but all the members were ready to hear the teachings of our Master, and abide by the Law of our Lord, and Savior Jesus Christ, whereunto we were called, and made free from the law of carnal commandments.

Next, brother Wolf requested brethren Miller and Sturgis to read their letters of recommendation from A. M., whereupon they read letters, signed by brethren in South Bend Ind. The church received them on said recommendation. Then the church proceeded to attend to business of a local nature, among which, was, the case of A. P. Gips, Ills., which trouble was amicably adjusted, the brethren (Miller and Sturgis) acting as representatives of the brethren in Ills

After the local business had been dispensed with, Bro. Wolf requested Bros. Miller and Sturgis to make known to the church their mission to California. They both spoke at considerable length, telling us they were sent by the brethren of the East, to see how you do, and to get an expression of Union; and that we would agree to be subject to the decisions of A. M. This being their mission as well as to preach the gospel in California. Then they asked us to give such an expression of union. We claimed we had given the ordinary expression of union and fellowship with the entire brotherhood, when we renewed our baptismal covenant in their presence, and that we stood in full union with all the followers of the meek and lovely Jesus; believing his word to be sufficient to guide us in all things. Hence we reject all creeds, articles of faith, and disciplines of human invention; believing them to be a direct transgression upon the wisdom of God, for he has given us a perfect law to govern us in all things.

However it was found that [our mode of] feet washing was the great trouble, and hence the desire of brethren Miller and Sturgis to get us to acknowledge the Minutes of A. M., which, had we done, would have been bartering away our rights, in the gospel, and that obtained in the brotherhood in A. M., in 1856, for the decision of A. M, of 1859, the latter clause of art 2nd reads thus: "It also advises brethren when organizing new churches to organize them in the practice of the ordinances. according to the general order of the brethren" And the minutes of 1870 say: that Eld's. Miller and Sturgis were to come, to the Pacific coast to organize churches, and set in order things needed. How different this mission from the request that went to the Annual Meeting from the Western Dist. of Pa., which says to send brethren to Cal. and Oregon, as Missionaries for one year, to aid the church there in spreading the gospel of Christ C. F. C. Vol. 6, Page 407. Whereupon a warm discussion followed; we claimed we stood on the compromise of 1856, and kept our pledge in good faith, enjoying our liberty to follow the example of our Lord and Master in the ordinance of feetwashing, as we understand it.

When the evening drew on we adjourned until after public preaching; then the church assembled again in council, and the discussion continued until near midnight, when the voice of the church was taken, and in that vote we reserved the right to reject everything that is not in harmony with the law of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the right to practice the single mode of feetwashing as we have done heretofore; and thus the labor of the brethren closed in California, and they returned to their homes.

We have taken fresh courage to fight on in the good, and noble cause that we have enlisted in, and commend the result and ourselves to the care of our Heavenly Father, who is able to save to the uttermost all that will trust in him.

Finally brethren, we feel reluctant to express our regrets that so much time, talent, and money are wasted in disputing over questions of this kind. We had for years entreated and invited colaborers to this coast, to help us in the good cause; and when we heard that Bros. Miller and Sturgis, were coming to our assistance we were made to rejoice, but were disappointed on learning they would stay so short a time, and not visit half the places where there are scattered brethren, and that the brethren in the East differ so much from us in judging what our needs and wants are. By order of the church, a copy of this report is furnished to the Companion.

HAMILTON, Mo.)
April 4th, 1871.)

Brother Editor; In view of our approaching District Meeting, we submit the following thoughts to the members composing the Missouri District. Concurring with the views and suggestions of Elders J. Harshey, J. Ullery, and S. S. Mohler, (see Gospel Visitor, page 61.) We would in connection say, not only is it desirable that all the church should be represented by Delegates, but also desire all the Elders, Ministers and Deacons in the state to attend our District Meeting. In the multitude of counsellors there is safety.

We also call the attention of our scattered members through the state where no churches are organized, to endeavor to report their condition and wants to the District Meeting, in order that there may be more union and connection effected with all the members in the state. In view of the above we desire a general representation. We will farther say, to our Kansas and Missouri members, having succeeded last year in getting the grant for half fare privileges, on the H. and St. Jos. R. R., if desirable to the members we will apply again and report the result of our efforts through the Companion.—Would however say, we feel a delicacy to proceed with the arrangements at a very early day, inasmuch as the last Annual Meeting appointed brother C. Custer of Philadelphia for the East, and brother J. Beeghly for the West, to make the necessary arrangements with the different Rail Road companies, for half fare privilege. We are also at a loss to know how to proceed in relation to brother Custer's advice in regard to ascertaining the number and names who will attend the Annual Meeting as we are inclined to think our Kansas, Missouri, and probably most all the districts in the state, do not know the number or the names going especially the delegates to be sent until after the various District Meetings are held, and as the time at least of some District Meetings, is just shortly before the time of Annual Meeting we think the time rather short to have the necessary correspondence, and make the necessary arrangements.

What say the Missouri and Kansas members, as all the Kansas and Missouri members will take the Penna. Central Rail Road to Harrisburg, at least we think this is the best route. We hope to have more light on this subject. We think our Kansas and Missouri members will all be pleased to take said route, provided we can make the necessary arrangements with brother C. Custer as required by said Rail Road Company.

Fraternally yours
GEORGE WITWER.

Brother Holsinger; I learn by the Companion that you have to some extent, by donation and otherwise, been supplying the wants of some who were not able to pay for the C. F. C. The case I wish to represent to you in the fear of God, is that of a sister, who seems to have a desire to read the C. F. C., for which she says they are positively not able to pay. They have a large family, her husband having to labor by the day, and she at every thing that she can put hands to, to earn their scanty fair. I can truthfully say that they are both very industrious. The object of my writing is to see if by you she can receive the much desired C. F. C., as a gift for one year, from the time you receive this? Her husband is not a professer of religion. If you publish the above, please will omit name.

Yes, we have paper for all such cases; and you have taken the right way of relating the case. Let all poor brethren or sisters get some truthful responsible person to represent their case at our office, and they shall be supplied. Some pretend to think hard of us for refusing to give our paper free to poor persons who use tobacco. But we think no honest person will fault us when they look properly at the matter. We must work hard for our living, and deny ourself of luxuries, and we cannot see why we should give away of our hard earnings to persons who spend their money in such a useless manner to their own injury. We could not feel justified in doing so. But with persons who are industrious and economical, but are needy, we will share our last loaf if necessary

Dear Companion; Since my last I have been traveling some, and I suppose you will carry the tidings to those who love church news. I left home on the 15th of February last; went to the Canton congregation. Labored one week among the members of the church and others with great satisfaction. Several became obedient to the Lord. Among them were two old persons, one 63, the other 64 years old The congregation under the care of our worthy elder, D. J. Peck, is in a very prosperous condition.

I also visited the Georgetown congregation. Held very interesting meetings in this congregation. but no additions

I returned home on the first of March, found my oldest brother, Adam Wise, had been preaching for some days in our own congregation. And to my great joy found our oldest son, now in his 16th year, a baptized believer. Surely great is the joy over a repenting son. Praise the Lord, oh my soul.

On the 15th of March I went to the station congregation. Remained one week. Had the pleasure of seeing souls added to the Lord. The station congregation is in Greene county, Pa. They have had a revival. Since New Year there have been some twenty-five additions in that congregation. May the Lord increase their piety. Amen.

Fraternally yours,
JOHN WISE.

Scenery Hill, March, 1871.

Brother Henry; We expect ministering brethren to be with us in the Montgomery church a few days before the Western Pa., District Meeting. Appointments for preaching at Gettysburg and at Samuel Rarigh's school house on Thursday evening, April 27th .Brethren coming by way of Indiana who intend to be with us, will please inform us by letter, and we will meet them on Thursday at the Indiana House. We are about five miles from the place of holding the district meeting. My address is Decker's Point, Indiana county, Pa.

The Proposed Change.

I would prefer our paper in folio form, like the regular newspapers, as I conceive it would save you considerable trouble and be more convenient to your readers, and at the same time would admit of more space, with the use of good, large type, so desirable to many of our aged brethren and sisters.

P. S. NEWCOMER

I don't want the print smaller. I don't want the paper larger; let well enough alone, and boil down a little more if need be. ISAAC PRICE.

Go on, brethren; give us your opinions, boiled down and skimmed off

FOREST CITY, Mo., April 3, 1871.

Dear Brother—We started for Missouri on the 20th of March, from Bull's Gap, Tennessee, and arrived safe in Forest City, Mo., on the 23d, over one thousand miles in three and a half days, in good health, for which we are thankful to our Heavenly Father for his kind protection. We are now living with our kind brethren in Christ, in Holt county, Mo., who have lived here some twelve or thirteen years without a preacher. We found them strong in the faith once delivered to the saints, and in love with one another. May God grant that we may continue so until he calls us home to him in heaven.

We have had two meetings since we arrived here, with crowded houses and very good attention. I think, from present appearances, that good may be done here for the enlargement of Christ's kingdom, by strictly preaching the word and a common and free salvation to all who are willing to accept Christ as their saviour. I think this a good country, so far as I am able to judge, and I am very well pleased with my exchange, especially for not finding much pride among the brethren and sisters. I could tell them from other people as soon as I saw them. I could tell that they were meek followers of the Lamb. I am sorry that I cannot say the same of all, everywhere, but it has got so, in some places, that we cannot tell them from other people. Oh, what a pity!

We have all kinds of people here, from every nation. I have been completely beat. I heard two persons in conversation the other day, which was the first time I ever heard so much talk that I did not understand. If they cannot understand me better than I do them, I must say that I have got to a place where I cannot preach the gospel to every creature. But strange things do occur.

My beloved brethren and sisters, we want your prayers in our behalf, that our faith fail not.

Persons who may wish to correspond with me on any subject, can do so by addressing me at Forest City, Holt county, Mo.

A. J. CORRELL.

Notice.

The Brethren at Pipe Creek, Md., contemplate holding their next Communion meeting, commencing (if the Lord will) at 1 o'clock, P. M. on Saturday, the third day of June next. They extend a cordial invitation especially to their ministering brethren in Virginia and Tennessee, who may go to A. M to stop on their return. We wish our dear brethren, who may see this notice, to try and make an arrangement to this effect before leaving their homes. By request of the Brethren in Council.

PHILIP BOYLE.

Answer to Query.

In Companion, Vol. 7, No. 13, appears a query. The parable of the mustard seed. See Matthew 13: 31, 32. By brother J. Z. Gottwals, who says: "Will brother Henry, or some other brother or sister that is not under the influence of tobacco, please give through the Companion, an explanation on the above parable of the Savior. I cannot reconcile my mind, because tobacco seed is smaller than mustard seed."

Now I do not want to run before brother Henry or any other brother or sister, in attempting an answer to the above query, but if any one else has any other solution let them give it and I will gladly exchange the following for a better.

1st. There were no tobacco seeds in Palestine, consequently tobacco seed is out of the question.

2d. We learn from history that the mustard seed of Palestine is exceedingly small, many times smaller than the mustard seed of America. And again, the herb produced from the mustard seed of Palestine grows many times larger than the herb produced by the American mustard seed. This satisfies.

THOMAS D. LYON.

Queries.

I would like if some brother would give an answer through the Companion, to the following query: Is it contrary to the teachings of the Savior, to have debates? Understand me, I claim there is more than one kind of debates. I will try to explain this. To debate merely for the sake of argument, and try to establish an error in the minds of the people, something we do not believe ourselves, I believe to be wrong. But when we speak from honest convictions and are backed up by the record of God, and thus try to convince people and lead them into the truth, for we know there is difference among the people,—this kind of debating I claim to have a good effect. We are to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. And who are we to contend with? Evidently with those who do not see as we do. Consequently here is a difference of opinion and we enter into a discussion and try to convince our opponent of his error. If we succed in this we have gained a brother, and have done a good work.

Now this is my view of debating; I hope however if I am wrong some brother will please put me in the right way, for I desire to do right and to be obedient to the teachings of my heavenly master, as I understand them.

A. B. MILLER.

Please announce, Brother Holsinger, that the brethren of the Antietam congregation intend holding a lovefeast on the 18th day of May at Price's meeting house. A cordial invitation is given to the brethren to be with us. JACOB PRICE.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

At Buena Vista, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, March 13th, CLARA ALELIEA, daughter of V. C. Fisher, aged 2 years, 7 months and 13 days. Funeral service by Mr. Shutt and the writer, from Amos. 4 : 12. This was the only child of brother and sister Fisher, and it was very hard for them to give it up ; but knowing that their loss is its infinite gain, they resign themselves to the will of him who doeth all things well. John Nicholson.

In Bristol, Trumbull county, Ohio, March 18th, CHRISTENA THORP, aged 52 years and 4 months. She was the mother of eight children ; four of them have gone before her to the spirit world, and four are left with their father to mourn her loss, which, it is hoped, is her great gain. Her disease was consumption. Her maiden name was Kagy, daughter of Abraham and Catharine Kagy. Her mother died in 1857, and her father on the 4th of February last. She was a member of the Zion church for a number of years. She was followed to the grave by many sorrowing relatives and friends on the 20th of March. The funeral occasion was improved by ——Askey, from Rev. 14 : 13. E. N. Barb.

March 29th, in the Buffalo Valley Branch, Union county, Pa., at the residence of her daughter, Elizabeth Reber, sister SUSANNA ROYER, widow of brother Joel Royer, deceased, aged 91 years, 9 months and 11 days. She was the mother of fourteen children ; eleven are living and married and have children, except one. Her grandchildren number 79, and great grandchildren 103, in all numbering 196. She was born in Lancaster county and removed to this county forty years ago, and lived a consistent Christian life for many years and died in peace. Funeral occasion improved from Philippians 1 : 21, by John L. Beaver and the writer.

Elder Isaac Myers.

In Rogersville, Ohio, March 31st, SAML. G. ELLENBERGER, aged 52 years, 5 months and 4 days. He leaves a wife and one child to mourn his loss. He never made a profession, but said before he died that if God would spare him he would serve Him, and in this condition he left the world. Alas ! how many are spared for years and do not serve the Lord. Funeral discourse by the writer, from Psalms 16 : 15, to a large assembly

John Nicholson.

Departed this life in the Mohican church, Wayne county, Ohio, April 3rd, brother EMMANUAL BUECHLY, aged 68 years, 11 months and 19 days.

In the death of brother Buechly the church militant has sustained an almost irreparable loss, but the spirits of just men made perfect have gained a companion. He was the oldest of the family of brother Abraham and sister Elizabeth Buechly, and so far as I know the first one to die. He was born in what is now known as the Elkhorn Church, Somerset county, Pa., and has resided in Ohio some years. He has been a faithful minister of the gospel for many years, but of late has been rather feeble in bodily health : he was, however, in usual health. On the 2d of April, in the evening, he engaged in family worship, as usual, after which his companion said it was rather early to go to bed, to which he replied that he would lie down on the lounge a little while, which he did, and in a few minutes he drew his breath a little loud, when his son raised him up, and in a minute or two more he was dead, without speaking a word and without a struggle. He leaves his wife—an aged sister and mother in Israel—and a number of children, who are all members of the church ; and above all, he leaves a good name, which the wise man of old said was "rather to be chosen than riches." On the 5th the funeral sermon was preached at the Kilbuck meeting-house, which was his usual place of meeting, by the writer and Elder Jacob Garver, from Rev. 14 : 13, a large concourse of people being present, after which we conveyed his body to the Mohican grave-yard, where we placed him in his resting place to sleep, until he who once said "Lazarus come forth," shall send his angel to call him forth to an "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and which fadeth not away."

P. J. Brown.

In the Chippewa church, Wayne county, Ohio, WILLIAM, son of Simon and Elizabeth WINTER, by his foot getting fast in the wheels of a steam stave-cutter and getting his leg so badly mangled that the doctor had to take it off, and in about 30 minutes he died. He lived about nine hours after he was hurt. He suffered a great deal, but he bore it very patiently until he fell asleep in death. Age 21 years, 6 months and 3 days. Funeral occasion improved by brother George Irvin and the writer, to a very large concourse of people J. B. Shoemaker.

Near North Georgetown, Columbiana Co., Ohio, March 17, sister SARAH E. HEASTAND, wife of brother Samuel Heastand, aged 21 years, 4 months and 1 day. She was the mother of two children, the younger child being 12 days old when she died. She left a kind and affectionate husband and a large circle of relatives and sympathizing friends to mourn their great loss, but not as those that have no hope. The occasion was improved by brother Daniel Peck and others to a large concourse of people.

To Nebraska, California, and Kansas, and the B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The "Burlington Route," as called, lies right in the path of the Star of Empire. It runs almost immediately in the center of the great westward movement of emigration. Crossing Illinois and Iowa, it strikes the Missouri river at three points.

These three points are the gateways into three great sections of the trans-Missouri region.

The Northern gate is Omaha, where the great Pacific road will take you to the land of gold and grapes, sunny mountains, and perpetual summer.

The middle gate is Plattsmouth, which opens upon the south half of Nebraska, south of the Platte river, a region unsurpassed on the continent for agriculture and grazing. Just here are the B. & M. Railroad lands, concerning which Geo. S. Harris, the land officer at Burlington, Iowa, can give you all information, and in the heart of them is Lincoln, the State Capital and present terminus of the road.

The Southern gate leads to Kansas, by connections with the St. Joe Road at Hamburg running direct to St. Joe and Kansas City

The trains of the Burlington run smoothly and safely, and make all connections. It runs the best of coaches, Pullman Palace and Pullman dining cars, and should you take the journey for the journey's sake alone, you will be repaid ; or take it to find a home or a farm, and you cannot find either better than among the B. & M. lands, where you can buy on ten years' credit, and at a low price.

THE

Christian Family Companion

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements ; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Pilgrim's Wants.

"But my God shall supply all your needs, according to his riches in glory, by Christ Jesus." Phil. 4: 13.

I want that adorning divine,
Thou only, my God, canst bestow;
I want in these beautiful garments to shine,
Which distinguish thy household below.

I want ev'ry moment to feel
That thy Spirit dwells in my heart,
That his power is present to cleanse and to heal,
And newness of life to impart.

I want, ah! I want to attain
Some likeness, my Savior, to thee,
That longed-for resemblance to thee to regain,
Thy comeliness put upon me.

I want to be marked for thine own,
Thy seal on my forehead to wear,
To receive the new name on the mystic white stone,
Which none but thyself can declare.

I want so in thee to abide,
As to bring forth some fruit to thy praise,
The branch which thou promis'dst, though feeble and dried,
May languish, but never decays.

I want thine own hand to unbind
Each tie to terrestrial things,
Too tenderly cherished, too closely entwined,
Where my heart too tenaciously clings.

I want by my aspect serene,
My actions and words to declare,
That my treasure is placed in a country unseen,
That my heart and affections are there.

I want,—and this sums up my prayer,
To glorify thee till I die;
Then calmly to yield up my soul to thy care,
To sleep without fear or a sigh.

Shanesville, Ohio. LYDIA LAWYER

Saved.

One day in my history, while viewing the scenes of life, passing from one picture to another, I came to one that particularly attracted my attention. It was the picture of a youth who had been pardoned of all past guilt. The load was gone; the stains removed; all washed away in Jesus' blood; his countenance beamed with joy and the love of God. He walked in his statutes—passed along smoothly. Not a trouble, not a sorrow to harrass his soul; but basked in the light of God, while Jesus smiled upon him.

Farther on was another picture. Here the young man was arrested by temptation; it held him, told him of pleasure, of happiness, that it could not be wrong, that all this would be enjoyment; was surrounded by wicked influences. No loving mother there to tell him "Beware!" No fond father to direct his footsteps; no kind friend to advise him to flee. But it seemed that this was the hour when father, mother and friends all were absent, that the tempter came to his hellish power. The young man tottered, he fell—yielded to Satan's soothing chains.

I looked, and behold devils danced in revelry around him in all their demoniac horror, and if there could be such a thing, there was a joy in hell. Then I looked up higher and saw Jesus have a sorrowful countenance. Oh, how sad he looked then pleading at the right hand of the throne. He showed his hands, his side, his feet. Angels were bathed in tears; they wept, they sighed. And if such a thing could be done there was sadness in heaven.

Near by was another picture. And there I saw the repentant youth kneeling before the throne of grace, pleading for mercy. God heard the prayer. Then I saw him again clothed in the favor of the Father. What glory filled his soul and how quickly the scene changed! Devils fled and hid themselves, and sadness was in hell. Again I looked up and saw Jesus wear a smiling face; the clouds that overshadowed it were all gone; angels shouted, "Glory to God!" they sang for joy, rays of heavenly healing light beamed all around, strains of celestial music were borne on holy breezes to the ears of the Almighty, and there was joy in heaven.

Tender ministering aid came to him, and I saw him smile in the light of God, saved from the jaws of hell.—N. W. Christian Advocate.

Query. John 12: 24.

TO BROTHER J. H. S., HOLIDAYSBURG, PA.

Dear Brother: By your request, I will give my views upon John 12: 24, which reads:—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." This language was used by the Savior immediately after he said, "The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified." The last quotation had a direct allusion to himself; and also the first, doubtless, alludes to himself, in part at least. One feature or peculiarity, prominent in the teachings of the Savior, is, that of using things natural to illustrate things spiritual, that the vague minds of his hearers might comprehend more readily the important truths he was teaching. In the days of the Savior and Apostles it was a difficult matter to fix upon the mind the fact of the consequent resurrection from the dead. In considering this subject, Paul, in the 15th chapter of 1st Cor., reasons thus: "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die; and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be; * * * * but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him." Also gives us to understand that the body "is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." Now if a "corn of wheat," fall into the ground and die not, it "abideth alone," —remains simply a grain of wheat and nothing more. But if it die—goes through a necessary change and comes forth by the might of God's power, it produces "much fruit." The Savior knew at the time he used the language under consideration, that the time of his death was at hand—that his body must "fall into the ground." For it was needful that he should die and be buried. Because "Thus it is written and thus it behooved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day." Luke 24: 46. Had not the Savior died, or had he not come forth from the grave, where would there have been "much fruit?" But the mighty power of God raised him up, and in a glorified state, took him to his right hand in heaven, that he might draw all men unto him, and thus have "much fruit."—"He become the first-fruits of them that slept." The first to overcome death, and, thus having destroyed the power of death, has most triumphantly opened up the way from the grave to the life, liberty, and joys of heaven.

In the grain of wheat there is a germ, which, through the power of God—laws of nature—expands, and throws off the outer shell, comes forth and grows up a beautiful plant, producing "much fruit." This planting in the ground and dying of the grain, is necessary to the reproduction of its like, or perchance something better and with great increase.

So in the corruptible tenement of clay of man there is a precious germ, that, through the mighty power of God, at death of the body, expands and produces much fruit of a glorified nature or, perchance, as Paul says, "of some other grain." It is said that that part of the seed that seems to perish in the ground is taken up by the growing plant, and again united to it so that no part of the original grain really perishes. So with man, "corruption shall put on incorruption," soul and body shall be reunited and "God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him and to every seed his own body."

We might make a very appropriate application of the text under consideration on this wise: God hath provided a field, or vineyard, or kingdom; and his blessed Son has said, "except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," etc. Regeneration—that is reproduction of divine life in the soul—is necessary, that we may see and enter into the kingdom; must be planted with Christ, must be crucified, yea, die, that the result might be much fruit unto eternal life. Except we die to sin, to the world and to self we abide alone—remain simply a unit, no religious light or influence, no fruit or riches laid up in heaven, are of but little consequence in this life, living alone for self without hope and without God. But if we die—are planted together with Christ; are buried with him in baptism, we come forth through the renovating influence of God's grace, new creatures, and abide not alone, but have much fruit, become in possession of the Holy Spirit and the christian graces flowing in the soul, exerting an influence all around. Then, when the harvest comes, shall be gathered home with well-filled sheaves, the time of the Lord's gathering his "wheat into the garner" having come.

As with individuals, so we may reason relative to communities or congregations. Where there is a body of believers that have been truly planted, and have really died to the world and self, and are alive to God, there is much fruit manifested. As a good and beautiful field of wheat is ripening for the harvest so are they: every head, because of much fruit, is bowed to the breeze of God's smiles. Humility and love is in every soul. As the pollen of a blooming field of wheat freely mingles and assists in vitalizing and bringing to maturity every embryo grain in each head, causing it to be weighty, so it is in a community of true brethren and sisters. Charity, love, forbearance, and all the graces mingle and give vitality to the blessings of God to every individual member, causing a growth in grace, and thus helping to bear one another's burdens, there is, as a following consequence, much fruit. And on such a field or vineyard the Lord looks down with an approving smile, and when the day comes that he will say to his reapers, "The grain is ripe, thrust in the sickle," what a harvest there will be of well filled sheaves, and a glorious ingathering of wheat into the garner, in the heavenly store house.

On the other hand, what a striking contrast is noticeable where there may be found a body of professed disciples of the Lord who may have been planted but did not die to sin and self. Each individual seems to abide alone, and seems to say "am I my brother's keeper." Charity commences at home and remains there! Christian encouragement is such dry stuff it is seldom resorted to. "Let every one bear his own burden" is the motto in reference to everything, spiritually as well as temporally. Can talk for hours on worldly subjects, but has not time or tact to talk to neighbors about religion. All seems to indicate that each one abideth alone. Where is the much fruit? Echo answers where? What a sorry harvest such a state of things will produce. "Gather into bundles and burn" will be the voice of Jehovah. My prayer is that we may all not only be planted, but that we may all die to sin and self and have much fruit.

Owing to a multiplicity of cares, the above thoughts have been hastily thrown together. The subject is worthy of a more careful consideration than I have given it.

Reply to J. K. Teeter.

"He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." John 14: 9.

In my weak manner I will try to write a few lines for the C. F. C. in love towards brother J. K. Teeter and the church.

In the C. F. C., Vol. 7, No. 13, you will find an article written by bro. J. K. Teeter, assuming that "Jesus Christ is the eternal God." In my humble opinion I do not agree with him. In the same sense that he undertakes to prove that Jesus Christ is the eternal God, we—that is the followers of Christ—are all God. Now for the proof: "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me, I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one, I in them and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." John 17: 21—23. According to this language we are one in Christ just as much as Christ is one in God the Father. Spiritually we are all one, but in no other sense are we one: neither is Christ and God the Father one in any other sense. "No man hath seen God at any time." John 4: 12. Here you see that God hath not been seen by man at any time; but we know that Jesus Christ was seen by his disciples and a great many others, while he was here dwelling among men, in flesh and blood as we are; but if we see Christ spiritually, we see God, for he is the image of God. "Who is the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature." Col. 1: 15. "Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person," etc. Heb. 1: 3. So are we the image of God. "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." Gen. 1: 27.

Now to show that Christ is not the eternal God, I will refer you to 1st Cor. 3: 23. "And ye are Christ's and Christ is God's." This shows plainly and positively that we are Christ's, and that Christ is God's. Paul does not say that Christ is God, but that Christ is God's. You do not, certainly, think that God the Father became flesh and blood and dwelt amongst men, and was crucified, and died upon the cross, and was buried and arose from the dead! What power do you suppose kept the heavens together and everything moving in its proper order, while Jesus Christ was lying in the grave, if Jesus Christ is the eternal God?

One more thought and I will close for the present. As I do not want to take too much space. If Jesus Christ is the eternal God, it would destroy trine immersion, as the scriptural mode of baptism, as Jesus Christ gave the command to the apostles just before he ascended to heaven, where he is interceding with the Father (not with himself) for us.

I have written this as brief as I could by scripture to show that Jesus Christ is not the eternal God. Out of love have I written. This is my love for the C. F. C. If I am wrong, brethren and sisters, I am willing to be corrected.

Creation.

In defining the word creation, it unfolds itself to our minds as meaning the act by which God calls into existence things not previously in being; material or spiritual, visible or invisible. Creation is exclusively the work of God, conjoined in the trinity of the Father, Son and Spirit; each in turn named as its author. The Bible opens with an account of the creation, unspeakably majestic and sublime; it is a work, the mysteries of which no finite mind can comprehend.

Creation, in its vast extent, is a secret thing which belongs unto the Lord. There may be, for aught we know to the contrary, millions of worlds, far more glorious than ours, and in those worlds there may be millions of rational beings, widely different from the human race. Many worlds in the vast universe may have been destroyed, and many more quite different from any that have yet existed may be created in future ages. Who dare presume to limit the wisdom and power of God? Who dare say to the Creator, thy works are finished? After this world had been created God rested from all his work; but it does not follow that he would never work again. A calm survey of those works which are visible to us produce wonder and astonishment. How wonderful, then, and astonishing are his works in boundless space! But even the earth which we inhabit is full of wonders. Innumerable effects appear which we cannot trace to the proper causes. A worm, a fly, a flower presents insurmountable difficulties to the eye of investigation and loudly proclaim the wisdom of God and the ignorance of man. But who can declare all his ways? What scenes of deep and thrilling interest must have been unfolded to angels as they lingered around the morning of creation? And were they permitted to leave their lofty habitation and commune with mortals with what intense delight would we gather around them and listen to the account of the genesis of time? But though this privilege is denied us, we may turn to the oracles of truth and there read the world's history. There was not merely a remodeling but a creation. God spake and it was done; he commanded and it was irresistibly fulfilled. What exalted ideas does this present! Who else can create? We would understand the Lord to refer to this fact when he addressed Job out of the whirlwind, for we hear him say to Job: "Where wast thou when I laid the foundation of the earth? Declare if thou hast understanding. Who laid the measures thereof if thou knowest, or who has stretched the line upon it? Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the corner-stone thereof, when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy?" The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters and gave them vitality. The command went forth: "Let there be light," and immediately the darkness was separated from the light. Still the work went on. Ocean's immense bed was filled with the liquid wave. Brooks, rills and rivers commenced their meanderings, murmuring the praise of him who made them flow, while the dry land settled in suitable consistency for its destined use. The firmament, now clarified from vapors, became the proper medium for the transmission of light, and in due time the planets stand arranged as furtherance and completion in the work. The sun with its scorching rays—a world or planet of fire—is arranged, and so placed for a wise and noble purpose. The moon and stars, too, are framed and placed in their spheres to still further complete the work. But still the work was incomplete; there was none to enjoy this grandeur and beauty, and again the fiat went forth, and the waters were filled with sportive tribes, the forests and valleys teemed with life and activity, and the groves resounded with the notes of the beautifully plumed songsters warbling forth the praises of him who caused them to be. Still to make the scheme complete, something else was wanting; some intelligent being to govern and adore, as well as to enjoy. Earth was not the dwelling place of angels; and Jehovah's mandate went forth: "Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness." Such a compound was the connecting link between heaven and earth, fitted for the companionship of angels and of God, he stands at the head of creation, and power is given unto him to control all on the earth—"made a little lower than the angels and crowned with glory and honor." And God beheld the finished work and pronounced it "very good."

God's Omniscience.

God never forgets anything. All his works, from the creation of a world to the things of a leaf, are finished, perfect. Did you ever stand under a full-boughed, heavy foliaged tree in summer time, and pluck one of the myriad leaves and examine its delicate tracery, its coloring, the very perfection of its finished beauty, and then think of the countless number of such leaves, of the mighty forests whose luxurious growth cover so much of the world, and reflect that among them all there is not a leaf unfinished, each perfect in its form and color? And did you ever pick a flower, either from cultural garden or by wayside walk, enjoy its odor and bless its beauty, and no flower of them all forgotten—the same careful hand filling its glowing heart with perfume, and coloring each leaf with care? When we think of this omniscience, of this never-failing care, we feel something of the attributes of that power—unseen, yet ever present; untouched, yet ever felt—who gives to the violet its color, to the rose its fragrance, who tints with beauty its tiniest leaf, and yet whose hand controls the planets in their course, whose fiat rules the countless worlds.—Spurgeon.

Lost wealth may be restored by industry: the wreck of health regained by temperance; forgotten knowledge restored by study, alienated friendship smoothed into forgetfulness; even forfeited reputation won by penitence and virtue; but who ever again looked upon his vanished hours—recalled his slighted years, stamped them with wisdom, or effaced from heaven's record the fearful blot of wasted time.

We should not despair of the goodness of the world, if we do not happen to see it immediately around us. The atmosphere is still blue, though so much of it as is enclosed in our apartment is colorless.

Written Words.

Little words on little pages
Speak when whispered words are dead.

But Christ shall rise To-morrow.

Hearing and Doing.

"But be ye doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." James 1:22.

These are words worthy of attention, my beloved; that we be doers of the word, and not hearers only, thereby deceiving ourselves. We understand that hearing is also an important part of the work. We hear the blessed Savior, while teaching the multitude from the sea, among other things, saying: "Take heed, therefore, how ye hear." We would turn our attention to you, our dear young friends: you who are spending your precious time in the vanities of a giddy world. Let me, as a well-wisher of your souls, entreat you to remember your Creator in the days of your youth, and in so doing, to take heed what and how ye hear; for we are told that many false prophets have gone out into the world. And more than this, my friends, they shall even show signs and wonders, that if it were possible even the elect would be deceived. We are told not to believe every spirit, but to try the spirits whether they be of God, for in these last days we have many "Lord sayers," saying: "Lo, here is Christ; and lo, he is there;" but we entreat you to try the spirits. You may inquire, by what? We answer, by the word of God." "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they that testify of me." In the 8th chapter of the Acts of the apostles we have the account of a certain character deceiving the people of Samaria; one that preached himself, and not the doctrine of Christ; for we read that he gave out that himself was some great one, and so deceived the people that they all gave heed unto him from the least to the greatest saying, "this man is the great power of God." Thus we see how very careful we should be in these last evil days—how very easily we may be deceived by listening to the creature more than the Creator. We understand from the words before us, that if we be hearers, and hearers only, we will still deceive our own selves. But we are told what to do, and that is, "be ye doers of the word." A hearer and not a doer of the word is likened unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass, who goeth his way and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law and continueth therein, he not being a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, that man shall be blessed in his deed. Thus let us all strive, my dear friends, to be doers of the work, in order that we may receive that great blessing, when time and timely things shall pass away, for how many of us who are to-day buoyant with health, may be in the spirit land long before another year has gone to make up the record of the ages of the mighty past.

Feetwashing.

Although considerable has been said through the Companion on the above subject, and on its intrinsic importance, with the necessity of the observance as set forth in the Scriptures, yet much more may be said; and because of its great importance, ought to be said, in order to fasten still more on every mind, that a neglect of the proper intent and observance will also meet with the same serious consequences, as non-observance or entire disregard thereto, according to Christ's answer to Peter.

The articles in the latter part of Vol. 6 of the C. F. C., to my understanding, were for the most part replies to those who did not this ordinance incorporate in their self-made system of church service, at the time of their organization; and we may not expect that such an effort to substantiate that their system is not derived from Scripture teachings, can ever make an impression, as long as the multitudes, are not made aware that this was a neglect in their reformers, when they organize themselves into churches; and also that their preacher's discourses are now opposed, and in a great degree refuted. And besides, those who have repeatedly declared that this ordinance is not essential to salvation, or not necessary to be observed, will not, even if they were convinced of their error, recall either by word or action, what they taught as facts.—No, it is not according to human nature to do so; and to repudiate their lordly ambition and commanding influence.

We do not now find many willing Simon Peters, or such as are willing to have a part with Jesus, to give up their own for what is declared in the Scriptures to be the will of our heavenly Father.

Brethren in Christ, and readers of the Companion, it may not be consistently controverted, that we, as a church organization, are not in full Union and agreement on all the points on this subject; and it is an evident fact, where this is known among the non-professors and unbelievers in this ordinance, all arguments to bring them to it, must prove futile. I do not say this to start a controversy or for contention, nor even to invite one side or the other, to be constrained by any compulsory means to submit to the other. For I know if I intended anything of this kind, I had better lay down my pen and be at something else.

But I believe, and rely on it, that what I may give, will be taken in the same love of the truth in which it is given. For I love to obey it above anything else. I also love the Brotherhood, and in sincerity, desire the true prosperity of the church; yet I feel we cannot prosper as we should, unless we are united every where, on all points of practical religion, and especially on the ordinances in controversy with other denominations.

I hold to the firm faith that Feetwashing is a religious ordinance, a command of the Lord Jesus Christ for us to observe in all its intentions and meanings. But as to how it became such, and what the Saviour intended to teach for the benefit of his obedient followers—his church, it is the aim of the writer at present to devote his thoughts and dedicate them to the dear readers of the Companion.

I had not thought, until a distinguished brother wrote intheGospel Visitor, that as an ordinance, Feetwashing had not its beginning in the night, when Christ washed his disciples' feet. This we feel may be so. But when we look to the different occurrences on record, we may not look at it, that it was also a command of strictly Divine authority. The first on record we find, Gen. 18:4, where Abraham met with the Lord, and said: "Let a little water, I pray you, be fetched, and wash your feet, and rest yourselves under the tree." Chap. 19:2, where Lot met with the same. And he said: "Behold now, my Lords, turn in, I pray you, into your servants house, and tarry all night, and wash your feet, and ye shall rise up early and go on your way." Chap. 24:32, "And the man came into the house, and he ungirded his Camels, and gave straw, and provender for the Camels and water to wash his feet and the men's feet that were with him. Chap. 43; 24, in the circumstance of Joseph and his brethren: "And the man brought the men into Joseph's house and gave them water, and they washed their feet." Thus we see by this record that the practice of feetwashing in its beginning was not commanded; but would rather seem on offering, and act of hospitality on the part of the entertainer to serve the guests with water, but rather to do the washing themselves, or their own feet.

This seems to have been a general custom, and became thereby an ordinance of the people, and no doubt considered such up to the time, of our Savior's sojourn on this earth, for he alluded to it himself when he was entertained in the Pharisees house, Luke 7:44, "I entered into thine house, thou gavest no water for my feet." And although the woman washed his feet with her tears, and wiped them with the hair of her head, it still does not hold good to designate it a command, but a usage or ordinance established in respect to acts of hospitality, and differs entirely from the ordinance of Feetwashing used in the gospel. For in the first the guests washed their own feet, and in the latter the disciples were directed and injoined to wash one another's feet, as their Lord and Master had given them (not the command but as he gave them) the example and afterwards directed them, to do to one another as he had done to them.

The question naturally arises here: Why did he give them, in this instance first the the example and taught them how to obey the command he intended, and gave afterwards? In the first place we can see the important lesson he aimed to impress on their minds by the humble condition the placed himself into; and also, how he, the all-seeing, all knowing and all-discerning teacher and searcher of every man's heart, had long seen the inordinate disposition of his own chosen disciples as to who should be the greatest among them.

Therefore he gave them this most notable and striking illustration; that there should be no greater or lesser, no master or servant, neither ruler or subject; but that all should be humble, and that an equality must exist among his followers all must be servants to each other in all ministrations of love in his kingdom, in the same manner as he the Master and Lord showed them, by washing each disciple's feet, and wiped them also; thus showing by serving them in full, as Lord and Master without any help or assistance from others, not requiring the helping services of any in the act and deed from first to last, from the rising from the supper table until he set down to it again, that his servants, his ministers, and followers, should in all their ministrations of love to one another, do all that they can do alone without asking a question or assistance of others.

We are not to infer that this act of feet-washing only includes itself, and is not connected with anything in our being and church service, save to be present when the church is engaged in the act. The teachings and the faith therein, should govern us at all times, and in all acts in our intercourse with others; and when we have thus the example of our Lord and Saviour in its fullness in our mind, and it actuates our soul and being, then, when we are placed in situations to do a service to one, and and we do it, not asking help, or waiting till others would do so too, when it might then be too late, and would then, perhaps be an injury to our fellow-being, instead a good work for us, whereof the reward is laid up in Heaven. And this we most sincerely believe, the Saviour aimed to impress on the minds of his disciples by this humble example. And as these were already appointed, if only to his own and his Heavenly Father's knowledge,—to promulgate all he taught them, it seems that it was necessary for the Lord to do as he did. But how is it now? If we look around us, among those who do not regard this Divine teaching in this light, do we not see the doleful consequences of pride in its various shapes? And no equality is noticed; and if we by chance do hear the endearing name, Brother or Sister, we see at the same time hyprocrisy, and the lord and master manifested, in many, if not in all things pertaining to faith and church service.

By his giving it first by example, we also can see his gentleness, kindness, and love; for according to the nature of these, he could not peremptorily command, or force them into these measures of love, or loving acts; for if we observe these things, because he exemplified them and promised happiness in the compliance, we feel more willing, and inclined to follow him, and observe all the duties implied in his teachings of this ordinance, and thereby answer all the intentions of the ordinance.

We also see the wisdom in our Saviour in learning us this humiliating ordinance by example; for he well knew the deceitfulness of the heart of men; and that, if he had only commanded it, that it might have been construed to mean nothing more than the literal washing of one another's feet in any way; and also to be obeyed from motives different to those by him intended. For it is evident, that we may do acts as we are directed by those using authority over us, from fear of losing their good-will and favor, as also to show an outward appearance of humility, or exhibit, what in heart, willingly, we are not. But we must be sincere and it is reasonable to conclude that we have the evidence within ourselves, and to show it too, that we are sincere and "that we know these things."—what the literal observance implies, and moreover that we are as willing to minister to our brother in all things, as we are willing to wash his feet, in the same manner, and with the same intention as our Lord and Master washed his disciples' feet and wiped them with the towel, wherewith he had girded himself.

That the disciples understood by this example an illustration teaching humility, and condescension to one another, as also equality among themselves the general sense of their reasonings and their after conduct, sufficiently demonstrated. We do not notice any more reasoning nor disputing among them as to who was the greatest, or who to sit on the right hand of Christ, and who on his left in his Kingdom. For by seeing and learning the condescension and humility of their Lord and Master, they subdued or learned to subdue, all the uprisings of their carnal inclination, and ambitions, self-esteem, and self-preference. They also learned by it, a free and willing acquiescence in all their Lord's directions and teachings, and a full resignation to all heavenly requirements. And this became so characteristic a part of their nature and being, that those who came to believe through them and their teaching, could easily observe all that Christ the Lord had commanded them. We need not multiply quotations here to prove this, the Acts and Epistolary writings abound in such exhortations as Acts 10:26. "And Peter took him up, saying, stand up; I myself also am a man;" and verse 24. "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons." And this we see throughout their writings, although they addressed themselves as servants of Christ, they also dedicated their all to the service of the Churches, and became servants to all; and exhorted all to be subject to one another, and to love and minister to one another. And thus, by obeying and teaching, by all the delights and enjoyments, the example given here by the Saviour, they grew and lived only by their acts; and in this daily and constant practice by the primitive Christians, it became an established order of the church service, or an ordinance. The literal observance from time to time according to the example of Christ Jesus our teacher and precepter, to to remind us of the important lessons it contains, beneficial and good during our association with fellow believers and Pilgrims, while surrounded with trials, affliction, and the needy helps and assistance of one to another.

The observance of the Sunday for the Sabbath,—the first day of the week for the last,—as also the Supper of Christ with his disciples, were in commemoration of the end of the Saviour's life on earth, and of the resurrection, as also in remembrance of the pouring out of the Holy Spirit, were also established by the first Christians into an organized order, and thus became ordinances to observe without being commanded by the Saviour, or even so directed to be imitated; and although these were exemplified in a manner by the Saviour, yet we see no command connected as with the ordinance of feet-washing. And on this, or on the parts which the Saviour did command, we will yet devote a few lines.

We then wish to ask what did he enjoin his deciples to do, after he sat down again? Did he tell them to rise from supper? Answer, No. Did he command them to lay off their garment? To take a towel and gird themselves? And pour water in a basin, all as he had done? Verily, nay. For he did not command them to do to themselves what he had done to himself; but it says in the 15th verse John 13th, "For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to YOU. And what is it that he had done to them? Answer. He washed their feet, and wiped them with the towel wherewith he was girded. (Verse 5.) And THIS IS THE COMMAND; it includes no more nor less than when they, according to his example wash one another's feet, that they also should be so prepared as to be able to wipe them. Or to say when you serve or minister to your brother disciple do all to him that you are able to do without any assistance from others.

Love for the truth, and explicit obedience to all Christ's directions and commandments to be universally obeyed, and the promised happiness enjoyed thereby, leads me yet to inquire. Have we as a church and as individual members thereof, obeyed this injunction given to us both by example and commandment, by our Saviour, and also our Lord and Master? have we, and do we, try to live up to it, both in the literal, as well as in all the connecting, significant performances it teaches?

I cannot answer for any; and I wish not to, if I knew. It is for our good to reflect, for the matter is a weighty one. It concerns our happiness here, and our bliss, when the enjoyment of this earthly life are not experienced any more. If we have washed our fellow disciple's feet, according to our preceptor's example and his intention thereby in all its perceptible meanings, then indeed we are, and will be blessed.

You then, who find yourself in neglect of performance, let it sink deep into your soul, that, if you have not washed the Saints' feet, as the term implies, you cannot be taken in the number, and not in that, you can have no part with that dear Jesus and Savior, who gave us this great and noteable example, that those who live in the faith and practice thereof, should be happy here, and to have a part with him in glory with his Father.

To you, too, who have lived in full obedience thereto, let me say, go on let no man, means, or circumstances prevent you to follow on in the requirements, taught by this ordinance; and should it be that obstacles of any kind be put in your way to keep you from refreshing your faith, and from reminding you of the excellent virtues taught by the literal performace, according to the commandment of the Author and Finisher of your faith, then try the more to live a life devoted to the principles this ordinance does embrace. In these no men can prevent your action; and if they should, the guilt is theirs and not yours. Be steadfast, then and unmovable, and with patience do all the requirements of the Lord Jesus Christ; for these only can advance to perfection, and in the end secure eternal life and happiness

In conclusion I would say, that what I have written is my understanding on this subject, and if I am at fault and lacking, I am ready, Apollos-like, to be taken by an Aquila and Priscilla, and to have the way of God more perfectly expounded to me.

CHRIST'S AGONY AND TRIAL.

4. It appears from the record of John that, after he had instituted the ordinances of Feetwashing, the Supper, and the Communion, Christ gave them a new commandment to love one another, even as he had loved them, saying: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." John 13: 34, 35. He gave them to understand that, after a little while, he would leave them and go to where they could not immediately follow him. This intelligence made them sorrowful: it was painful to them to learn that he, whom they had followed, in whom they had trusted, and in whose presence they felt secure and happy, should so soon leave them; and, as they had hoped for his perpetual, personal presence and literal reign, they not only felt sorrowful, but disappointed and perplexed. But he comforted them, saying: "Let not your hearts be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14: 1—3. He also instructed them in the unity between himself and the Father, and promised that, whatsoever they should ask in his name he would do, that the Father might be glorified in the Son. He encouraged them to keep his commandments, and assured them that he would not leave them comfortless, saying: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him, but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him." John 14: 16, 17, 21. In connection with this he gave them the following important test of true discipleship: "If a man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." Ver. 23. This is indeed an important test and a cheering promise. Knowing that this test is given in such close proximity with the enjoining of the very significant ordinances already noticed, who that fails to observe those ordinances can claim that he loves the Lord, or is loved by him and enjoys his presence? After having given them such important instructions, admonitions, and promises, they sung a hymn and went out to the mount of Olives. Matthew 26: 30, Mark 14: 26, John 14: 31.

They left the guest-chamber after having sung a hymn, but how sad were all their hearts! We can imagine but cannot fully comprehend their feelings, nor the secret workings of their minds. The moon, which was about at its full, had made its way high up in the star-gemmed arch of night, and as its mellow light fell softly on old Jerusalem and its surrounding hills, while Christ-rejecting priests and elders and a treacherous disciple, were planning his destruction, the Son of man passed through the streets of the doomed city in the direction of the mount of Olives. As he passed along with heavy heart and troubled spirit, yet with a firm, steady step and composed, kingly mien, his little, sorrow-stricken band followed in painful silence. Their hearts were full, but their lips were closed and their tongues mute. Forgetting the present to a great extent, their thoughts were retrospective and prospective. They were impressed with the services and lessons in the upper room, and thought much about them; but they also looked inquiringly and anxiously to the future.

We turn now to our Savior. Behold the man of sorrows! He was already weighed down with the thought of his own impending sufferings; yet, as the Mighty God, he had respect to the welfare of his followers. Observing the secret thoughts and heart-workings of his chosen witnesses as they were moving onward, when a suitable occasion offered itself, he broke the monotony of their silence, by giving utterance to that beautiful allegory in which he represented his Father as a husbandman, himself as the true vine, and his disciples as the branches. Their quietude had afforded them an opportunity to meditate upon what had already transpired and to prepare for an eager reception of their Master's teachings. We may well suppose that under these impressive circumstances, every thought uttered by their Lord was rivited upon their minds as a nail fastened in a sure place by the Master of assemblies. An interesting account of what followed is contained in the 15th, 16th, and 17th chapters of John's record. We regard this as being such a masterpiece of inspired excellence, that we withhold comment, lest we should mar its beauty and weaken its force. Let every reader peruse the whole of it with care, and he will readily see the strongest possible effort of the Son of God to impress upon their hearts the essentiality of love and obedience to God, and of love, union, and harmony among his people. "When Jesus had spoken these words he went forth with his disciples over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into which he entered and his disciples." John 18: 1.

Considering the fact that the discourse recorded in the 15th and 16th chapters of John's gospel, and the prayer in the 17th chapter, took place on the way from the guest-chamber to the garden of Gethsemane, it is fair to conclude that they were about an hour and a half on the way. This being the case, if they left the room at half-past ten o'clock, as before concluded, it was about midnight when they came to the garden. From a careful notice of the tide of events we assume that this was about the time.

Our readers will remember that, when the Passover was instituted, it was enjoined that none of them should "go out at the door of his house until the morning;" (Ex. 12: 22,) and when this ordinance was incorporated with the law, it was said: "And thou shalt roast and eat it in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose; and thou shalt turn in the morning, and go unto thy tents." Deut. 16: 7. As they were required to "turn in the morning," they could not leave their rooms in which they ate the Passover before the morning began; and as the morning in no case commenced before midnight, they must not leave their rooms before midnight; but on this night our Savior and his apostles left their room long before midnight, and consequently it follows that the meal they ate was not the Passover, or they violated the law in going out when they did. Also, while they were eating the supper, which was in the early part of the night, Judas went out; and Jesus, instead of remonstrating against it, encouraged him to go, by saying, "Whatsoever thou doest do quickly." These facts strongly confirm what was before shown: that the Supper was on the night of the preparation day, and was not the Passover. It cannot be claimed that custom had wrought a change in this matter, for Jesus did not digress from the law to honor either custom or tradition.

5. There seems to be a discrepency between the testimony of Matthew and Mark and the record of John, in regard to the time and place in which Christ told Peter that he would thrice deny him. We think, however, that there is no real difference. It was before shown that the evangelists do not pretend, at all times, to give a connected account of events in the order in which they occurred. In the case now under consideration we think it is clear that John refers to this circumstance out of the order of its occurrence. Matthew says: "And when they had sung an hymn, they went out to the mount of Olives. Then saith Jesus unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night." Matthew 26: 30, 31. It appears from this that the circumstance referred to, took place after they had gone out to the mount. With this accords the witness of Mark. Luke, as before shown, gives a very disconnected account. John seems to refer to this circumstance in the connection in which it stands in the close of the 13th chapter, because of its relation in sense with what immediately precedes; but there is nothing in John's record that limits it in point of time or place to the upper room in which they ate the Supper. Hence we conclude that it was when they had gone out to the mount of Olives.

"Then cometh Jesus with them to a place called Gethsemane, and saith unto his disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder. And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee and began to be sorrowful and very heavy. Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here and watch with me. And he went a little further, and fell on his face and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt." Matthew 26: 36—39. Luke says of this first season of prayer, "And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him. And being in an agony, he prayed earnestly, and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for sorrow, and he said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." Luke 22: 43—46. "He went away again the second time and prayed, saying, O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me except I drink it, thy will be done. And he came and found them asleep again; for their eyes were heavy. And he left them, and went away again and prayed the third time, saying the same words. Then cometh he to his disciples, and saith unto them, Sleep (ye) on now, and take your rest? behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. Rise, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray me. And while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people." Matthew 26: 42—47. Heart cannot conceive nor pen depict this agony of the Son of man, and we will make no attempt.

We assign about one hour and a half to the three seasons of prayer; and as it was near midnight when they came to the garden, it was about half past one o'clock in the morning, when Jesus was apprehended in the garden. The reader will remember this time: one hour and a half after midnight.

Visit to Morrison's Cove.

Morrison's Cove is in the south-eastern part of this county. It is a beautiful valley, and very fertile, and is called a cove because it is a high valley. It is our old home. There we were born and raised, married, and received into the church. Some of our sisters and brothers still reside there, and also many friends and associates. Hence we love to go there to visit. In addition to this it was suggested that Martinsburg would be a very good situation for a permanent home for the COMPANION FAMILY — So in order to see our friends, and at the same time ascertain what accommodations the place could afford us, we turned our face in that direction on Thursday evening, 13th instant

When we arrived at Newry we realized that we had entered upon the journey somewhat blindly, for we might have known that there would be no conveyance farther in the evening; and having our little daughter Lottie with us, ten miles afoot was too big an undertaking for that day. But we were in no very serious dilemma, for our old brother Daniel Sell lives in the vicinity, and thither we turned our footsteps, and received hospitable entertainment.

Next morning set out afresh for a long stroll, preferring walking towaiting until 3 P. M., for the back. This also gave us a good opportunity for interviewing the Morrison's Cove Railroad, now in course of construction. It is already completed as far as McKee's Gap, or Martha Furnace, and is under contract to Martinsburg. The contractor is bound to have it graded by August next. We long for a ride over the route.

We halted for dinner at brother Shem Graybill's, and after a pleasant conversation resumed the tramp; but we were soon overtaken by friend John Bowers, a minister in the River Brethren church, who kindly took us in his carriage to Martinsburg.— Thence we had but a short distance to our friends, where we rested and were cared for.

On Saturday we attended Counsel-meeting in the Clover Creek congregation, at Brumbaugh's meeting-house. Among the business transacted was the passing of a resolution to hold their spring Lovefeast on the 19th of May, commencing at 4 o'clock P. M., and requested us to announce it and extend an invitation through the COMPANION.

On Sunday, at 10 o'clock attended preaching at the same house, and also in the evening, and tried to speak to the people We also assisted in the organization of the Brethren's Sunday School in the afternoon, and were pleased to see a large number of children and young people in attendance. Hope the Lord will prosper the school. When the teachers have all been appointed, and the school classified, we hope to receive the particulars.

On Monday and Tuesday we visited Martinsburg with a view to business Brother George Puterbaugh accompanied us and afforded us much useful information. Building lots may be had at reasonable prices, but no suitable building could be found for our business. The place offers several inducements, and unless something better is presented, Martinsburg may be the place.

On Wednesday afternoon, brother Jacob Wineland took us to Cove station, on the Huntingdon and Broad Top Railroad, and in the evening we were at home.

Upon our arrival at home we found a bid from Meyer's Mills, Somerset county, Penn'a. The railroad from Pittsburg to Cumberland has just been completed to that place. Meyer's Mills is in a good settlement, and is surrounded by Brethren, and its propositions will receive due consideration.

Quotas

Some time ago we called for one thousand more subscribers, and suggested that each of our friends should obtain one subscriber. This we call filling their quota. We have already published a list of those who have responded to our call. Below we give another, and will continue to announce the names of those who have filled their quotas. We observe that some on the present list had also been on the former one They will have a credit on several drafts in advance.

Former List,	46	Jonas Trimmer,	1
J Nicholson,	1	D. J. Peck,	1
David Province,	3	Ella Williams,	2
Christian Ford,	1	Isaac Price,	1
Dan'l Bock,	2	Sarah Lentz,	1

J. K. Frantz,	1	Philip Boyle	2
C. P. L. Roberts,	1	Henry Koontz,	1
H. S. Keyser,	1	C. H. Strohm,	1
			78

This shows that we are still nine hundred and twenty-two short of the call. Now we do not like to beg, and yet we desire to add the proposed number of names to our list. Will not every one who has not already done so, go to work and secure us one name? One dollar will pay for the balance of this year, including the Report of the Proceedings of the Annual Meeting, and the Minutes. One more effort, brethren and sisters.

Answers to Correspondents.

T. D. FAULKENDER. Your money is all right, as you say. The G. Vis. was ordered March 11th. Other matters attended to.

H. S. KISER. The Companion for you was ordered and paid for to the close of this volume, by brother Tobias Kimmel. We have given you credit for $1.50, which pays to the close of 1872.

CHESTER U. GATES. Your order was filled. You now owe fifty cents.

JOHN U. SLINGLUFF. We have no more Almanacs. What shall we send you for the remaining fifty cents?

J. B. TAWZER. According to our books there is yet due us 35 cents.

ANNA WRIGHTSMAN. Your paper is paid for to the end of the volume.

JOHN A. GRUVER We shall be pleased to have you act as agent.

DANIEL B SELL. The $6 is acknowledged in No. 7, page 111

Knocking away the Props.

"See, father," said a lad who was walking with his father, "They are knocking away the props from under the bridge." What are they doing that for? Won't the bridge fall?

"They are knocking them away," said the father, "that the structure may rest more firmly on the stone piers which are now finished."

Arches always require props while they are being built. A temporary wooden structure is first prepared; over which the real arch of brick or stone is laid. But though the arch may be finished, and the keystone set in its place, yet it will never become stong and solid as it should be, until the props are all knocked away, the wooden arch removed, and the different stones left to feel their own weight, and bind themselves by their own pressure between the massive piers from which the arch is sprung.

And in like manner God permits his children in their infancy and weakness, to have various props and supports on which to lean, giving crutches to the lame, and sight to those who fear to walk by faith; but when at last he would bring us forth to stand in strength and beauty, resting on his word alone, he knocks away prop after prop, till we can only rely on God and wholly trust in him.

Sometimes a man trusts in health, and God weakens his strength in the way, and shortens his days, that he may learn to lay hold on eternal life when this life is passing from his grasp. Another trusts in his wealth, and thinks himself secure from the approach of want; till God removes that prop, and teaches him how to pray "Give us this day our daily bread," and trust in the Lord's providence till he receives it.

Again, men trust in friends, and covet human sympathy, and receive honor one of another, until the Lord knocks away the props they rest on, permits friends to become foes, and teaches them that his sympathy and love are worth far more than all that men can give or do.

Then when earthly hopes are blasted, and earthly joys withered away, the Lord appears to us an unchanging friend, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. His peace no man taketh away. His love is an everlasting love. His compassions fail not. His mercies are from everlasting. His word endureth forever.

What, then, though every prop be gone, and only God sustains our fainting souls? It is enough.—Storm and sunshine, war and peace, sorrow and joy, darkness and light, all are alike to us while "He abideth faithful," and is with us always, even to the end of the world.

"Let sickness blast, and death devour,
If heaven but recompense our pains;
Perish the grass, and fade the flower,
If firm the word of God remains."

—The Christian.

Health of Farmers.—There are seven reasons why farmers are healthier than professional men:

1. They work more, and develope all the leading muscles of the body.

2. They take their exercise in the open air, breathe a greater amount of oxygen.

3. Their food and drinks are commonly less adulterated, and far more simple.

4. They do not overwork their brain as industrious professional men do.

5. They take their sleep commonly during the hours of darkness, and do not try to turn night into day.

6. They are not ambitious, and do not wear themselves out so rapidly in the fierce contest of rivalry.

7. Their pleasure is simple and less exhausting.

Pleasure and Piety.

There is no single pleasure that a manly man ought to love the flavor of, which is not permissible to the Christian. There is not a thing which a Christian may not have which every young man ought not to be ashamed to take. Piety does not shut up the avenues of enjoyment. True virtue makes every enjoying faculty more sensitive to joy. I repudiate and repel with scorn the imputation that when a man is a child of God, and is at peace with all God's laws in material things, social things, and moral things, he is shut up. He is enfranchised rather. He is enlarged. He is ennobled. There is more music in him, in every single chord and faculty, than there can be in any other. There is no man so free, there is no man who has a range so boundless as the man who is at peace with God. And yet there are multitudes of persons who suppose that there are peculiar pleasures which cannot be reaped except by a reprobate course. There never was any mistake greater than that.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Brevity the Soul of Mercy.—The following remarks of Dr. Hastings, made to the students of Union Theological Seminary, are strongly commended to those who would gain the sympathy of and extend help to the sick:

I have time to offer only one suggestion on pastoral work. Be brief in your visits at the sick bed. Condense what you have to say into the shortest compass, if possible—a verse of Scripture. Make your prayer very short, and do not tarry. I am firmly convinced that too much time is often spent at the sick bed, especially in cases of great weakness and prostration. Be to the point and be brief."

What Farmers Cannot Conceal.—A poor farmer cannot canceal the fact that he is a poor farmer. All his surroundings proclaim the verdict against him; his horses, cattle, wagons, harness, plows, fences, fields, even his wife and children bear silent but unmistakable evidence against him. On the other hand, all these things will testify favorably on behalf of the good farmer. Every passer by can read the evidence—pro or con. This fact, alone, ought to stimulate every farmer to do his best, for the sake of his own character, as well as interest; for he may rest assured that every passer by will pronounce judgment according to the evidence.

FAIRPLAY, WASH, CO.MD. }
April 11th, 1871. }

Brother Holsinger : I will try to give a little account, of several visits to Vanc'eavesville, Berkley Co., West Va., which we were permitted to make through the providence of God, in order to hold some meetings in that part of the Lord's vineyard, by request of the scattered lambs of the flock in those parts.

On Saturday the 11th of March, in company with brother Simon Long, took the cars at Breathedsville Via. Weaverton and Harper's Ferry, and arrived at Vancleves ville, 29 miles from our starting place. The weather very pleasant, the scenery beautiful, all combined to make our little trip very pleasant, which I enjoyed very much.

After leaving the station, we made our way to the house of brother John Sutton, about half a mile from the station, where we were kindly received and hospitably entertained during our stay. Towards evening brother Francis Miller, and sister Miller came here.—Brother Miller is a son-in law of brother Sutton's; and by the way they are both alive to the work, and zealous supporters of the cause.

In the evening we repaired to the Baptist Church some three miles from here, (they having courteously granted the brethren the privilege to worship in it whenever they do not occupy it themselves.) The congregation was rather small this evening. We returned home with brother Sutton, and being very tired, soon retired to rest; and when we woke on Sunday morning, found that it was raining very hard; which continued all forenoon; so much so that we could not go to the church. But brother Sutton made arrangements to have a meeting at his house; and soon got together a number of his neighbor's living close by. In the afternoon the rain ceased, and the sky became clear; and as there was an appointment for preaching in the evening, at a shool house near Vanclevesville, we repaired thither and found the house well filled; and we preached, as the Lord gave influence, to an attentive congregation, from the first chapter of James 25th verse: "But whoso looketh into the perfect law, of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."

On Monday, after having been drawn out, to make a promise, or get some one to return again in four weeks, we took leave and returned home.

On the 8th of April, I in company with brother Samuel Hays, started again to pay the few members in the same neighborhood another visit; for they have no regular meetings, but greatly desired to have.—This time we went by private conveyance; and cros ed the Potomac river at Shepardstown. We arriv at brother Sutton's, toward evening; and were kindly received. Had meeting this evening in the Baptist church, and also on Sunday, the congregation not so large, but very attentive. On Sunday evening preached again in the school-house. The people could not all get in—excellent order and good attention.

On Monday morning, before we were quite ready to start home, there came to brother Sutt ons, to see us, our friend, and now brother, Edward Haney, formerly of Bedford Co., Pa., who had attended our meetings, and stated that he was desirous at once, to be initiated into the church; and after having more fully made known, unto him, the order and practices of the church, as we understand the Scriptures, and as he was willing to make, the word of the Lord the object of his faith, and the rule for his practice, we made arrangements, and went some four miles, where he was in the presence of several brethren and sisters, and some spectators that had gathered, baptized according to the commission given by Christ the head of the church, in the Opequon Creek; and came up out of the water, and went to his home rejoicing; and we also set our faces homeward, where we arrived in due time, having the consciousness of having tried to do our duty faithfully.

Dear brother in the Lord: In the first place I will remark that your paper has been a welcome visiter to me and brother L. Thomas, for more than twelve months; brother Thomas will not subscribe any longer, and I did not think that I could do well without it, so I requested brother C. Masters, to send for it again. There is but one fault I have to it, that is, I do think that you and some of the brethren are too strenuous on the tobacco question. For my part I don't use the weed nor none of my family, and I notice above your address the design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and you say that the New Testament is the will of God. That is very true brother, come let us reason together, says the prophet; the apostle says, knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men. Now I do not believe that there is any terror of the Lord against our brethren for chewing of tobacco. My brethren say that they use it for their health and they cannot do without it; and they will not send for the COMPANION, on the account of that tobacco question. There are some that say they would join the Brethren, but they cannot do without their tobacco. Is it possible that they must be debarred of joining our church on the account of that frivolous thing? God forbid is the sincere prayer of your unworthy brother. I love my brethren too well to fall out with them on the account of this tobacco.

H. HOLLIDAY.

Dear Editors:—We made a visit southward, and stopped off at Salem, the first day of March. It is a beautiful town, mostly situated on the north side of the railroad. Called at the residence of Brother Joseph and Sister Mary Cripe. Being very much fatigued, we were so kindly greeted and cared for that I shall ever remember the love we found among those members. They assisted us to visit the members of the Salem congregation, where we found much love among the members. Also found a pretty country beautifully situated, with timber and prairie. Health very good. We attended two meetings in our visit, at which we found nothing new; members very plain; preach nothing new; declaring to know nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified, earnestly contending for the faith once delivered unto the saints. I think they set their city on a hill, which cannot be hid. My prayer is that their church may become full.

ANNA M. TROXEL.

Hilmine, Ill.

For Brother F. P. Loehr.

Brother Holsinger: Please publish through the COMPANION, that we wish brother F. P. Loehr, to pay us a visit while to or from Annual Meeting, as we need German preaching here in Shade Creek congregation, Somerset Co. To stop off at Johnstown, where he will be met by brethren who will convey him to place of meeting, when informed of his coming, through the C. F. C., or by letter. By order of the church.

HIRAM MUSSELMAN.

Scalp Level, Cambria co., Pa.

Brother Henry: You will please announce my address through the Companion, for the satisfaction of our friends in the east. I have nothing special to write at present. We met for worship at brother Eli Yertie's for two successive Sundays.—The brethren generally turned out; had very interesting meetings among ourselves. The few brethren that are here, seem strong in the faith. Next Sunday we have public preaching at what is called the Junction school-house, about six miles south of Kansas City, Kansas. What our weak labors may accomplish in the good work is known to the Lord; but we think, if we know ourself, with the prayers of our brethren east, we may do something for the good cause.

Brethren and sisters, pray for us that the word of the Lord may have free course. This leaves us all reasonably well, thank the Lord.—I will write again at some future time. Any person writing to me privately will direct to Kansas City, Missouri.

Queries.

Please give an exposition of the parable of the Talents, Matthew, 25: 14–30, applying it in all its parts; especially what are we to understand by the expression: "Take the talent from him and give it to him that hath ten?"

L. M. KOB.

Brother Henry:—I hope you will be able to make some more anti-tobacco converts. I am one. I quit two months ago. I don't want to commence it again for twenty times the price of the Companion.

JOS. L. MYERS.

Notice.

The north District Meeting will be held, the Lord willing, with the brethren in the Sugar Creek congregation, May 16th, 1871. Those desiring to come by railroad will please give timely notice by addressing John Nicholson or J. A. Borger, Shanesville, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio.

Dover and Millersburg are 15 miles distant, being the nearest R. R. stations to place of meeting.

D. J. PECK.

Champaign Co., Lovefeast.

Brother Henry; Please announce through the COMPANION, that we have appointed our Communion Meeting on the third and fourth days of June next, at brother George Dilling's, five miles east of Urbana, Champaign Co., Ill. Brethren coming from the east or west will stop off at Kirkpatrick, first station east of Urbana, and those from the north or south, either at Champaign City or Thomasboro. We extend a hearty invitation to all members, especially to the ministering brethren.

JOHN H. MOORE.

Thomasboro, Ill.

Please say through the Companion, that on the 27th of May, the brethren will hold a Love-feast in the Smith Fork church, Clinton Co., Mo., one mile and a half North of Plattsburg. The usual invitation is extended.

DANIEL D. SELL.

Brother Henry: Please announce in the COMPANION, that if the Lord will, we will have our Lovefeast in the Dry Valley Meeting house, four miles from Lewistown, Pa., on the 22nd day of May next, commencing at one o'clock P. M.; preaching next day in the forenoon. An invitation is given to all who feel to be with us, especially to ministers.

Announcements.

DISTRICT MEETINGS.

The congregations composing the First District of Virginia will meet in council in Montgomery county, at brother Peter Crumpacker's, on the 19th of May. On the evening of the 20th, at the same place, the ordinances of the church will be observed, as they have been delivered unto us. A full attendance of delegates and members generally is desirable. Peter Crumpacker.

Middle Pennsylvania District, May 8th, McVeytown, Mifflin county.

Northern Indiana, April 27th, Solomon's Creek congregation, Arnold's station.

Northwestern Ohio, May 12th, Seneca branch, Centreton and Tiffin.

Missouri District May 5th, Log Creek congregation, Caldwell county, Kingston and Knoxville stations.

Please announce, Brother Holsinger, that the brethren of the Antietam congregation intend holding a lovefeast on the 18th day of May at Price's meeting house. A cordial invitation is given to the brethren to be with us. JACOB PRICE.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Mason county, West Va., November 2nd, 1870, my sister, FRANCES R HUGHART, departed this life; aged 28 years, 5 months. Her disease was Dropsy of the Heart. She endured her sickness with Christian fortitude. She left a husband, and two small children, and many friends and relations to mourn her loss; But we hope our loss, is her great gain. She was loved by all who knew her. Her funeral not yet attended to. Her request was for Samuel Black to preach her funeral.

"The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

MARY A HUGHART.

In the Conemaugh branch of the church, February the 14th 1871, GEORGE IRVIN, son of Eli and Ann RODGERS; aged 2 years, 7 months, and 13 days. Funeral services by the writer, assisted by brother Abram Stutsman of Ohio.

Also in same district, March the 26th, EMMA MAY, daughter of Joseph and Margaret SNYDER: aged three months. Funeral services by the writer.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

In the Nettle Creek congregation, Wayne county Indiana, of Measles, on the 24th day of March, sister ELIZABETH WYATT, wife of brother James M. Wyatt, and daughter of elder Abraham Moss, who died in Union county Indiana some ten years ago. Her age was 35 years, 9 months, and 5 days.—Thus, while in the prime of life, a sorrowing husband and two little daughters have to part with one whose joy it had always been, to make both husband and children happy; and the church is called on to surrender one of its most devoted and exemplary members. Yet, while many are made to sorrow, none need to sorrow as those do, who have no hope. Funeral exercises by the brethren, from 1st Thess. 4: 13.

DAVID BOWMAN.

In St. Joseph's District, Ind. April 3rd, sister CHRISTENA BOWMAN, of Lung fever, in the 74th year of her age. Her maiden name was C. Leer. She was born in Cambria county, Pa. She emigrated with her brothers and sisters to Montgomery county, Ohio, about 56 years ago, in the latter part of the year 1832; removed to this place in Ind. in company with her husband, Jacob Bowman, where he deceased September 1838, thus leaving her a widow over 32 years. She was a widow indeed, well reported of, in her good works, having brought up a family of children, she has lodged strangers, she has washed the saint's feet, and diligently followed every good work; so we say, our loss is her great gain. Funeral occasion improved by elders Jacob Miller, and D B. Stu gis.

To Nebraska, California, and Kansas, and the B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The "Burlington Route," as called, lies right in the path of the Star of Empire. It runs almost immediately in the center of the great westward movement of emigration. Crossing Illinois and Iowa, it strikes the Missouri river at three points.

These three points are the gateways into three great sections of the trans-Missouri region.

The Northern gate is Omaha, where the great Pacific road will take you to the land of gold and grapes, sunny mountains, and perpetual summer.

The middle gate is Plattsmouth, which opens upon the south half of Nebraska, south of the Platte river, a region unsurpassed on the continent for agriculture and grazing. Just here are the B. & M. Railroad lands, concerning which Geo. S. Harris, the land officer at Burlington, Iowa, can give you all information, and in the heart of them is Lincoln, the State Capital and present terminus of the road.

The Southern gate leads to Kansas, by connections with the St. Joe Road at Hamburg running direct to St. Joe and Kansas City

The trains of the Burlington run smoothly and safely, and make all connections. It runs the best of coaches, Pullman Palace and Pullman dining cars, and should you take the journey for the journey's sake alone, you will be repaid: or take it to find a home or a farm, and you cannot find either better than among the B. & M. lands, where you can buy on ten years' credit, and at a low price.

THE

Christian Family Companion

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Charity.

BY J. S. MCFADDEN.

"Charity suffereth long and is kind."—1 Cor. 13 : 4.

Paul in enumerating the various graces and gifts gave, as the sum of all, that of Charity. If we enjoy this gift, we will ever be on the safe side, and happy here and in the world to come; but if we lack this, we will be as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. It is love to God and man; and the only way we can show our love to God, is, by showing kindness, love and mercy to our fellow mortals; for how can we love God whom we have not seen, if we love not our brethren whom we have seen. Charity does not just consist in long prayers, long faces, in dress, or in being so very scrupulous in observing the Sabbath. If we are religious only on Sabbath days, our religion is vain; for what propriety is there in keeping this day so strictly and perhaps on Monday take our neighbor by the throat, and say, "pay me what thou owest me?" Such is a Sunday-christian; and no marvel then, that many excuse themselves from coming to the church, when they see professors do so. Still I do not think any man has an excuse for staying away from Christ; yet men seek them.

What a happy state of affairs it would be, were all men to have pure, God-like charity; what evils would be averted; what pangs would be spared; what happy families would there be, when they all drank deeply of peace and quietude, and show by their countenances that they are happy, and are desirous for all to drink at the same fountain. Oh, what a gracious state of affairs we would have, did all men love one another, and do all in their power to make others happy. Then there would be no law-suits, and lawyers would become honest men, and live by the sweat of their own, instead of by the sweat of their neighbor's brow. Then we would have no thieves, murderers and bad people generally. Then jails, penitentiaries, &c., would stand as monuments of the past; and future generations could be told that these monuments were used when men had not charity, but now they are not used. Then men would war no more, and no more cries of pain would be heard from the battle field; widows would not mourn, nor orphans cry for their lost parents; parents would not fear for their sons as now; grog-shops and gaming houses would no more send their thousands of victims in an unprepared state to meet their Creator. Then the distilleries would be turned into places where wholesome food could be had, and would no more make that accursed beverage which robs men of their senses, women of homes, and starves poor innocent children.

Then there would exist between man and man that confidence which is so desirable, that of not doubting a neighbor's word in any kind of transaction, but whatever is done, is done for mutual good.

Then men that are sent to Congress to make good laws and regulations for the people, would not spend time in drunkenness and wickedness—would not cavil, quarrel, and fight over the annexation of San Domingo, the Tariff, the Revenue, &c.; but would go to work and do that which is of the greatest good to the greatest number, and once in their lives be honest men. We would then have a very happy country and nation; and office holders would have some different notions of serving the public than now; for some (and they are not few) seem to think that the chief end of man is to steal from the public crib.

Then we would no more hear the cry of "Send us men to preach to the people:" but each church would select out those qualified, and send them forth; for many are ready to go, provided the church says so. Then would no brother ask, "whether it is according to the order of the Brethren to wear a soldier's overcoat, or blue cloth;" but charity would say, "brother, if you have such a coat and the weather demands you to wear it, do so; but it also says, "be not proud of your coat, or pay too much attention to your clothing, nor wear such that are only worn for fashion; but comport your clothing to that of your profession, be that humble modesty. Neither does charity say that if brethren will not do certain things, (but I forbear, for I see nothing is said in the last Companion, about—well never mind what,) that it ought to be made a test of fellowship. This is not the kind of charity that is contained in our Bibles in the west—Here we learn to follow after charity for it is long suffering.

If we have charity there are a good many things we can get along without having. We will not have so much controversy through the papers which is not edifying, but tends rather to strife. Come, now dear brethren, let us have peace, let us try to love one another; and not write those things which are a cause of strife.—Let us all be filled with Charity.

From a Young Sister.

Delay no longer, for now is the time of salvation; to-day is the time to serve God. Dear brethren and sisters, persecutors are arising on every hand. But why should I care for it when it is said: "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake, for their's is the kingdom of heaven?" For the scripture saith, "Whosoever believeth on Him shall not be ashamed; for there is no difference between the Jew and Greek, for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him."

"Swift the moments fly away,
First the hour and then the day,
Next the week, the month, the year,
Soon away and disappear.

[illegible]
With I speak, or think, or pray,
Whether waking, or asleep
I am call'd for [illegible] away."

[illegible]

There are many great evils [illegible] greater than squandering of precious time.

Life is a precious boon, given for a little while, that we may prepare for a greater gift—ETERNAL LIFE.

Death-bed Religion.

The above subject has been on my mind; and I am somtimes afraid that too many put religion off till they come on their death-bed, and are deceived at last. Religion means serving God; and man is placed here, and has all the privilege to serve God; but he neglects it from time to time, till at last he is stricken down with sickness, without any hope of coming to Christ. Then he is alarmed about his soul, and would serve God if he could, but it is too late.

It is often said this man or woman got religion on the death-bed. Now if religion signifies serving God, we must do what we are commanded to do by our Lord and Master. When a person comes on the death bed how can he do his commandments? Somtimes we see and hear that one can obey in baptism, but the majority are not privileged to do so. But they may sing and pray, and perhaps take the Communion; then it is said, "they died happy, and are gone to heaven." If they did it is all right, and I don't condemn it by any means; for God don't see as man sees. But I will try to warn those who are yet living out of Christ and his church, that it is a two-fold doubtful case. In the first place you are here and favored with all the privileges of hearing and reading the word of God; and you are called once and again to seek religion; and if you know that you must obey the gospel, and neglect it till you come on your death-bed, and then ask God to pardon you of your sins, I say it is a little doubtful whether he will pardon.

But saith one, "God is merciful, and he will hear and pardon us in the last hour." I acknowledge that God is merciful; but he is a just and true God too, and what he saith he intends to fulfill. Now in the second place, it is very doubtful whether you come on a death-bed at all. How many do we see, and hear of, who are called away without a moment's warning, and then if unprepared, you must acknowledge that it is too late to repent and serve God.

Now in conclusion a word yet to those of my friends and acquaintances who are yet living out of the church of God. Some told me already that they believe that we are the people of God, but they have excuses. One will say, "There is a brother or sister that is not fit to be in the church: I am just as good as he or she." Another will say, "That preacher is not fit to preach." Another will say, "I don't join the brethren, because they preach too long, or too many at a time; that is, in one meeting." And still another will say, "I know that the brethren are right, and I would join them, but my wife or husband is so against them, and says if I join them I must leave." Now my dear friends, all these excuses will avail you nothing, when you come to your death-bed; and I fear, if you know your duty and neglect it till you come to die then call on God to save you, I say again, I fear your case is doubtful. For Christ said if ye love anything more than me ye cannot be my disciples. I have written out of love. NOAH B. BLOUGH.

Salem College.

An advertisement of this Institution has been in several of our periodicals. What and who started it? Some years ago the denomination of the United Brethren having received numerous acquisitions of members to their church, concluded to build a college in the town of Bourbon. They accordingly started it, and after several years succeeded in getting it under cover. Through some divisions among them they became weak, and ceased their work on the building. Thus it stood for about five years when trustees offered the house to the Brethren if they would pay the indebtedness ($ 1500) and complete it. The town and vicinity subscribed $1000 toward completing it. Some brethren in Northern Indiana having agitated the subject of a school appointed a committee to examine and take action. They came, accepted the proposition, employed workmen and finished the building which is known to-day as Salem College. It is a very substantial brick building stayed with iron rods, and contains fire rooms.

The town would give no deed until the building was completed and occupied for school purposes. They claimed it was still their building until the deed was made, and they accordingly made a day of rejoicing on what they termed its dedication. This was offensive to the Brotherhood, who claimed that it was out of order. But if the brethren will please notice, the church had nothing at all to do with it.

Some erroneous impressions have been made by a catalogue sent out, without however the consent, or indeed knowledge of those connected with the institution. Some of the friends of the institution thinking to assist it by such a course, prepared them, and placed in them names of men whom, I suppose were not consulted, as directors. Also a faculty which to their vision it appeared plausible to represent by names. This we want the brotherhood distinctly to understand, was done outside of its bounds, by those who without due deliberation intended to befriend it. And he who is now chosen as President, knew nothing of the proceedings till he recieved a pamphlet through the mail, where he was then residing. He protested against it, but already numbers had been sent out.

Salem College is not designed to make men and women proud and fashionable. The brethren have control of it entirely, and expect the future teachers to be members. Its design is to educate the youth of both sexes, not to make preachers as some suppose, but to make a good foundation on which to build the future life of our sons and daughters. And why would brethren think it worse to send their children to a school under the control of the church, than to that of another denomination? for they will educate. Let not all reason, because I had no education and got along pretty well without it, my children need none. Not so my brother.

"See the mighty host advancing,
Satan leading on;
Mighty men around us falling
Courage almost gone."

but, let us hold the ancient fort, and strengthen it, throw up our earthworks and prepare to meet the enemy on ground of our own choosing.

"What do ye more than Others?" Matth. 5: 47.

My dear Christian friends, let us try with great zeal to take heed unto the mysterious light of the gospel, that we, as the chosen people of God, may in this light learn to know and see our depraved condition; also what our Lord and Savior had in view when he spoke these most serious and important words, "What do ye more than others?" I believe that he did not speak these words unto the world, nor to the so-called Christian, which is yet worldly minded and walketh after carnal reasoning, but unto us, who, after we are called with this high and holy calling, take the word for our compass, and strive for the truth. And for us it is very necessary in these last, sinful and dark days, to be in perfect zeal concerning our high and religious duties; and often enter into the quiet chamber of our hearts, and pray to the Lord that he may enlighten our eyes.

Yet a few remarks as concerning the above words. We sometimes hear the glad tidings, this or that neighbor lately got religion. We then rejoice; and as we get to see him, we look for him to do more than he formerly did: our eyes are ready to look to his conduct; and if he does still walk after the inclinations of the lusts of the flesh, we think he does not do more than he did, and has no true religion; and we have great reason to think so.

But now let us who are called turn to our hearts, and prove our own work; whether we lead a different life from the world, or whether we do "more than others." Some so-called Christian might think; "Well, I give alms, I go to meeting, and there feel happy every Sunday; and I am also a member in the church." But I seek not the follower of our Savior there, nor in any other outward performances; but Christ's kingdom shall be raised up within our hearts. We also read in the Prophet Isaiah, that in these our last times, God will write his laws in our hearts, and he will be our God, and will dwell within us. And if we then, by the wise foreknowledge of God, are ordained for such a royal people and holy priesthood, there should certainly be a mark of difference between us and others. We should be wise, and take great heed unto our words, that we may know when it is to the edifying of the hearers to speak, and what to speak and when to keep our tongue bridled. David says he kept his tongue bridled, while he saw the ungodly before him; and I think that is the very best time. Christ also says that we are accountabel in the final judgment, for every word that proceedeth out of our mouth which is not necessary. Then woe unto those who take a delight in speaking of their neighbor's faults. Let the world take their course, but we should not speak anything of our neighbor which we would not dare to speak when he is present; and if we have it in practice, "what do we more than others?"

One great help for us to withstand this wicked temptation, is to avoid all places where the ungodly dead is done; such as in our days to leave home to pass time in stores, in the house of [illegible] taverns. If I see the Christian wasting [illegible] time, when I could give me [illegible] to his honor, [illegible] away, I have reason to think [illegible] has no "more than others." The Christian also would [illegible] of God, should keep away from worldly company if possible. [illegible] our calling leads us there, we do well if we take Christ [illegible] But if we go among the world when our calling does not lead [illegible] there, we go on strange ground, and the enemy gets power over us.

One high duty that we owe to God is to read the first, and if we disregard the duty, we will go cold in Christ's service. We have think God when we lie down to sleep, we pray, and when we rise in the morning we take and read a little in the Bible, and pray to God that he may bless us, and that we may [illegible] and [illegible] but [illegible] a prayer [illegible] the [illegible] we go after our calling, we should not [illegible] from morning till evening, for the things of this world—"heaping riches upon riches, not knowing who shall gather them," as David says.

The Minister's Support.

This subject is of more importance than some of our brethren and sisters are aware of. It is a subject that is so badly crippled, that it will be a hard matter to get it set right; but notwithstanding the lameness, as long as there is life there is hope; so let us all get about the work, and set it right, before it causes a final death to the church.

In the first place, please allow me to say, that our young ministers will be obliged to devote more of their time to study, and our elder ministers, more of their time to preaching; and in order for them to do so, it is highly necessary for us all to devote more of our time in searching the Scriptures, verse by verse, in order to learn our duty towards our ministering brethren.

The Scriptures point out our duty very plainly, and they also point out the duty of our ministering brethren. Come, now, let us see if it is not our duty to support our ministers for preaching the gospel. And brother minister, I ask you to assist us in searching the Scriptures, and learn therein that it is your duty to receive the compensation offered to you for preaching the gospel. Certainly if we have New Testament proof for it, we can believe it, and if we believe it, we must carry out our faith by our works; for faith without works is dead. We profess to be New Testament people, but if we do not comply with the New Testament we had better quit professing it. "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple, and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." 1 Cor. 9: 13, 14. Now let us examine when the Lord did ordain that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel. Let us turn to Matthew 10: 9, 10, and see what the Lord told the twelve when he sent them out to preach the gospel. He said to them: "Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey; neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves, for the workman is worthy of his meat. Well, now, dear brethren and sisters, we have learned from the word (the highest evidence) that it is the Lord's command that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel, "for the workman is worthy of his meat."

And, brother minister, let us examine and learn what you are to do in order to earn your meat and live of the gospel. After the Lord had died that ignominious death upon the cross and arose again, he proclaimed that great commission to the eleven disciples: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen." Matthew 28: 19, 20. And now, brethren and sisters, did you ever take into consideration that it is only on conditions that the Lord promised to be with us even unto the end of the world? Mark records in the 16th chap. 15, 16. "And he said udto them, go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." And now, ministers of the gospel, how do you think that all the world, or every creature, is going to believe enough of God's word to render obedience to the gospel unless you go and teach it to them? for you well know that "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," as Paul told the Roman brethren in the 10th chap., 13, 14: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preachers?" Just let me say to our ministers that there are thousands of poor souls in the United States that have never heard one of our brethren preach, and, indeed, some have not so much as heard tell of them. And now, brethren, do you positively believe that you are living up to God's precepts in full, when part of the world is without teaching of the word? Allow me the liberty of saying, through the very best of feelings towards the whole church, that it is only on conditions that the Lord has promised to be with you even unto the end of the world? it is providing you preach the gospel to all the world and to every creature, in order that they can have the opportunity of hearing and believing and obeying the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Do you believe that you can do the gospel justice when you only preach and study one half of your time and the other half are engaged in your worldly occupation, to render a support to yourselves and families? But how can you devote all of your time to traveling, and studying, and preaching, unless you will quit your worldly occupation, and receive a support from the church? You dare not be absent half of your time from your families unless you have some one to carry on your worldly occupation in order that your wife and children can live independent. If our ministers would receive a support for laboring in the word, it would then enable them to employ help to fill their occupation at home, while they are out ministering the word. Come let us see how the twelve apostles managed on one occasion. "And in those days when the number of the disciples were multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration. Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them and said, It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables; therefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business; but we will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word." Acts 6: 1, 4. And now let us turn over and read what Paul's instructions were to Timothy: "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine. For the scripture saith, thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn, and the laborer is worthy of his reward. 1st Tim. 5: 17, 18. And Paul also informed Timothy: "No man that warreth, entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier; and if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully." And he also said, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." 2 Tim. 2: 4, 5, 15. Now, ambassadors of Christ, how can you fulfil the above quotations and work with your hands to supply the necessaries of your wives and children? and you dare not go away from home unless you know what your families are to live on until your return; "for if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel. So then, ministers of the gospel, would it not add much good to the world, and also much good to the church, if you would all agree to devote your time to studying and traveling and preaching, and then receive a competent support from the church? But if you preach the word, "be instant in season, out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine." You will have to devote more of your time to preaching than any of you are doing at present, and then you will begin to think something about a competent support from the church; "For who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? Who planteth a vineyard and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock and eateth not of the milk of the flock? 1 Cor. 9: 7.

Now brethren and sisters, to one and all in the whole church, far and near, let us turn over the sacred pages and read what is our duty individually towards our God and towards the church, and towards our ministering brethren. Read what Paul wrote to the Thessalonians: "And we beseech you brethren, to know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their works sake, and be at peace among yourselves." 1 Thess. 5: 12, 13. And now turn over and read what the apostle wrote to the church at Corinth: "Now, concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye: upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2. "But this I say, he which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man, according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give: not grudgingly, or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver." 2 Cor. 9: 6, 7. Now give the sacred pages another turn over, and read what the apostle wrote to the Galatian brethren: "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things. Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not. As we have therefore opportunity let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Gal. 6: 6—10. And here is another quotation in the Word that strikes my mind: 2 Cor. 11: 7—9, and we will find there that the apostle robbed other churches, taking wages of them to do the church at Corinth service. It seems as though the apostle did not labor with his own hands to supply his worldly wants; but the brethren that came from Macedonia supplied his wants. But would it look right, or would it be right at this age of the gospel, for one arm of the church here in Indiana to allow another arm of the church in some other state of the union to supply our minister's worldly wants, and thus receive their labors free? I certainly think that the brethren and sisters will be unanimous upon that question in answering no, no. And here the question may arise by some of our brethren or sisters, that if this letter is sound doctrine, why then did the apostle on one occasion say to his brethren, I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel; yea, ye yourselves know that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me." Acts 2: 33, 34. But in the 35th verse of the same chapter, we can learn the reason why he did not want their silver or gold or apparel: he wanted to teach them to be liberal with one another; for he said, "I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, it is more blessed to give than to receive." Well, now, if it is more blessed to give than to receive, give our ministers a competent support for laboring in the gospel, that the gospel can reach all the world and every creature. And as we believe that there is but one church, then let us be the people to spread the gospel in its ancient order, as the ancient style is the only one that is acceptable with God. And are not our ministers the ones to perform that great work? But how can they accomplish this work of necessity without money to travel with, and also money to support themselves and families whilst they are at the work? And how are they to get the money unless the church will provide it for them? and how can the church provide the money for them, unless one and all individually will lend a helping hand, and give our ministers a competent support?

Now let us take into consideration what it will take to render a support for our ministers and their families. For instance, suppose that the Lord would prosper us with an income of twenty five dollars per year, could we not afford to giv four per cent per annum, which would only be one dollar a year? And again, if our income were fifty dollars per annum, at four per cent it would only be two dollars per annum. And, again suppose that our income should be one hundred dollars per annum, at four per cent it would just be four dollars per annum, and so on. But now to the rich brother, suppose your income is one thousand dollars per annum at four per cent it would just cost you forty dollars per annum to pay the ministers. Well you can better afford to pay forty dollars for the sake of the Gospel, with a thousand dollar income, than a poor member can pay one dollar with twenty-five dollars of an income. And now let us see what Paul's instruction was to Timothy, in regard to the rich.—"Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high minded nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good; that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life."—1 Tim. 7: 17–19. The next question is, would not four per cent on the dollar of each member's income per annum, amply enable our ministers to hire help to carry on their worldly occupations, in order that they can render obedience to God's holy Word, and also to render their families independent of the world? But see here, brethren and sisters, don't understand me by the word independent, that our ministers' wives and daughters ought not to work at all, whilst we are all at work and supporting them; but it would be very prudent for them to perform as much of their household affairs as their bodily strength and health will allow. And would it not be very prudent for the ministers' wives to [illegible] and also to encourage their husbands to preach the word in the ancient order? And also to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord? And let them "teach the young women to love their husbands" and to be prompt in every good work: "whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and the wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price; for after this manner in the old time, the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands." And again, I do not wish to be understood that our ministers should become extremely rich or proud or lazy; but let them always be engaged in some good work, and when circumstances will not permit them to be away from home, then is their time to study to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. I am well aware that money is at the root of all evil, providing it is carried to an extreme; and I am also aware that by giving our ministers a competent support, it will once in a while induce impostors to creep into the church in order that they can get to preach for the sake of filthy lucre. But in such a case we can know the tree by its fruits, for a good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit. We find among us a speaker that does not bring forth good fruit, or walks disorderly, then all we have to do is to rein him up on gospel terms, and excommunicate him from the church. We do not want our ministers to wear ruffled or plaited shirt bosoms or a breast-pin or rings on their fingers, or any other article that is considered superfluity; but let their dress be plain and modest. And we also must have our ministers "given to hospitality, apt to teach; not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre, but patient; not a brawler, not covetous;" "not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil. Moreover, he must have a good report of them that are without, lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil.

And now, in conclusion of this essay, I will just say to the whole church far and near, with the very best of feelings toward one and all, that I have no apologies to make for writing this essay to the church, as I have given New Testament proof for all the remarks that I have made, except the above tax at four per cent, which is a question to be considered, for, from the fact that if ever we support our ministers for laboring in the Gospel, we will be obliged to come upon some agreement or system, in order that all will distribute according as the Lord has prospered them. The above tax is only an example to show that the poor member cannot distribute as much as the rich. It is to be supposed, for instance, the four per cent does not meet the approbation of the majority of the church, it can be reduced to two per cent, providing it will be sufficient to send the Gospel to all the world and every creature. Again I say that I have given New Testament proof for all of my remarks except the four per centage; and when there can be Gospel proof produced for anything, it should never give offence to, or be denied by, New Testament people. But it should be acknowledged, preached, and practiced.

And now a few words to the brother or sister that will object to the few remarks that I have made on this subject. It is not my design that this essay shall give any offence to any member in the church. For if ever I did anything in the fear of the Lord, or if ever I spoke or wrote any thing with an eye single to the glory of God, it is this essay. And now the great query with some may be, whether the author of this is a minister's wife, working for self-interest? To which I answer positively, I am not a minister's wife; but I am working for Jesus and for the good of the church and for the sake of the Gospel. All the self-interest I ever expect to receive by this work, is a little more preaching than we have here been in the habit of hearing. There are twenty-one members here in this neighborhood, under the care of Elder George Studebaker, who resides some thirty-five miles from here, and having several other churches under his care, unables him to come to preach to us as often as we would like.—Sometimes three or four months pass by, that we have no preaching. We have a comfortable and plain little meeting-house, which we call Walnut Level; and if some influential brother would come in here and preach to the people, he might be the means of much good being done. Do not think that brother Studebaker can do all the work; for he is getting old, and is unable to travel very much. So it is impossible for our elder brother to do much more for us than he does do, considering the extensive work he has under his care. And now, brethren and sisters, before I close I must inform you how many times we have had preaching here within a year, and I am quite certain that you will sympathize with us, when you learn how seldom we get to sit under the sound of Gospel preaching. Elder Samuel C. Stump preached to us in March, 1870; and in April 1870, brethren Studebaker, Stump and Hamilton, held a three days meeting here; and the last Sabbath in July, 1870, brother S. C. Stump preached his farewell sermon at Walnut Level; and on the first day of Sept., 1870, emigrated to Nebraska. From the last Sabbath in July, we had no preaching until the 16th of October, when brother Studebaker preached a funeral sermon, and from that we had no preaching until Feb. 1871, when brother Studebaker held a two days meeting; and now we will have no more preaching until the 15th of April. But brethren and sisters do not understand me that I am complaining of our elder brethren not laboring more for us, for indeed I think that they have done enough of preaching without money; but I am complaining because our ministers are not supported, that they can afford to do more preaching. Come, brethren and sisters, waken up, do not go to sleep reading this little work, and think just because an ignorant, weak sister, is the author of it, that it does not amount to much; but always bear in mind that we have no legality for claiming a promise that is laid down in the New Testament, outside our obedience. And now, dear brethren and sisters in Christ, I will leave the subject with you to investigate in the fear of the Lord, hoping that you will most agreeably accept of it, acknowledge it, preach it and practice it; and may the time soon come that we will all be of one mind, and all speak the same thing, and be of one judgment, is the prayer of your weak sister.

MARIA E. SHIVELY.

For the COMPANION.

Letter to a Friend in Iowa.

Dear Cousin: In addressing you through this medium, I desire to use language that will not give offence, yet will clearly point out a few of the errors of Universalism. I will here append a few reasons why Universalism is a delusion; not because I wish to enter into controversy, but because I desire to see this soul-destroying doctrine entirely removed from those who are near and dear to me by the ties of consanguinity and friendship. Indeed I feel as though I should rejoice whenever I see any one defeat an advocate of this doctrine, which is so offensive to my Lord and your Lord. While I was at your residence I discovered, in your possession, a sufficient amount of intelligence to point out the spirit of opposition that may be seen in the doctrine of Universalism.

The first argument I shall give to prove that this doctrine is an imposition, is, that you have never yet read a historical account of the holy apostles, by which you can prove that they, in any manner, countenanced it. No living man can bring up any evidence, whatever, by which to prove that any professor of Christianity believed in this doctrine until after the church began to be endangered, apparently by the admission of apostates. That the church of Christ was only apparently endangered by the admission of these false teachers is evident from the fact that they were not long permitted to remain in the church, but were expelled, unless they were willing to renounce their erroneous dogmas. It is true that in the early age of the church, were found those who were too self-willed to give up their peculiar notions, and for this reason were excommunicated; after which they would continue to advocate their peculiar doctrines, which accounts to some extent, for the many so-allced christian organizations in the world.

The second argument which I shall advance against Universalism is, that the so-called organization cannot be traced to an earlier date than the last century. Now if the doctrine is a good one, or the Universalist church is Christ's church, it is strange, indeed, that it has been kept hidden from the world until this late date.—I am well aware that Universalists claim that God knew the wicked nature of men, and for this reason established his law in order that men would love one another. This we admit; but according to the dogma, that to implant love into the human breast is the only object which God had in view, when he sent his Son into the world, God must be a jester! Strange indeed, that God would tell a little joke in order to persuade people to love one another! Now I think it is much better to believe just what the Bible teaches, and act accordingly; and then, if Christ meant what he said we are safe; and if it should be possible that the Bible is only a religious jest, designed to cause people to love one another, we will be just as safe as though we were Universalists. Here we see there is one point gained by not being a Universalist. My advice to you is to read the Christian Family Companion instead of Universalist periodicals; accept the Bible as a reality, instead of a joke, and you will have more than all the riches of this world. Wishing you prosperity both spiritual and temporal, I will bring these lines to a close, hoping to hear from you ere long.

Affectionately your cousin

Callamer, Ind.

It is a sad truth that millions are born into the world humans, but pass through life like mere animals, and die more miserable than the brutes; and this, too, when in the sunlight of the Gospel, they might live to the praise of God, to the honor of their own names and the welfare of their fellow mortals, and be prepared for a peaceful death and everlasting life.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. 16.

CHRIST'S APPREHENSION, TRIAL, AND CRUCIFIXION.

6. Several important things took place just before our Savior's apprehension; such as, the traitorous kiss, the address of Jesus to Judas and to those that were with him, cutting off the ear of Malchus by Peter and the healing miracle by the Lord, and the command to put away the sword, saying, "For all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword;" for these things occured in such rapid succession, that in a very short time they were on their way. "Then the band and the captain and the officers of the Jews took Jesus, and bound him, and led him away to Annas first; for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas, which was the high priest that same year." John 18: 12, 13. But without tarrying here, they hastened on to the palace of Caiaphas, the high priest; "where were assembled all the chief priests and the elders and the scribes." Mark 14: 53. We regard this as having been about 2 o'clock in the morning, or two hours after midnight.

7. "Now Caiaphas was he, which gave counsel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man should die for the people." John 18: 14. Before this man Jesus was arraigned and had his mock trial. "And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them. But a certain maid beheld him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man also was with him. And he denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not. And after a little while another saw him, and said: Thou art also of them.—And Peter said, Man I am not. And about the space of one hour after, another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with him; for he is a Galilean. And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately while he yet spake, the cock crew. And the Lord turned and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And Peter went out and wept bitterly." Luke 22: 50—62. By a careful examination of this scripture it will appear that Peter's third denial of Christ was about an hour and a half after their arrival at the palace of the high priest: the first was soon after their arrival: the second "after a little while;" and the third, "about the space of an hour after." This brings us forward to half past three o'clock in the morning. During this time the trial of Jesus was progressing; and probably about the time Peter went out and wept or soon after, they pronounced the Son of God and King of Israel a blasphemer, and condemned him to be guilty of death. We place the close of this trial at near 4 o'clock in the morning.

8. The trial before Caiaphas, being over he was left in the hands of soldiers for safe keeping until the morning. "And the men that held Jesus mocked him and smote him. And when they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face, and asked him, saying, Prohpesy, who is it that smote thee? And many other things spake they blasphemously against him." Luke 22: 63–65. This inhuman and blasphemous conduct continued until break of day. We have now passed through the darkness of that night; and Oh, what darkness it was! A proper view of the circumstances and events of that night should move the sympathies of the world and bathe all eyes in tears.—But the end is not yet.

9. "And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people and the chief priests and the scribes came together and led him into their council, saying, Art thou the Christ? tell us. And he said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe; and if I also ask you, ye will not answer me, nor let me go. Hereafter ye shall see the Son of man sit on the right hand of the power of God. Then said they all, Art thou the Son of God? And he said unto them, Ye say that I am. And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard of his own mouth. And the whole multitude of them arose and led him unto Pilate." Luke 22: 66—71; 23: 1. Of this council Mark says, "And straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and scribes and the whole council, and bound Jesus and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate. Mark 15: 1. Matthew also says: "When the morning was come, all the chief priests and elders of the people, took counsel against Jesus to put him to death; and when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor." Matth. 27: 1, 2. From the united testimony of these witnesses, we conclude that it was yet early, perhaps near sunrise, when they delivered Jesus to Pilate; for it was day-light when the council met; and their consultation, the binding and leading away to Pilate, would occupy some time. But their plans were all laid, and they executed them as rapidly as they could.

The record of John must not be passed by; for it is very important. He says: "Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the hall of Judgment: and it was early; and the Jews themselves went not into the judgment-hall lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the passover." John 18: 28. He says nothing about the council as soon as it was day; but he states that "it was early" when Jesus was brought unto the judgment-hall. But John tells us in this scripture that "the Jews themselves went not into the judgment-hall; and he also gives the reason why they did not.—The reason was, "that they MIGHT EAT the passover." Upon this we remark:

1st. The Passover here spoken of was yet in the future. This is evident from the language "that they might eat the passover."

2nd. The Passover here spoken of was not the feast of unleavened bread, as is claimed by some. It is a rule that holds good in every case, that the definition of a term may be substituted for it without destroying the sense; and a clear definition substituted for the term brings the sense out more clearly. Let us, then, substitute the phrase "the feast of unleavened bread," for the term "passover." Here it is: "The Jews themselves went not into the judgment-hall, lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the feast of unleavened bread." What, eat the feast of unleavened bread! Who ever read of such eating? Is this bringing out the sense of the text? We regard it as talking nonsense; and are really astonished that any person, with even ordinary intelligence, should assume such a position. We have read of eating unleavened bread seven days, and of observing or keeping the feast of unleavened bread; but never of eating the feast of unleavened bread. No, it means just what it says.

3rd. Since, then, the eating of the Passover here spoken of refers to the Passover proper; and since it was yet in the future, it is a settled fact that Christ and his apostles did not eat the Passover in the by gone night. We think this argument is fairly put; and we do not see how it is possible to evade the conclusion.

10. The night of agony was past; the preperation day had fully come; and as the beams of the rising sun were bending over the mount of Olives on the east, Jesus was in the judgment-hall of the Roman governor, whither infatuated priests and elders had brought him, that the death sentence which they had already pronounced might be ratified. These sanctified hypocrites, who would not tread a Gentile court lest they should defile themselves, were busily engaged in suborning witnesses to testify against the Son of God—the King of Israel. They set about their work like men who were not to be defeated in their purpose; and they were urgent to do their work of slaughter before the "feast day, lest there be an uproar among the people." Matth. 26: 5.

"Pilate then went out unto them, and said, What accusation bring ye against this man? They answered and said unto him, if he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee. Then said Pilate unto them, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law.—The Jews therefore said unto him, it is not lawful for us to put any man to death. John 18: 29—31. The Jews were under the Roman government, and were so far shorn of their civil power, that they could not put any man to death. But their mind was fully made up as to what punishment should be inflicted upon Jesus. Want of space forbids a detailed account of the trial before Pilate. But we notice that, as Pilate was examining Jesus, he discovered that he was a Galilean, and belonged to Herod's jurisdiction; he therefore "sent him to Herod, who himself was at Jerusalem at this time." (see Luke 23: 1—12.) This Pilate did because he wished to divest himself of the responsibilities connected with this trial, and not as an act of friendship to Herod; "for before they were at enmity between themselves." We assign to this examination one half hour.

"And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad; for he was desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him, and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him. Then he questioned with him in many words; but he answered him not a word—And the chief priests and scribes stood and vehemently accused him. And Herod with his men of war set him at naught, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe, and sent him again to Pilate." Luke 23: 8—11. To this examination before Herod we also assign half an hour, making one hour from the time he was first brought unto Pilate till he stood before him the second time.

Pilate then endeavored to release Jesus; pleading that he had examined him before them and had found him innocent; he had also sent him to Herod, and yet "nothing worthy of death" was found against him. He therefore proposed to chastise him and let him go. Luke says: "For of necessity he must release one unto them at the feast." That feast was the feast of the Passover. He must necessarily "release one unto them at the feast:" but he had not yet released any one; therefore it is shown again that the feast had not yet come, and that Christ and his apostles had not eaten the Passover.

As they were urgent in their cries that Jesus should be put to death, crying out, "Crucify him, crucify him," Pilate, like many other governors, departed from the course of rectitude and justice, to gratify the unholy desire of a number of indignant fanatics. But to rid himself of the crime of crucifying an innocent person, "When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person; see ye to it. Then answered all the people, and said, his blood be on us, and on our children" Matth 27: 24, 25.—While Pilate was trying to release Jesus, the Jews said, "If thou let this man go, thou art not Cesar's friend; whosoever maketh himself a king, speaketh against Cesar. When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth, and sat down in the judgment-seat, in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha. And it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour; and he said unto the Jews Behold your King!" John 19: 12—14.

John says two things in relation to the time when Pilate said, "Behold your King!" first, "It was the preparation of the passover;" & second, it was "About the sixth hour." The first we shall notice now, and the second, when we shall have pursued our subject a little farther. We shall not now consume time and space in contending about the meaning of the term "Passover," as used in the foregoing text. For once we will be liberal. If you say it refers to the Passover proper, you may have it so; and if you prefer to assume that it means the feast of unleavened bread, we shall not object: the reader may fix this up to suit himself But we will say, for the gratification of such as might desire to know our position, that we understand it to include both. Do you inquire why we seem to be so indifferent about this matter? If you do, here is our answer: We are liberal because it is altogether immaterial; and it is immaterial because the preparation for the Passover proper and for the feast of unleavened bread took place simultaneously—on the same day—on the fourteenth day of the month. This needs no argumentation, as it has already been fully proven We showed before that the Passover was eaten on the night of the fifteenth; that the fifteenth day of the month was the first day of the feast of unleavened bread; that the Passover must be killed on the fourteenth day, near its close, and that the leaven must be removed on the same day, in preparation for the feast of unleavened bread; that the fourteenth day was called the day of unleavened bread—the preparation day—"The preparation of the Passover."

From these well established facts, it is as clear as the sun at mid-day, that the time had not yet come for the eating of the Passover, and that the time for killing the Passover was yet some hours in the future: and consequently it is just as clear that Christ and his disciples had not eaten the Passover on the night of his agony.

11 "Pilate, willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified. And the soldiers led him away into the hall, called Pretorium; and they called together the whole band; and they clothed him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head, and began to salute him, Hail, King of the Jews! And they smote him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon him, and bowing their knees, worshipped him. And when they had mocked him, they took off the purple from him, and led him out to crucify him. * * * And they bring him unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, The place of a skull. And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh; but he received it not. * * * And it was the third hour, and they crucified him." Mark 15: 15—25.

From a careful notice of this touching record, we conclude that more than an hour's time must have elapsed from the time Christ was delivered to be crucified till the dreadful deed was done; and, as he was crucified at the third hour, or about 9 o'clock, A. M., he must have been given into the hands of the soldiers before 8 o'clock in the morning of the "preparation of the passover."

We are now prepared to notice the phrase, "and about the sixth hour," in John 19: 14. It does not mean the sixth hour of the night; for at that hour they had just come to the garden of Gethsemane, while this was when Jesus was before Pilate the second time; and he was not before him the first time till about sunrise. It does not mean the sixth hour of the day; for he was crucified at the "third hour," and Pilate had passed sentence and delivered him to be crucified before the second hour. We before showed that it was about an hour from the time he was before Pilate first until they returned to Pilate from Herod; hence, as it was about sunrise when he was first brought to Pilate, it was an hour after sunrise, or about 7 o'clock A. M., when he was brought to Pilate the second time. Now, as the phrase refers to time near the close of the trial, and as Jesus was delivered to be crucified before 8 o'clock, we think this phrase must apply to about half past 7 o'clock A. M. "It was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour" of Christ's trial; for it was before shown that he was apprehended in the garden about half past one o'clock A. M.—an hour and a half after midnight. "The sixth hour," in this connection, means the sixth hour of his trial.

Railroad Privileges.

To avoid disappointments, knowing that there is much misunderstanding rife, regarding the Excursion privileges, granted by the Railroads, to and from the Annual Meeting, we offer a few words of explanation.

Let it be fairly understood that all who wish to avail themselves of the excursion favors, must send their names, post office, county and state, as well as the name of the Railroad and the station, at which you expect to take the cars, to brother C. Custer, No 475 Franklin St Philadelphia.—Brother Custer will thereupon send you an order directing your ticket agent to sell you an excursion ticket, from the place where you start to the end of the road, or to such place as you may be required to change cars, and to return. For instance: You start from a point west from Chicago. You present your order (which you obtained from brother Custer) to the ticket agent at Chicago, whereupon he will sell you a ticket to Pittsburg and return to Chicago, at the rate of two cents a mile both ways. At Pittsburg you present another order (also obtained from brother Custer) and the ticket agent there will sell you a ticket to Harrisburg and return to Pittsburg, at the same rates. At Harrisburg you will present another order, which will secure you a ticket to the stopping place and return to Harrisburg.

It will be well to remember that with these tickets you will not be allowed to stop off and lay over and resume the journey.

By following these instructions, there will be no trouble; but be sure and give your name, postoffice, and state, and name of station, and on what R. R. Application should be made at once.

We are not aware of any privileges granted by roads West of Chicago.—They could be obtained if application would be made.

"Important Questions."

Under the above heading, on page 261, of last of week's paper, we published an article from brother Daniel Snowberger, and by mistake the accompanying note was omitted. In the note he states that it was handed to him on a slip of paper, in the German language, by brother Wm. Howe, and that he had translated it for the Companion. We regret the omission, as brother Daniel gets up his manuscript in good style, and its manner of appearance in our columns indicated it to be original, which was not claimed. With all our care errors will occur.

Friend Holsinger: With my own I have now sent you five subscribers, and I am an outsider. I hope that each of the brethren of the church will do as much for you as I have, little as it is. All my subscribers that I have talked with speak very highly of your paper. I will still try and get some more subscribers, as I see you have made another call.

H. Longanecker.

Hillgrove, Ohio.

You have done your part well, friend Longanecker, and you have our thanks. Hope our paper may give satisfaction to yourself and your subscribers. We are pleased when we can please others, because we think it is an indication that the people are willing to receive the sound doctrine.

If you have convenience, we would be glad to have you make an effort to help fill the last call for one thousand new subscribers; as we have no doubt you would succeed in obtaining several names. It is highly probable that a number of our brethren will fail to fill their quotas. Some have very poor opportunities; some could not if they would, and a few would not if they could. The working bees must keep up the hive. The same is true in every other useful enterprise. Of course it becomes us to make provision for those who cannot work.—We do not like to "drive the horse that pulls," neither do we like to be left in the lurch; so we give the word for help, and receive aid from those who heed our calls.

Brother Holsinger: As the tobacco war has not stopped yet, I will write a few lines for the Companion. When Nicodemus came to the Savior, the Savior did not ask him whether he chewed tobacco or eat swine's flesh.

The above is just as it came to us, without name or place. Will the author please tell us which side of the question he is on. We cannot decide. Nicodemus being a Jew, the Savior had no need to ask him whether he ate swine's flesh, for no Israelite would eat it. And as for chewing tobacco, that abomination had not yet been introduced. But we will wait and see what our correspondent means by this strange proposition.

"I have used no tobacco for six weeks. Think I can hold out?"

Of course you can; why should you not? You are a man of sound mind, and good judgment, and we see no earthly reason why you should not have control of your appetite. But you must not trifle with it. When you see another using it, you must not allow your appetite to cause you to wish for it; but imagine that it is offensive, and that you are an anti-tobacconist out and out, and it will powerfully assist you. And in your case, being a Christian and a minister of God's word, we recommend especially closet devotion. God will help you, if you call upon him believing. He has said that holiness becomes his house, and he will assist his children in establishing it.

Answers to Correspondents

David Clem. Right,—$1.40.

D. S Cripe. The $4.50 came to hand Feb. 27th. We do not remember the poetry. What was it?

Martin Bowers. All right.

Samuel Ulrich. The books were not sent. Thank you for calling our attention to the matter. Hope all will be right now.

Eldridge V. Keyler. We have no better work upon the immortality of the soul than the Bible. Study it and you will attain to the truth.

Rebecca E. Lohman. Your P. Y., is paid for; and you have a credit of 25 cents on the C. F. C. We are now sending the P. Y. to M. L.

Esther Stoner. We cannot tell why it is: the names are all right in our book. If we knew what numbers are missing we might send them.

Landon West. Communications for our paper should be sent to envelopes, and paid for at letter rates.—This is according to law. Hope to pay you a visit at some time, but can fix no date at present.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Israelites Crossing the Red Sea.

Before them lay the restless deep,
Behind the foeman pressed,
And every face grew dark with fear,
And anguish filled each breast,
Save one, the leader's, he serene
Beheld with dauntless mind,
The heaving deep outspread before,
The foe that pressed behind.

"Why hast thou brought us forth for this"
The people loudly cry—
"Were there no graves in Egypt's land,
That here we come to die?"
Yet clear and calm above the din,
Arose the prophet's word,
"Stand still, stand still, and ye shall see Salvation from the Lord."

"Fear not, for they whom now ye see,
Your eyes no more shall view;
Peace to your fears! your fathers' God
This day shall fight for you;
For Egypt in her haughty pride
And stubbornness abhorred,
This day in bitterness shall learn
Jehovah is the Lord!"

He spoke, and o'er the Red Sea's flood
He stretched his awful wand;
And lo! the startled waves retired
Abashed on either hand,
And, like a mighty rampart, rose
To guard that narrow way,
Mysterious, that before the hosts
Of ransomed Israel lay.

Oh! strange and solemn was the road,
Which they were called to tread,
With mysteries of the ancient deep
Around their footsteps spread—
With ocean's unknown floor laid bare
Before their wondering eyes,
And the strange, water wall that thus
On either hand did rise.

Yet fearlessly with steadfast faith,
Their leader led them on,
While from behind a heavenly light
Through the dread passage shone—
Light for that lone and trembling band
Beamed out with radience clear,
While Egypt's hosts came groping on
'Mid darkness dense and drear.

'Tis past, and on Arabia's coast
The tribes of Israel stand,
While fierce and fast Egyptia's host
Approach that quiet strand;
Though darkness like an awful vail
Hangs o'er that dreadful path,
Still on they desperately press
In bitterness and wrath.

Then slowly once again arose
The Hebrew prophet's hand,
And o'er the deep, again he stretched
That strange, mysterious wand:
The rushing waters closed in might Above that pathway lone,
And Pharaoh, in his haughty pride,
And all his host were gone.

Wail, Egypt, wail! thy crown of pride
Is humbled in the dust,
And thou, though late, art brought to know
That Jacob's God is just;
Thy haughty king and chosen men
Lie buried 'neath the wave,
And thou at bitter cost hast learned
That Israel's God can save.

Rejoice, O chosen seed, rejoice!
Thy God hath set thee free;
Remember thou to fear his name,
And he'll remember thee.
So then, O Israel, lift thy voice
In one triumphant song
Of praise to him, in whom alone
Thy feeble arm is strong.

Sincerity.

The remark of a little girl, that "she would like to retire into a convent, for the world was hollow and her dolls were stuffed with saw-dust," is but an amusing illustration of the fact, that too early in life do we realize that the world is, indeed, a sham, and our friends are not what they seem.

So easy is it to simulate friendship, so often do "hypocrisy and deceit" assume the garb of "sincerity and truth," that a person must be well skilled in reading the human heart, to discern between the true and false; even those who have prided themselves on their discrimination in this respect, have been deceived, and only too late discovered that which they believed to be a genuine friendship was but a base and worthless imitation. Many instances might be given of the truth of these remarks. "Every heart knoweth its own bitterness," but could the history of these sad hearts be written out, it would be seen that a large proportion of the misery and unhappiness in the world, is caused by betrayed and insulted friendship. What language can be too strong to express the contempt felt by every honorable person, for the man, or woman, who strives, with professions of unlimited friendship and regard, to gain the confidence of another, simply for the furtherance of their own selfish ends. To be thus deceived, cannot but tend to lessen our faith in that which was intended by our Creator, to be the holiest and purest emotion of our nature, and lead to involuntarily mistrust all with whom we may be associated. It often calls into existence, or rather arouses the baser passions of the human heart, changing love into hatred, and a strong desire for retaliation, only restrained by the thought, that, "sooner or later," "the measure which they mete out to others will be measured to them again." We would not be considered as entirely skeptical of the existence of pure and abiding friendship; that it is a "plant of rare growth," none will deny. Still there are many noble souls, both men and women, who have bravely withstood the test, and through misfortune, poverty, and even disgrace, have remained faithful to those who have honored them with their affectionate regard. Perhaps it were better

"To trust all and be deceived,
And mourn that trust and that deceiving,
Than doubt one heart, which, if believed,
Would bless the soul with true believing."

Happy are they whose lives are blessed by the possession of such friends. Let them strive to be worthy of the inestimable treasure—far more precious and desirable than riches or honor. For those who, having often been deceived, have learned to "scorn and doubt," where once they loved and trusted, there is, as for all,

One above all others,
Well deserves the name of friend;
His is love beyond a brother's,
Fervent, true, and knows no end.

W. D.

THE way of Christian life is a genuine path laid out by Christ himself. We are to do our duty gladly; the first duty first, the rest duly in order, according to requirement of occasion and circumstance. Just as, when a sailor signs articles of agreement for a voyage, no day's programme is made out, but he expects to be ready for every emergency, so are we bound in agreement to Christ. We come into such relationship of obedience to him that we shall more delight to think that he is working through us his own sacred plans than we could, in bold independence, delight in the success of our most audacious ambitions and plans of self-aggrandizement.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

PLATTSBURG, Mo.
April 17th, 1871.

Brother Holsinger; I take my pen this morning to give you an item of church news, that may be interesting to at least some of your readers. After having received repeated calls from the brethren in and around Kansas City, to see to their wants, and recently hearing that our dear brother and co-laborer, George Myers from Pa., had moved among them there to labor for their spiritual advancement, it came into our mind to "go and see how they do," and lend them our humble aid to organize a church there. So the writer and brother Daniel B. Gibson left for that city on the evening of the 14th. Lodged with brother George R. Holsinger No. 1606 Hackberry Street.—We were received with expressions of joy, and kindly cared for during the night.

On the 15th we visited the brethren from house to house. So arrangements were made for the brethren to meet at the house of Eli Yourtee.—On the morning of the 16th, the members, with a few exceptions, met us there; and after opening the meeting in usual order, we proceeded to organize them, with the assistance of brethren D. B. Gibson and G. Myers. Letters of recommendation were then handed in and read before the council, from different parts of the brotherhood, from Priladelphia on the east, to Tennessee on the south.—There were many brethren's names to the letters that we were acquainted with. This made it pleasant, truly. We felt that we were in the midst of a band of brethren that are willing to take hold of the strong pillars of sin in Kansas City, and labor to destroy some of the works of the devil, and build up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood.

The brethren chose to call this district, Kansas city church. They number about 18 members; and as all organizations must have their officers, brother Myers thought it would not be out of place to choose one to help in the ministry, and one to the deacon's office. So we consulted the membership and they were satisfied so to do. The choice was taken for Minister, and the lot fell upon brother Eli Yourtee; and then the choice was taken for deacon, and fell upon brother Frank Holsinger.—The charges were given in the regular order of the brethren; and they were installed into their offices. Many tears rolled down the cheeks of those brethren who were called to take part in this ministry of advancing our one common cause. All eyes were filled with tears of sympathy for them. Indeed I never witnessed a more solemn time; after which brother Gibson delivered a very appropriate exhortation to all present, which was sanctioned and approved by remarks to the point, by brother George Myers. We then sang together the farewell hymn; bade all our brethren farewell; and left them in the midst of the turmoils of a large wealthy and proud city.

Now ministering brethren traveling west, would do well to call and see our brethren. I am authorized to say that all who wish to correspond with brother George Myers will address him at Kansas city, Mo., Box 818

DANIEL D. SELL.

Brother Henry: I can read a good religious paper to edification, regardless to the form or size of it. Let it be like the COMPANION or like the general form of newspapers. I think for myself, that it is not the form or size of the paper that does me good, but the contents of it. There is one thing that I dislike in our periodicals, —the multiplicity. I would like to read all that is published in our papers, but there are too many. It is not just the time to read them, but the expense. It is not that I am too much attached to the "dollar;" but it takes time, money, and wear and tear of all descriptions, in the minister's office; and then where these can be saved so easily, as in this matter, I would call it prudence. How comes this matter is not discussed in our papers. I mean the consolidating of our papers, and have but one good weekly, which we are all able to take, read, pay and support. This multiplicty of periodicals is just the very thing to bring the brotherhood into parties. Some will be for the Companion, some for the Visitor, and some for others. Some will take one or the other paper, because a particular big preacher supports it. Self-denial will bring the whole matter into order. I think that something in regard to the above will be brought to our District Meeting, (Eastern District of Penn'a) for consideration, and very likely from there to Annual Meeting. Brethren and sisters, let us have some of your views on the subject. Let us all pray and work to come closer together in Christ Jesus. We want no smaller type. "A little more boiled down and skimmed off." Written with a strong desire for the welfare and union of the whole brotherhood.

C. BUCHER.

Schaefferstown, Pa.

To Our Sisters.

Dear Sisters in bonds of christian ties, in reading the Companion, I find there a lack in the performance of duty on the part of the sisters. Sisters, do not let go the good work; and if we should fall into little differences, this should not hinder us from doing our duty; for "where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." And if we are directed by the Spirit to aid in the encouragement of Zion, it is our privilege to do so; and I do love to read articles written by sisters, as well as by our brethren. Having sympathies for our own, the weaker sex, and being much alike situated, our trials and difficulties being much the same, we are glad to have a word of consolation from each other; and as we have a most glorious opportunity to do so, let us not neglect it.

Not very many years ago we did not have this opportunity. I remember very well when our first church periodical started up, which proved to be a satisfactory improvement. But now we have still greater faculties for improving the mind and our talents We have a variety of periodicals.—quite a sufficiency too, for every purpose. All that will, have an opportunity to write for improvement and encouragement; and I think the writer is generally the most edified, for this reason: while we study a subject, and get it placed into reading style, we become so well acquainted with it, as to leave lasting impressions, more than by reading a piece a number of times. And if we write and fail to have our article published, we should not be discouraged. Our time is not lost it only adds to our practicability. Then let us not despair for perseverre. Our Editors need not laugh at our awkwardness; they, too, are not perfect and well they know it. It is good to feel our littleness and the weakness of the flesh; but through the knowledge of this we must not be idle, for then it is that the Spirit of God has free access to the heart, "for when I am weak, then am I strong." Methinks there are sisters who are not so much pressed with care and obligations as most of us wives and mothers are, who have necessities, necessarily laid upon us. For every good act we do, we have a reward: when we visit the sick, clothe the naked, feed the hungry, relieve the oppressed and comfort the afflicted; when do good to our enemies—to those that do not love us, and spitefully treat us. This is perhaps the test obligation.

We must also stay the hands of Christ's embassadors, and bear each other's burdens: "But to do good and communicate, forget not." We must also impart to others of the benefits of our salvation: "But exhort one another daily, while it is called to-day, lest any of you become hardened through the deceitfulness of sin."—The prophet Malachi says, "Then they that feared the Lord, spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it; and a book of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.—And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them as a man that spareth his own son that serveth him.

Then dear sisters, let us try and do our part. The Lord will hearken when the angels shall bear the glad tidings of our obedience, and it will be registered in the Lamb's book of life. The Christian has a work to do. We cannot go to heaven "on flowery beds of ease;" but we must endure many inconveniences. We dare not consult our depravity if we will gain heaven. God has made rich provision for the soul. Then let us be up and doing. We must work out our salvation with fear and trembling:—with fear to offend an Almighty God, and trembling as in his august presence. He sees all our actions, knows all our thoughts, whether good or bad. He is acquainted with all our sorrows and our griefs. He counts all our tear-drops. "Thou tellest my wanderings. Put thou my tears into thy bottle. Are they not in thy book?" Psalms 55: 8.

MARY ROHRER.

Brother Holsinger: Please publish the following notice for the benefit of our Brethren going to the A. M.

Excursion rates have been obtained over the following Railroads to place of meeting.

Pennsylvania Central R. R. from Pittsburg or Philadelphia to Harrisburg. Pittsburg Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway, from Chicago to Pittsburg. Pan Handle R. R., from Indianapolis, Cincinati, Columbus, to Pittsburg. Northern Central R. R., from Baltimore or Sunbury to Harrisburg, and all intermediate stations along the line of these roads.

On all of those roads the rules are the same; that is, any Brethren, Sisters, or friends, attending the meeting, and going over the above roads, must have an order before leaving home, to present at the station they start from: upon which they get an excursion ticket that will return them free to the same station. And if they travel over more than one of the above named roads, they must have an order for each road they travel over.

The four above named R. R, companies will begin so sell excursion tickets on the 20th of May, and close on the 29th, and tickets remain good to return until June 15th.

The Reading R. R., Company will begin to sell excursion tickets from Philadelphia or Harrisburg and all main stations, to Myerstown station, on the Lebanon Valley R. R., (near the place of meeting) on the 20th of May, close on the 29th; tickets remain good to return till June 15th

The Cumberland Valley R. R., Company will sell excursion tickets to Harrisburg the 24th, 25th, 26th, and 27th of May: tickets remain good to return till the 5th of June.

The Brethren will bear in mind that to use the P. F. W. and Chicago and P. H, or N. C. R R., they must observe the same rule to obtain orders as in the case of the Penn'a. C. R. R. Co.; and those coming from the West or South West, must purchase an excursion ticket at Harrisburg, over the Lebanon Valley R. R., to Myerstown station.

Orders for the four first named roads will be given out until Saturday May 27th.

The rate of fare will be 2 cents a mile each way on all the roads.

MARRIED.

By the undersigned, April 6th, George Brubaker, of Cambria Co., and Rose Ann Lowman, of Indiana County

Stephen Hildebrand.

On the 26th of March, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Wm. Harris and sister Mary Brubaker, both of Wabash county, Indiana. By Eld. Sam'l Murray.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

At Roaring Springs, Blair County, Penn'a, April 16th, CHARLES, son of Martin B and Sarah MILLER; aged 6 years 2 months, and 24 days. Disease, Diphtheria. Funeral occasion improved by the writer and A Bowers.

S. A. Moore.

At Tyrone, Penn'a, April 20th, about 8 o'clock P. M., AMANDA E. QUINN, daughter of brother William and sister Catharine Quinn; aged 4 years and 20 days. Disease, Congestion of the Lungs. Funeral discours by H. R Holsinger, from 2 Samuel 12: 21-23.

In the Upper Conewago Church, Penn'a, April the 22nd, SAMUEL HENRY, son of friend Benjamin and sister Mary M. MOWREY; aged 2 years, 11 months, and 18 days. Funeral services by Jacob Hollinger and the writer, from 1 Peter 1: 24, 25.

John Brindle.

In the Vermillion branch, Livingston Co., Ill., April 6th, PHEBE, infant daughter of brother Samuel, and sister Elizabeth HOLMES; aged 5 months. Funeral services by the writer, from Matth. 18: 3.

By request. Jonathan Swihart.

In Chiques Creek congregation, Lancaster county, Pa., the 15th of April, brother JOSEPH MASTERSON; aged 57 years, 1 month, and 4 days. Though only a few years since he fully espoused the cause of his Redeemer, he proved himself a live member, devoting himself and his means to the service of the church, in full proportion. He leaves a widow (a sister) and six children, besides a number of grand-children, to mourn their loss, yet not as those who have no hope. He was widely known, and much respected, as was proved by the multitude of people attending his remains to their final resting place at Chiques Creek Meeting-house; supposed to have been over one thousand persons. Services by bro. Adam Pfoutz, from Franklin county, the writer and others, from 2 Cor. 5: 1, 2.

S. R. Zug.

In the Red Bank congregation, on the 8th of January, of Heart-disease, our much esteemed mother in Israel, sister NANCY SECRIST; aged 63 years, 9 months, and 12 days. She was a very consistent member of God's church militant and we hope when she was released from tabernacling in the body, her spirit went home to join her loved consort in God's church triumphant. And let me say to the dear relatives, though tears now dim your eyes and stain the cheek, yet you sorrow not as those without hope. If you live for Jesus and heaven, you will meet her above, where no sorrow is found and where all tears are wiped from the eye by the tender hand of Jesus. Funeral occasion improved by the undersigned to a respectable congregation of friends and relatives, from Luke 19: 13, last clause.

J. P. Hetric.

In the Logan branch, Logan county, Ohio, on the ninth day of March, Sister SUSANA HEER; aged 68 years and about 4 months. Disease, Dropsy. Funeral services by brethren, Abraham Frantz Jos. N. Kauffman, and the writer. From Job 21: 32, 33.

On the 10th of March, Sister MARY HUDSON; aged 68 years, and 7 months. She was a consistent member for many years.—Disease, Consumption. Funeral conducted by brother Joseph N. Kauffman. From Rev. 14: 13.

On the fifteenth day of April, sister MARY E. DETRICK, wife of friend Abram Detrick, aged 21 years, 4 months, and 10 days. She leaves a kind husband and one little babe, and many friends to mourn their loss. Disease, Consumption. She had put the day of grace off to a late hour. About two weeks before she died, she called for the brethren, and was received into the church by baptism. Funeral conducted by brethren Jos. N. Kauffman, Michael Swonger and the writer, from Philipians 1: 23, 24.

On the 18th day of April, infant daughter of David Plank, Amish minister. The age of the babe was about thirteen days. Funeral conducted by John Warrick, Amish minister, in the German, and by the writer in English, from 2 Samuel 12: 23.

J. L. Frantz.

In the Warrior's Mark branch, Pa., April 12th, sister POLLY NEARHOOF; aged about 74 years. Funeral services by D. M. Holsinger and Grabill Myers.

Sister Nearhoof was a consistent member of the church for many years, and was a kind hearted mother and neighbor. She expressed a desire to depart and be at rest.

The Great Remedy.

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and sells readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. Fahrney, No 30, North Dearborn St. Chicago, Illinois, or

To Nebraska, California, and Kansas, and the B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The "Burlington Route," as called, lies right in the path of the Star of Empire. It runs almost immediately in the center of the great westward movement of emigration. Crossing Illinois and Iowa, it strikes the Missouri river at three points.

These three points are the gateways into three great sections of the trans-Missouri region.

The Northern gate is Omaha, where the great Pacific road will take you to the land of gold and grapes, sunny mountains, and perpetual summer.

The middle gate is Plattsmouth, which opens upon the south half of Nebraska, south of the Platte river, a region unsurpassed on the continent for agriculture and grazing. Just here are the B. & M. Railroad lands, concerning which Geo. S. Harris, the land officer at Burlington, Iowa, can give you all information, and in the heart of them is Lincoln, the State Capital and present terminus of the road.

The Southern gate leads to Kansas, by connections with the St. Joe Road at Hamburg running direct to St. Joe and Kansas City

The trains of the Burlington run smoothly and safely, and make all connections. It runs the best of coaches, Pullman Palace and Pullman dining cars, and should you take the journey for the journey's sake alone, you will be repaid; or take it to find a home or a farm, and you cannot find either better than among the B. & M. lands, where you can buy on ten years' credit, and at a low price.

THE

Christian Family Companion

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

He Gathers Them Home.

JAMES J. MAXFIELD.

The souls of men are God's harvest sheaves,
He gathers them home at his will sublime;
The true and the just he alone receives
Who faithfully prove at the harvest-time.
He gathers the ripe from the hill and plain,
And carries them up to the "sea of glass;"
He winnows the cheat from the perfect grain,
And scatters the chaff to the winds that pass!

He gathers them home to their long-sought rest;
He gathers them up to the great white throne;
He holds the cold hands o'er the pulseless breast,
And seals the damp eyes to the world of moan.
He gathers them home—he gathers them home!
From the isles where toileth the bond and free;
They list to his voice wherever they roam,
On the sin-cursed earth, or the sounding sea!

He gathers them home in the eve of life,
The souls that are weary and care-oppressed;
The brother and sister, the husband and wife—
He gathers them home to their long, long rest.
The heavenly sparks from the heavenly flame,
He gathers them back to the angel-band;
Away from the woes without any name,
Which poison the breath of this sinful land!

He gathers them home when the daylight fades,
To the great reward which their lives have won;
'Tis a glorious change from the land of shades
To a heaven of rest when their toils are done.
O land of God! on the distant shore,
I see my rest when the hour shall come;
I shall view thy landscapes o'er and o'er
When the Father gathers his frail one home!

For the Companion.

Salvation Near.

To an Invalid whose health no Physician can restore.

Never did duty more demand that I should write than it does now. Never did I feel that my humble efforts would be more acceptable than now. Addressing myself to one who expects her soul soon to take its flight to the unknown regions of eternity, would be a task that I would not venture to perform, did I not know that you have sought counsel of a Physician whose skill has never been baffled. A Physician whose attempts to heal have never been frustrated. Long did you seek earthly aid without being apprised of the critical condition of both soul and body. And when I heard that your physician told you that it was impossible for you to live another year, well could I imagine how sad and disappointed you felt. But thanks be to God, his dear Son is now your physician, and you need not fear if you adhere to his counsels and apply the remedies He prescribes, that you will fail to reap the benefit. True, it is not expected that you will ever be restored to health and true happiness in this life; but what if you are not? Is not a life, an immortal life in glory, worth more than one in sorrow? Will it not give you more pleasure to meet the loving Jesus and kind friends, and enjoy the society of angels in Heaven, than to dwell here in this sin-stained and sorrow stricken world? O what is it that shall now disappoint or discourage you? When you look from this vale of tears, with an eye of faith into the New Jerusalem, behold its magnificent walls, its clean streets "paved with gold," (Rev. 21: 21.) and holy angels and saints of the living God dressed in robes of white walking thereon, singing the song of Moses and the Lamb, you cannot thank God enough that your salvation is near; that you so soon may be admitted inside the pearly gates of Zion.

You need not fear death now as you used to. Though death is no respecter of persons. But "blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Rev. 14: 13.

In that sunny clime thy immortal spirit shall rest through the ceaseless ages of eternity. Oh, how incomprehensible is the love of God! Well may you expect to exclaim, when about to leave this your borrowed prison: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Cor. 15: 50. Death hath victory only over the wicked. But as our dear Savior has passed through the silent tomb, and is now at the right hand of God in glory, so his followers will safely reach that blissful shore, procured for them by his own precious blood.

Hoping that those few lines of encouragement will reah you before your spirit will take its flight to the mansions of rest I bid you farewell. If on earth we no more see each other's faces, may we with many other precious souls strike glad hands on that happy shore Should it be privilege to stay yet a while upon earth with other saints, forget me not in your prayers.

The Day-spring.

This beautiful Sabbath morn,—March 20th, 1871,—finds me in my present residence, perhaps, for the last Sabbath ; and beholding the little birds upon the foliage of the garden, as they are offering their sweet songs of praise to the great I Am, reminds me forcibly of our dependence upon the great Giver. I have thought to occupy some space upon the words, recorded in Luke 1 : 78, "Through the mercy of our God ; whereby the day-spring from on high hath visited us." These words are a part of the prophetic song of Zacharias, concerning the person, kingdom, and glory of king Immanuel. The Holy man's tongue was made, as the pen of a ready writer, to proclaim the praises of our glorious Immanuel. Whenever the Spirit of glory and of God rests upon a soul, his great workis to glorify the blessed Redeemer. It was not any works of righteousness that we had done, or were to do, that laid God under any obligation to send his Son into the world. No, no, it was the working of his own heart, the rolling of his own bowels of love and pity to perishing sinners. John 3 : 6, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish but have everlasting life." It is observable here, that Zacharias does not simply say, the tender mercies of God, but "through the tender mercies, (or bowels,) of our God." We that sat in darkness saw great light ; and to us that sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up. The words will be farther clear in reference to the following observation: That Christ's approaches, in a way of grace, make a joyful day of salvation to spring from on high upon a miserable world. "The day-spring from on high hath visited us." Hence it is that Christ is sometimes called "the light of the world ;" sometimes "the sun of righteousness ;" sometimes the "bright and morning star," and "his goings forth are prepared as the morning."

Some may inquire what is implied in the expression of the subject. It supposes Adam's posterity to be in a dark, lonely, and miserable condition, before Christ visit them from on high. What the condition of the old creation was before the forming of light, that is man's before Christ's visit. The old creation was "without form, and void, and darkness was upon the face of the great deep." So is man : man is without form or comeliness, a mass of darkness, and disorder, and misery. As the darkness of the night overspreads the face of the earth before the spring of day, so a melancholy night of darkness overspreads all the children of men. Now this is our condition, before Christ in a way of grace makes the day-spring from on high to visit us.

This scripture implies that Christ's coming upon this errand,—for our salvation,—was unconstrained and voluntary. A visit is a free and voluntary thing, without any manner of force. "He rejoiced in the habitable parts of the earth, and his delights were with the sons of men." And as the sun in the firmament, with the greatest freedom scatters his beams through the world, so does Christ scatter the rays and beams of his grace and love among sinners in the dispensation of the everlasting gospel. And when he comes by his Spirit, either in a day of conversion, or of a renewed manifestation of himself to a believer, it is with delight and pleasure that he does it. "Behold he cometh," says the spouse, "leaping upon the mountains and skipping upon the hills."

The first visit made by the spotless Lamb of God, was made to our first parents after the fall, when he told them that the seed of the woman should bruise the head of the serpent. This was the first peep of day-light on a lost world of mankind. No sooner had man sinned, than a dark and dismal night of wrath from the Lord of hosts overspread our horizon, which struck our first parents with such horror that they endeavored to hide themselves among the bushes of Paradise. Even while they are every moment expecting to be stricken through with the arrows of divine vengeance and wrath, the Messiah is revealed and promised, and light and deliverance appear with him. And all the prophecies, types, promises, and ceremonies of the Old Testament dispensation, were nothing but the gradual advances of the sun of righteousness towards our horizon. But yet all this time the sun is not actually risen in our view: though after the break of day, in the first promise, the light shone more and more brightly till the sun did actually arise.

A visit of the day-spring from on high, makes the timorous and faint hearted soul courageous, and bold as a lion. The poor creature that durst not look God in the face, through a sense of guilt, but was, like the timorous dove, hiding himself in the clefts of the rock, when a visit comes, lifts up his face with a holy and humble boldness.

My brother and sister, we get such boldness by the visit of the day-spring from on high, that we can go to the alter of God with exceeding joy—such are not ashamed of the humble institutions of the Lord's house. They are not scared at the liquid grave of the flowing stream, nor feet washing, nor the salutation, nor the Lord's supper, nor of the scoffs of the world on account of plain dress; they are not afraid to go to the communion table, lest they eat and drink damnation to their souls; but it makes them bold soldiers of the cross.

"Oh," may some be saying, "I thought the day did once spring up in my soul, and I saw the light of the Lord; but, alas, now I walk in darkness, and can see no light! Oh, that it were with me as in months past! I thought to have gotten a visit of the day-spring on this occasion; but alas, I am going away as I came—the darkness of temptation, affliction, desertion, and despondency overspread my soul, and I think I am cast out of his sight!" I shall only say two or three things. When once the sun of righteousness arises on a soul, though he may suffer eclipses, yet he will never set again; and therefore the sun is in the firmament, and it is day with thee although thou dost not see it, by reason of interposing clouds. "Ye are not of the night, but of the day." O, beware of everything that may eclipse the light of the sun from the soul. Beware of pride, carnality, worldliness and unbelief in your walk; otherwise you may bring yourselves under as great dareness to your own feelings, as though the sun had never arisen upon you. Long for the break of the everlasting day of glory, when the sun shall never any more suffer an eclipse. The Old Testament church longed for the break of the New Testament day, and we that are under the New Testament day, should long for the break of the day of glory, saying, "Make haste, my beloved, and be thou like to a roe, or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices."

Now, because there are some young persons that have been at the Lord's Table who never were at it before, I conclude with a word to them. "Keep yourselves from idols." Let nothing usurp God's room in your heart. Keep and "Save yourselves from a present evil world," that you be not seduced or entangled with snares. Be on your guard, for Satan will be on you; he will seek to sift and winnow you, and to draw you back to his service. "Put on the whole armor of God," and be often proving it, "the shield of faith, the helmet of Salvation, and the sword of the Spirit." Keep Christ the Captain of Salvation ever in your eye, that you may be supplied, strengthened and enlightened; that you may be on the alert, for skeptics, that would try to delude you, and draw you after them, by referring you back to nature's history, before the fall of man. Such unbelievers, try to mutilate God's Word, and make it speak a language that the Holy Spirit never intended. I am sure that such have never had the day-spring from on high arisen in their hearts, but are Satan's agents. Young brethren and sisters, let us be much on our knees at a throne of grace: and may God help us to form right conclusions, and to study our own emptiness, and Christ's fulness, and travel continually betwixt these two. This is the prayer of your unworthy servant. WM. H. QUINN.

A MAN'S religion is not a part of him, but is a quality of the whole of him. Having its own life spring and stream, it fertilizes the whole field of his being. It makes his business safer, his scholarship wiser, his joy healthier, his strength stronger.

Paradise.

An answer desired on 1 Peter 3; 20, Vol. 7, page 111. It seems to be the desire of us all to learn all we can of the Scriptures; or, at least it ought to be so. I do not wish to be understood that I am able to teach them correctly; but I will simply give my views according to what knowledge God has endowed me with. I may differ from others, but will try to give it as I understand it.

We can see by the Scriptures that Christ had an existence before the world was, and that the Gospel has been preached from the commencement of generations: first to the old world, by Noah, who I think had the Spirit or mind of Christ—by obeying he was saved. The next promises were to the generations that lived after the flood, to the coming of our Savior. I would refer the reader to the promises of Father Abraham which will be fulfiled at the second coming of our Savior, "for the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Christ, might be given to them that believe. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond or free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if you be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Now in order to be alive we must have that Spirit that dwelt in righteous Noah and Father Abraham. I have not as yet found in all the Scriptures any promises made to men that were dead: always to those that were living; consequently, I think, that God said all that he wished to say. And would it not be presumptious for us to say that he was not in the grave three days when he said to the Apostles that he should be? The same Ark that saved Noah, was able to save all that would have heard the gospel, and gone into it. And so Peter says, "The like figure whereunto even Baptism doth also now save us, * * * by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." "For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the Spirit;" (word, or mind of Christ.) Romans 8: 9,—11 reads: "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life; because of righteousness." But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." "For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now; And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. This same Spirit that directs God's ministers in these days to preach the gospel to wicked men, or bad Spirits that dwell amongst us, governed Noah in the Ante-diluvian world, which were sometimes disobedient, while Noah was building the Ark; and the same Spirit that quickened, or made alive, our Savior, abode in Noah.

Let Brotherly Love Continue. Hebrews 13: 1.

Without love the church cannot exist. Love among Christ's people is to the world a sign that their origin is from above. "God is love," and John says, "every one that loves his brother is born of God." This is a virtue which we must all possess; for without it we have no promise. I would to God that my brethren would bear in mind the above text when they meet together in council. It would be well for some of them if they would ask God to write, by his Spirit, in large letters, the words of Paul's instruction upon their hearts and in their minds; then we could meet and part with more love than has been manifested heretofore.

There is no doubt in my mind, if this should come before the Brotherhood, but that many of my brethren and sisters will agree with me on this point. I do not feel to expose the faults of my brethren, for love forbids it; but I must confess that I have spent whole nights in sorrow, and am even now shedding tears for my poor oppressed brethren. I do not complain for myself, but for those whom I love. We must all agree that such sharp cutting and clipping between brethren, is not Christian like. Besides all this, we as a people are persecuted more than any other; and could the world see and hear what is going on sometimes in the church, we would have to suffer more than we have ever done before.

In our last council I was made to think of David's complaining of the Lord's annointed, when he says, "Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon; lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph." 2 Samuel 1: 20. The world rejoices over the downfall of the righteous; and Satan himself "came among the sons of God," and to this day he transforms himself into an angel of light, and comes into the congregation of the Lord's people.

Now my dear brethren and sisters, let me say out of pure love, instead of adding more sorrow upon those who have already more than they can bear, give a word of encouragement. Speak to one another. Help in such things as you can. „Heal the broken hearted." Follow the Savior's example; and you will receive the blessings of the righteous.

I remember a time, but a few years ago, when surrounded with thick clouds of trouble and sorrow, when I could not decide whether I should meet with the Brethren on the next appointment or not. I chanced to look in the Companion, and beheld an article written by our dear sister E. W——s. saying, "Come Brother, be encouraged; bear up under your trial." These words pierced my very heart and soul. I at once buckled on the armor and went six miles to meet the brethren; and while there, was made to think of Thomas. Had I stayed at home, I would not have seen the Lord.

The above few lines I submit to the Companion for my dear brethren and sisters, hoping that they will speak a little more kindly, and continue in brotherly love.

Humility without Knowledge.

I am not an advocate of high-mindedness. I pity all exalted persons. But is not much of the humility to-day, as well as in days of yore, without knowledge? It is not knowledge nor education that so often exalts. Learning humbles. Whenever we suffer our intellects to bear the necessary cultivation, we need not fear that we shall become exalted. Look at the humility of that eminent and learned Apostle Paul. See how his humility represents that of Christ, and learn to be humble by acquiring knowledge. We are living in the midst of a boundless universe, surrounded with the wonderous works of Jehovah; and while we thus live, we can behold his love in nature as well as in the Bible. For instance, the Bible teaches us of the resurrection of the body; so does the tender plant that springs forth from what to us seems almost a lifeless seed. Humble and learned men—men that, at the incomprehensible works of the deity, are made to wonder and adore—are what we may well term true characters of humility. I am acquainted with some exalted persons: some are learned, others are not. But when I look at the pride of those that are learned, I lay the fault wholly upon the way in which they have educated themselves. There is an education that teaches self-control, another that teaches self-indulgence: the latter brings into subjection the good spirit and gives mastery to the lust of the eye the lust of the flesh and the pride of life; but the former brings humility with knowledge.

ASKING AMISS.—We may tire ourselves with our devotions, and fill Heaven with vain complaints, and yet, by all this opportunity, obtain nothing at God's hands; like lazy beggars that are always complaining, and always asking, but will not work, will do nothing to help themselves and better their condition, and, therefore, are never like to move the pity and compassion of others.—Archbishop Tillotson.

Happiness is inborn. It is not an outward trait. It is generated in the soul. It is never bought or sold as an article of commerce. You may fill your house with all manner of beautiful and curious things, but you cannot lay in a stock of happiness in the same way. If you are happy, your happiness is that which you are able to make by the use of the mind itself. A fundamental condition of happiness in this world is activity, and that kind of activity which carries with it all the faculties.

Observe what directions your thoughts and feelings most readily take when you are alone, and you will then form a tolerable correct opinion of your real state.—Bengel.

For the COMPASION.

"Ye must be Born Again."

Much is said in our day of this second, or new birth; and people now as of old, sometimes marvel, and ask, "How can this be?" The reason for it may be something like this: They do not seem to see the necessity of the case. All is clear to the Christian, and why so? Because he takes the Lord for his counsel, he does what he commands, and he knows this will bring him to life everlasting.

He does not marvel at anything; he does not ask all the whys, &c.,—about what the Lord says. He is willing for duty at all times. He knows that God asks no impossibilities of him. We say, therefore, he marvels not. If Nicodemus had been willing to follow Christ in all things, I do not believe that he would have marveled. He knew this, "That thou art a Teacher come from God." He saw that the Lord taught somewhat different from the Old Dispensation. He saw that a new era had begun, but was not altogether willing to follow Jesus. No wonder he marveled, and could not understand how such a thing could be done. Just so we did: before we were willing to follow the Lord in all things, we could not see how such a thing could be possible; and just for this reason, we did not want Jesus to reign over us.

But to come to the text. We know that before our conversion, we were dead to the Kingdom of God; and then could not see it, much less enter it. We know a dead person cannot see, much less walk; and hence comes the necessity of being born to life, in order to be able to do this.

But how can we be born again? Here comes in the marveler and asks, "How can it be?" Well, let the Savior explain: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God. Very nearly all Christian professors claim that the Spirit is essential to this birth; but when we come to the water they back down; it does not suit their taste, and therefore it is not essential. But let the Lord be right, and we are also right. The Lord says, water and Spirit. But this seems to be something dark again to some people; the water first and then the Spirit. Let me remark here, that God's word never contradicts itself. The gift of the Holy Ghost is never promised until after baptism; so we have it, in baptism we are born of water, and after the water baptism, we receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. Then if all is proper, we are born of water and the Spirit; and we then are fit to enter the kingdom of God.

By the kingdom here spoken of, I do not believe that the Lord has his visible church in view; but the eternal kingdom, when the saints will be gathered and he (Jesus) will rule without opposition. He declares that except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God; and we must admit that it is possible to be born of water and still not of the Spirit, and of course be a member of the church; but according to the declaration of the Savior, it is impossible to enter the kingdom without being born of the Spirit also. This declaration of the Lord corresponds with the one given in the commission: "He who believes and is baptized, shall be saved." Peter says, "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins; and ye shall recieve the gift of the Holy Ghost. So if we take altogether, we learn they harmonize in every particular; and if we come to the conclusion that they don't, there is always something wrong on our part. But certain persons claim to be born of the Spirit and don't care about the water.—They know better, how this birth must work than the Lord: they claim to have the Spirit of God, without being willing to be born of water. Not long ago I heard a minister of the Gospel declare, that a person could be a Christian without being a member of the church, or before being baptized; that is, sins forgiven without obeying the Lord. The Lord says: "If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them." Brethren and sisters, we obey the Lord and thereby expect a blessing, just where he has promised it unto us. This people expect a blessing first. They want the Lord to forgive their sins, not where he has promised to do it, but at their own suitable time. Now judge who is right. The disciples were called Christians because they followed the Lord; but these people want to serve the Lord because they are so-called Christians. Let us be careful and not be deceived. We will take God and his word for our guide and we cannot come wrong. Christ instituted one church, and if we are true members of that we are right and not wrong. But this being born again, causes grief and sorrow before we come to life, but when the child is born it causes rejoicings; through the whole family you see joy beaming on the face of every member of the family. We have the assurance in God's word that there is joy in heaven; the whole family in heaven and on earth rejoiceth when a soul is born from death to life. The members of the church cannot keep silent when sinners turn in with God's people. It is on the tongue of all; we hear the expression, such a number has been brought into the fold. In short, we connot help but rejoice.

But let us bear in mind that, although we are born again, we are not out of danger. We are then fit to enter the kingdom. But as the infant is subject to sickness and even to death, so we, after coming to life in Jesus, are in danger of getting sick and even dying again. Let us be careful. The child, after it is born, is by no means a strong creature; but by proper care it will get strong by and by. If it falls sick the family send for a physician to restore it to health. In this case the same course is taken.

Brother, do you not remember the time that you were sick in the service of the Lod? Ah, you were low with fever. Some of the family had given up hopes; but the stronger ones, those in Heaven—thanks to the Lord—did not give up the case. The Great Physician effected a cure for you, and now you are well. We ask, do you remember such a case? If you don't then let me tell you that your unworthy brother does. I remember when I came to this life, but by violating God's law I got weak, and not long after took sick. Fever was raging around me. Some of the family had given up hopes. Fiends were rejoicing over my decease. But oh, that part of the family residing in Heaven could not and did not want to see me die. I had not done, I had not been useful enough yet.

The great Physician came, and oh, brethren and sisters, I am happy this day to tell you that he effected a cure. I am not only restored to life, but I claim now to be healthier and stronger in the Lord than ever. But we must take food and stimulants, to keep us strong. And let me tell all those in want of such, they can have abundance without money and without price. Only go to the Lord; ask him in earnest, he cannot and he will not refuse, all can get it.

Let us not forget the place, and whenever we get hungry, let us go and be filled and be made strong.

The great beauty is, that God wants all to come to life, and he will give freely what is necessary to sustain it, only he wants us to know that we must get of him.

So brethren we who claim to be born of God, let us by no means get weak and faint. A brother told me a few days ago that they resolved to live better than ever. Oh, what happiness to hear such an expression. Let us all form such a resolution, and not only form it but carry it out. We can see this kingdom of God now; we can enter it if we keep alive. Hell and all its power can not keep us from it; but we must persevere. This we will do and meet on yonder shore with God's people.

Spirit of Christ.

"If any man has not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his."

From the above passage we can learn or understand that, if we want to be Christians, we must have his Spirit. While I was meditating on this subject, I came to the conclusion that, if a man or woman has the Spirit of Christ, they must walk in all his commandments; for we learn that he said on one occasion, that he came not to do his own will, but the Father 's which sent him. And further we learn that he said, on another occasion, "the Father gave me a commandment what I should do." We must therefore conclude, that he had the Spirit to do just what he was commanded of his Father. Now if we have the Spirit of Christ, we must be willing to do just what he commands us, not more or less.—And while I was thinking about the many different sects, or religious denominations, I thought, is it posible that the Spirit of Christ teaches one denomination different from another, in keeping his commandments? For instance, the command of baptism; one denomination believes in Trine Immersion; another, in single immersion; and another, in pouring or sprinkling: and all claim to be Christ's followers, and to be guided by his spirit, if we look at the different practices, we must conclude, that it is impossible that they are all guided by the same spirit. We are commanded to try the spirits whether they are of God. But how can we know whether they are of God? Why, as long as we are willing to do just what we are commandod to do, we have the spirit of Christ; but as soon as we say it makes no difference how baptism is administered, we have another spirit; and if we say we need not do this or that command, I fear we are guided by the spirit of the devil. Brethren and sisters, pray that we may be one in mind and action; then we can have the hope that we are guided by the Spirit of Christ.

Spurgeon on War.

"George Fox has left us a third great legacy; namely, his testimony against the abomination of war. When I first read George Fox's life, I could think of nothing but Christ's sermon on the mount. It seemed to me that George Fox had been reading that he himself was the incarnation of it; for his teachisgs are just a repetition of the Master's teachings there, just an expansion and explanation of the principles of christianity. I am always glad to hear of a soldier being a Christian; I am always sorry to hear of a Christian being a soldier. Whenever I hear of a man who is in the possession of arms being converted, I rejoice; but whenever I hear of a converted man taking up arms, I mourn. If there be any thing clear in scripture, it does seem to me that it is for a Christian to have nothing to do with carnal weapons; and how it is that the great mass of Christendom do not see this, I cannot understand. Surely it must be through the binding influences of the society in which the Christian church is cast."

Good Advice.

Spurgeon sententiously expresses a number of thoughts "worth remembering" in the following appropriate sentences, which he publishes as "advice gratis":

Nobody is more like an honest man than a thorough rogue.

When you see a man with a good deal of religion displayed in his shop window, you may depend upon it he keeps a very small stock of it within.

Do not choose your friend by his looks: handsome shoes often pinch the feet.

Do not be fond nf compliments; remember: "Thank you, pussy, and you pussy," kill the cat.

Don't believe the man who talks the most, for mewing cats are very seldom good mousers.

By no means put yourself in another person's power. If you put your thumb between two grinders they are very apt to bite.

Drink nothing without seeing it, sign nothing without reading it, and make sure that it means no more than it says.

Don't go to law unless you have nothing to lose; lawyer's houses are built on fools' heads

Put no dependence on the label of a bag, and count money after your own kind.

In any busines never wade into the water where you cannot see the bottom.

See the sack open before you buy what is in it; for he who trades in the dark ought to be cheated.

"If You Love Me, Lean Hard."—The Boston Recorder relates the following: "Miss Fiske, while in the Nestorian Mission, was at one time in feeble health, and much depressed in spirits. One hot Sabbath afternoon she sat on her mat on the chapel floor, longing for support and rest, feeling unable to maintain her trying position until the close of worship. Presently she felt a woman's form seated at her back, and heard the whisper, 'Lean on me.' Scarcely yielding to the request, she heard it repeated, 'Lean on me.' Then she divided her weight with the gentle pleader, but that did not suffice. In earnest, almost reproachful tones the voice again urged, 'If you love me, lean hard.'" This incident is worth a whole volume of commentary on the nature of true love, which is happiest when it can do most for the loved one.

CHRIST'S CRUCIFIXION, BURIAL AND RESURRECTION.

12. As already noticed, Christ was crucified at the third hour of the day, or about 9 o'clock. Then they "parted his garments, casting lots; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet: They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots. And sitting down, they watched him there; And set up over his head his accusation written, THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS. Then were there two thieves crucified with him: one on the right hand, and another on the left. And they that passed by, reviled him, wagging their heads, and saying, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross. Likewise also the chief priests mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said, He saved others; himself he cannot save. If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him. He trusted in God: let him deliver him now if he will have him; for he said, I am the Son of God. The thieves also which were crucified with him, cast the same into his teeth." Matth. 27: 35,44.

The Son of God had laid aside the glory which he had with his Father before the world was. He had come down from his high and holy habitation, to tabernacle with men, and to tread on sin-cursed ground.—He had come on a mission of love and mercy to rebellious, fallen, depraved man: his errand was to redeem and save poor, helpless sinners. He had come unto his own, but they received him not. Among them he had wrought miracles, and signs, and wonders; but they regarded them not. He had healed the sick, cleansed the lepers, cast out devils, caused the lame to walk, the deaf to hear, the dumb to speak, the blind to see, the dead to arise, and he had preached the gospel to the poor; but their eyes were closed, their ears were stopped, their hearts were hard, and their wills unyielding. In prayers, and tears, and sweat, and agony, he had labored for them; but all his agony, and tears, and prayers were unheeded. He had called, but they refused; he had stretched out his hands, but they did not regard it.—He had revealed his Father's will, but they would not hear it. They, with wicked hands, took and crucified the Lord of life and glory. They crucified thieves by his holy and harmless sides. They divided his garments, and cast lots upon his vesture. They scoffed him, mocked him, derided him, and challenged him in his appointed and love-induced sufferings. This shameful treatment and unblushing mockery continued for the space of three hours, even until the sixth hour, or mid-day.

13. It was enough. The sun was on the meridian, but its beams were withheld from the awful scene; and there was darkness over the land.—"Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour." Matth. 27: 45. "And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land, until the ninth hour." Mark 15: 33.—"And it was about the sixth hour, and there was darkness over all the earth (margin, land,) until the ninth hour." Luke 23: 44. The three evangelists agree in their testimony; and they bring us through the darkness, to the ninth hour of the day, or about three o'clock P. M.

14. We have now come to the point of time in the "preparation of the passover," when the type was to be sacrificed at the temple. "And about the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?—* * * Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost." Matth. 27: 46, 50. Luke says, "And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit; and having said thus, he gave up the ghost." Luke 23: 46. John says: "Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst. Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar, and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop and put it to his mouth. When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It is finished; and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost." John 19: 28—30. "And behold, the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake and the rocks rent."—Matth. 27: 51.

"It is finished:" the type has met the anti-type in point of time; "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us;" and the vail of the temple, where the type was to be slain, is "rent in twain from the top to the bottom," speaking in language that every one may understand, that the way into the holiest of all is now open, and that the typical service has reached its goal.—We cannot refrain from noticing in this connection how fully the reality was set forth in types.

1st. The lamb must be without blemish. Christ was blameless—without fault.

2nd. The lamb must be set apart on the fourth day before it should be sacrificed. Christ entered upon his public ministry in the fourth year before his death.

3rd. The type was to be slain on the fourteenth day of the month, which was therefore "the preparation of the passover." Christ was sacrificed on "the preparation of the passover"—on the fourteenth day of the month.

4th. The type was to be slain "between the two evenings"—after the ninth hour, or middle of the afternoon. Christ died upon the cross a little after the ninth hour of the day.

5th. They feasted upon the type on the day following that on which it was killed. We feast upon "Christ our Passover," in the gospel dispensation, which follows the legal; hence the type has its ultimate fulfilment "in the kingdom of God."

The feast of unleavened bread was also typical of the privileges and blessings under the gospel dispensation; and we must not fail to notice a few of its points.

1st. The feast of unleavened bread proper, did not set in until the Passover was sacrificed. So the gospel of Christ—the New Testament—was not fully confirmed, till the death of the Testator.

2nd. The fourteenth day, which was "the preparation of the passover, was also the preparation for the feast of unleavened bread; and at even the close of that day they were to eat unleavened bread. So the law was "a shadow of good things;" and in the closing of the legal dispensation there was a foretaste of gospel privileges and gospel blessings. Let this suffice on this point, in this connection. Well might the centurion say, "Truly this was the Son of God!" Matth. 27: 54. Well might "the people that came together to that sight," smite their breasts and return! Luke 23: 48.

15. We shall now pass on to notice what the evangelists say in reference to the burial of Christ. Matthew says: "When the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathea, named Joseph, who also himself was Jesus' disciple: He went to Pilate and begged the body of Jesus. Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered. And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, and laid it in his own new tomb which he had hewn out in the rock; and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed. And there was Mary Magdalene and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre. Now the next day, that followed the preparation, the chief priests and pharisees came together unto Pilate, saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead; so the last error shall be worse than the first.—Pilate said unto them ye have a watch: go your way, make it as sure as ye can. So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch." Matth. 27: 57—66.

From this account it is evident that Christ was taken down and buried in the evening, just before the close of the day of his crucifixion and death. "Now the next day, that followed the preparation," and right in the beginning of the day, only a short time after his burial, the sepulchre was made secure. Matthew teaches us here that he was buried on the "preparation" day; and as the Passover was to be eaten on the night of the day immediately following, it is absolutely certain that Christ and his disciples had not eaten the Passover on the night before.

Mark in the 15th chapter, 42nd verse, says, "It was the preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath." Let it be remembered that the fifteenth day of the month, the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, was a holy convocation—a Sabbath. Let it also be borne in mind that, in the year of the crucifixion, the fifteenth day of the month fell on the seventh day of the week—on the weekly sabbath. With these facts before us, it is easily seen how the "preparation of the Passover" (John 19: 14) was "the day before the Sabbath." The same remarks apply to Luke's record, who says: "And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on."—Luke 23: 54.

John testifies as follows: "The Jews therefore because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the Sabbath-day, (for that Sabbath-day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away. * * * Now in the place where he was crucified there was a garden; and in the garden a new sepulchre, wherein was man never yet laid. There laid they Jesus therefore because of the Jews' preparation day; for the sepulchre was near at hand." John 19: 31, 41, 42.

The four evangelists testify that Christ was buried on the preparation day. Three of them state that the preparation day fell on the day before the Sabbath. John says, "That Sabbath-day was an high day:" it was a high day because the holy convocation, or fifteenth day Sabbath day fell on the seventh day Sabbath—it was a double Sabbath. John also says of this preparation day, that "IT WAS THE PREPARATION OF THE PASSOVER."

16 We now pass on to notice the preparation made for the anointing of Jesus, and his resurrection from the dead. Luke says: "And the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the Sabbath day, according to the commandment." Luke 23: 55, 56.—They commenced this preparation as soon as they returned from the sepulchre: but before they could accomplish their purpose, the Sabbath set in, "and they rested the Sabbath-day according to the commandment."—This shows that the followers of Christ still honored the law. It will be noticed that, although they "prepared spices and ointments," there is nothing said in this connection of their buying anything.

As soon as the preparation day was past, the watch was set to guard the sepulchre. This was done to prevent the disciples of Christ from practising any imposture. The length of time this watch was to serve is worthy of notice. The chief priests and Pharisees said to Pilate, "Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again." From this language some writers rashly conclude that Christ was in the tomb at least three full days, or seventy-two hours.—Their mistake will plainly appear by considering the request that immediately follows: "Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure unto the third day." This certainly means until the third day of his death; for this is what they were speaking of.—He was buried on the same day he was crucified; that was therefore, according to their manner of reckoning, counted the first day; the Sabbath-day—the day following the preparation—was the second day; and the day following the Sabbath, which was the first day of the week and sixteenth day of the month, was the third day. Their request shows that this is what they understood by the phrase, "After three days;" and the sequel will show that they were correct.

In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, to see the sepulchre." Matth. 28: 1. By this we are not to understand, as some suppose, that they at this time came out to anoint the body of Jesus; for this was on the Sabbath-day, "In the end of the Sabbath," and Luke tells us that "they rested the Sabbath-day according to the commandment." "As it began to dawn toward the first day of the week," means, as the first day of the week was approaching—was drawing on. Matthew tells us what they came for; namely, "to see the sepulchre." They did what they came to do: they saw the sepulchre, and how it was guarded, and then they returned.

The Sabbath was now past, and Mark says: "And when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might anoint him." Mark 16: 1.—When the Sabbath was past they bought sweet spices and ointments. This was during the interval between sunset the end of the Sabbath, and dark. They had now completed the preparation which they had begun before the Sabbath set in; but night was upon them, the sepulchre was guarded, and they did not go to anoint him until the morning. "And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun."—Mark 16: 2. We showed before that the phrase, "at the going down of the sun," meant before sunset—while the sun was sinking toward the western horizon: so the phrase "at the rising of the sun," meant, before sunrise—while it was rising toward the eastern horizon. This refers to the time when they arrived at the sepulchre. John says: "The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early while it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone rolled away from the sepulchre." "While it was yet dark," means before it was clear day, although the rays of the rising sun were seen streaking the eastern sky: it was about twilight. But the Lord was not there; he had burst the bars of death, even on the third day according to his word.

Passing by incidentals, all of which can readily be harmonized, we observe that on this same day—the first day of the week on which he arose—Christ manifested himself to his disciples. This was "on the morrow after the Sabbath"—the day on which the sheaf was to be waved before the Lord by the priest. This sheaf was the first-fruits of harvest; and as before shown it was typical of Christ "the first-fruits of them that slept;" (1 Cor. 15: 20, 23,) and its waving typified not only his resurrection, but his manifesting himself to his people.

With all this accumulated testimony before us, we cannot comprehend why any one should for one moment contend that Christ and his apostles ate the Passover on the night of his betrayal. We do not know of one text in the sacred Scriptures, that affords even the slightest support to that supposition, when interpreted with due regard to the context and existing circumstances; while the plain requirements of the law, the nature and design of the types, and the harmonious record of the New Testament writers, all testify to the contrary.

Origin of Sunday Schools.

From an exchange we glean, that the reformer, Martin Luther, established Sunday-schools in Wittenburg, Germany, in 1527. Similar schools were introduced into Scotland, by John Knox, in 1560. Borneo, a Catholic prelate, archbishop of Milan opened Sunday-schools throughout Lombardy, Italy, in 1580. In 1674 it appears there was a Sunday-school at Roxbury, Mass.; and another at Plymouth, in the same State in 1680. Joseph Alliene, an English minister, opened one in England in 1688. It seems there was another opened in America, at Ephrata, in Pennsylvania, in 1747, by Ludwig Hacker.—They began to be generally used after the time of Robert Raikes, who began his work at Gloucester, England, in 1781, assisted by William Wilberforce, and others like him.

Patterns for Garment Cutting.

In our advertising columns will be found an advertisement of the Universal Guide for Garment Cutting, by Miller & Quinn formerly of McAlevey's Fort, but now residing at this place. We have now had opportunities for examining their system of laying out garments by their patterns, and can safely recommend them to all persons who wish to make their own garments. We are not much of a tailor, and yet we have cut out garments by these patterns, and have made good fits. And that, too, without the special instructions which the proprietors and their agents give to those to whom they sell patterns. The best way of selling them is by traveling agents, who, if they are well qualified for the business, can give the explanations so as to be more easily understood than the printed instructions which accompany each set of patterns. Nevertheless most persons can readily apply them from the accompanying directions. We do not believe that anything more simple and practicable, in the pattern line, can be invented. The patterns are full size, and will cut either large or small garments. A full set consists of coat, pants, vests, shirts and ladies' dress body patterns, and is sold for $8.50, retail. Orders sent to us will be attended to, and a full set of patterns will be sent, post-paid, upon receipt of the price. Liberal terms to agents. Also territorial rights for sale.

Brother Holsinger: I would like to take your Companion during the year, but I am a poor girl, and I cannot raise the money to pay for it, for I am not able to work, being a cripple. I am trying to get straightened by Dr. Allen, at Indianapolis, Indiana, free of charge. I have been sitting on the bed for the last three months, and how much longer I will have to remain on the bed, I cannot tell. It would be very interesting to have the Companion to read while I have to sit here. I get very lonesome sometimes, and if I have a good religious paper to read, I can pass my time away a great deal better.

Lucy C. Arnest.

We will cheerfully send the Companion to you free, hoping it may afford you much good company during your affliction; and perhaps some good brother or sister will write something for your special benefit. We want to do good and are glad when opportunities present themselves.

The Pious Youth for Sunday Schools.

We offer the Pious Youth to Sunday Schools, when ten or more copies are sent to one address, at the rate of five cents of a copy, or fifty cents a month for ten copies. It will then be sent without cover, in four different parts of eight pages each. We know of no paper in the market that is as well adapted for distribution in Sunday Schools as the Youth, under its new arrangement. And as to the doctrine it teaches, we think there can be no cavil. It is sound. Send for specimen copies and examine for yourselves. Seeing is believing.

Expected Visits.

How about those visits we had expected from our brethren from the West as they pass along on their way to the Annual Meeting. No one has yet responded. Are we to be slighted, and disappointed? Our Love-feast is appointed for the third day of June. Will not some ministers stop on their return? Where is brother Loehr? We have been expecting him for several weeks.

Brother Balsbaugh's Affliction.

Our note from brother C. H. Balsbaugh, published several weeks ago, which by the way had not been intended for publication, has called forth many inquiries in regard to his condition. In reply to their wishes, we can only say that at our latest advices, about the first instant, there were still possibilities of his recovery, of course not to health, but from his present severe attack, and he may perhaps be spared to remain with us yet a while longer.

Brother Holsinger: There is a young man here who would like to get some informotion of the faith, order, and practi ce of the Brethren: and I told him that by taking the C. F. C. he could get more information than I could give him; but he said, although he would like to read it, he was not able to pay for it. He was one of the unfortunates from Virginia, and lost all he had, through the war. He is also somewhat afflicted, and cannot work all the time: but is very saving and spends no money foolishly. Will you send him the paper free?

I. F. Neher

Yes, we will send it to him gladly, and hope it may aid him in finding the pearl of great price.

Address Wanted.

Brother Samuel Lair of Tennessee, desires the address of John or David Lair to be given through the Companion.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

WYANDOTT COUNTY, KANSAS, }
4 Miles S. W. of Kansas City. }

Brother Henry : I promised some time ago to write you upon our organization, which, thanks be to God, by his will we perfected this day a week past. Upon the arrival of bro. George Myers and family, communication was had with Elder D. D. Sell, who came among us with bro. Gibson, and proceeded about the "Master's business."

We had services in the M. E. church. Saturday evening; and a council at the house of brother Eli Yourtee on Sunday morning at ten o'clock A. M., some nineteen brethren and sisters were present.

An organization was unanimously agreed upon, the name to be the Kansas City congregation. Brother George Myers was with equal unanimity called to the charge of us. It being thought essential that he should have assistance, brother Eli Yourtee was chosen a minister of the first degree. He has been a resident of Kansas City for a year; formerly of the Pleasant Valley or Brownsville church, Maryland, and a son-in-law of Elder David Long's, whom I saw by your notes you visited while recently in Maryland.—His quiet deportment, his zeal in the good cause, his walk and conversation, as well as his thorough knowledge of the Scriptures, well befit him for his high calling in building up Zion's cause. At this point, in company with our beloved brother Myers who, I might say, as it may not generally be known to the brotherhood, came recently from the "Lost Creek" congregation, Juniata County, Pa., and is a brother to Eld. Grabill Myers, with whom your readers are well acquainted.

Our meeting was harmonious, and a perfect season of love. How sweet to meet the people of God! We have long looked forward to this auspicious hour and have invoked our Heavenly Father's aid in consummating the up-building of a church of his people in this growing and prosperous young city. Our prayers are answered—blessed be his holy name! and to-day we see its first fruits. To-day we had preaching at our school-house one mile from here. Had a good congregation, and all remarked the splendid attention given to the entire discourse, from 1 Peter 3 : 12. Both of our brethren were in their places, and brother Yourtee made his first effort. He did well; for he believed what he said. Brother Myers spoke of the importance of the "Christian characters being distinct from the world." He portrayed it with power. One gentleman and lady came from the city, on purpose to hear a "Dunkard" preach. After the services, he remarked to a brother "I have been a Methodist until I could not see a distinction between them and the world, and I thought it time to leave."

Our meetings seem to cheer us on our way. Since coming to the West we have had occasional services by brethren from a distance. They were rare seasons of refreshing.—Now we hope to have them once a week.

In my former letter there was a slight error in the address of brother George R. Holsinger; and as several brethren have been put to inconvenience thereby, I would ask a correction. The address of our father, is 1606 Hackberry St.—Brethren are cordially invited to stop while passing through.

Brethren pray for the upbuilding of God's church at this place.

Yours in the bonds of love.

FRANK HOLSINGER.

Brother Henry : You may insert in the C. F. C., this account of a visit with brother Noah Hendrick's and his wife, (a sister) from Black Swamp congregation, to the Green Springs congregation, to a council meeting held at brother Peter Shidler's; where we met the following brethren in bonds of love, John Brillhart, George Carn, Samuel Loose, and many other dear brethren and sisters. Met and settled all that was brought into council. The weak asked for the prayers of all the brethren and sisters, that they might be made strong in that most holy faith. Had an evening meeting at the same place: good preaching, good order and attention, which made our meeting a pleasant one.—After meeting, I and my brother in the flesh, also a brother in the Lord, went with brother Shidler to stay the balance of the night. In the morning, after meal, we went a few rods to visit brother and sister Sellers, well stricken in years. The sister was on a bed of affliction, from old age and debility. We were there but a short time, till brethren J. Brillhart, Grabill, N. Henricks, Geo. Carn, Sam'l Loose came, when they were asked for singing and prayer, which was complied with. BrethrenGrabill and Brillhart, led in singing, admonition and prayer, all German. Our hearts were made tender, while sitting beneath the sound of their voices, reminding us of our duties, that we may all one day meet again. We bade them all farewell, and left for the meeting place, appointed in a school-house, where we heard an able sermon delivered by brother John Brillhart, that has left lasting impressions on the hearts of those that were strangers to him. We hope that it was seed sown in good ground.

S. FINK.

Lindsey, Ohio,

DUNKIRK, OHIO. }
April 25th, 1871. }

Brother Henry : The brethren of Eagle Creek church, Hancock county, Ohio, met in Council, on Saturday the 14th of April; and after all other matter was disposed of that was brought up, the Sabbath School question came up. After a short discussion as to its appropriateness, it was unanimously agreed to organize a Sabbath school at this place, in order that we might meet together to read God's Word and instruct each other from its sacred pages. Whereupon the following officers were elected.

S. T. Bosserman, Superintendent, Isaac Rothrock, J. N. Cotner, Assistant Superintendents, Rafa Spacht, Secretary, John Baughman, Treasurer. It was then agreed to meet on Sunday the 23rd, to commence the school; at which time upwards of fifty scholars and a number of spectators were present. The school was opened by reading the 107th Psalm, singing a hymn, and offering prayer. Then the following classes were organized and teachers appointed.

Bible Class, Wm. M. Spacht, Teacher. New Testament Classes, Teachers, (A.) Callie B. Bosserman; (B.) John Baughman; (C.) Hattie Bosserman; (D.) Lydia M. Bosserman; (E.) Rafa Spacht, (F.) Isaac Rothrock; (G.) Jonas Frederick; (H.) Daniel B. Bosserman.

We hope this school may be the means of instructing the scholars in the way of truth and righteousness, that some good might be done in lighting our pathway to heaven.—To this end we pray God to bless the school that all may be done in accordance with his holy will.

S. T. Bosserman.

Brother Holsinger: Quite a number of old brethren and sisters fear that my article against the use of Tobacco, published in the Companion, is giving encouragemant to sisters in the wearing of hoops, ruffles, &c. To such brethren and sisters, I would say, It was the least of my intention to do so. I was only classing the evil of using tobacco with other superfluities, and amongst these I named hoops and ruffles, not that I wished to encourage our young sisters to wear either of them. In truth, I think it would be very wrong for them to do so, for it would be an open violation of their baptismal vow, which we certainly ought to hold sacred. Some members think I ought to acknowledge that I did wrong in publishing that article. I can honestly say that I am sorry that I have wounded the feelings of any member. I cannot take back the sentiment of that article, but I believe I was too pointed in my reflections upon the practice of some sisters, and if I had it back I would use milder language in conveying my ideas, in reference to what I consider an evil.

I hope this will give satisfaction, try to bear with me and I will try to be more careful hereafter. I am very thankful to those brethren who had the courage to notify me of what they thought was wrong.

Daniel Smith.

Hagerstown, Md.

Brother Holsinger:—We hear a great deal about the tobacco war; and some brethren are getting rather weak in the knees, as they seem to think there has been sufficient said upon that question. But the old proverb says: "Labor half done is labor lost," why not continue as long as there can good be accomplished? Now I have not got much experience myself, for I never formed the bad habit. But I have the trials and experience of an old friend that I feel it my duty to have published, as I think it may be an advantage to those who are honestly trying to get shut of the bad habit.

The facts are these: A few weeks ago I visited Mr. J. H. W. of Ottawa, Iowa. To my surprise and great joy I found he had thrown his pipe away (for he was the greatest smoker that I knew).

Now for the cure. He said he got a box of tobacco antidote and tasted it. He found the principal ingredient was Gentian root; so he went to a drug store and procured plenty of that and used it, in the meantime he whittled a little stick the size of a pipe stem and kept that in his mouth instead of a stem; and so he kept up that kind of a process for some time. Now he is through.

There are others who did likewise, and have come out victorious. Mr. J. W. H. says he is enjoying good health. He says he can cure any one with this process who wants to give up the habit. Now who would not choose freedom rather than slavery?

Yours, truly,

H. G. Ullery.

Covington, O.

Brother Henry: I hope you will excuse me for being a little slow in filling my quota of the last call for subscribers to your paper, in the prosperity of which I feel interested.

We frequently hear some complaining of so many calls for subscribers to your different papers: it is only for the sake of money they say. So say we; and it is no wonder when the editor has to borrow money to meet his demands, because some of his subscribers are so slow to pay for their subscriptions.

Now it seems to me if we were to examine ourselves according to directions, to see whether we are in the faith we were when we were received into the church, we might see something that we could dispense with; and pay for our subscription, and a good deal of reading matter.

This is all in love.

John H. Caylor.

Church Government.

Brother Editor: I have attended our District Council, comprising Beaver Creek, Welsh Run, Brownsville, and Manor churches. Being my first attendance at district council, I must admit I was somewhat disconcerted at the position of affairs attending the consummation of business, being called forcibly to mind by an appeal case being brought up before us by the church, for the adjudication of a difficulty existing between two brethren, a purely business transaction, which case had the benefit of the deliberation of their arm of the church or circuit counsel, which having failed to render satisfaction, it was brought before district council, claiming redress.—Upon the opening up of the case, the first question sprung, was, did the case come legally under the jurisdiction of said council: or, was it the prerogative of said body to try the case? This, I confess somewhat startled me. The church dating back to the year 1600, has had no precedent from which to deduce its authority, pertaining to cases of this character! and my inquiry is, (as this is more particularly a matter of inquiry with me) has the district council the power within itself, to make its own laws, rules and regulations, for the transaction of all business brought before it for adjudication? or has the A. M., ever made any provision of an especial character for the regulation of the subordinate councils of the church? and if it has not, would it not be expedient for it to exercise that prerogative? I maintain that in order to dispatch business properly and satisfactorily, we must nescessarily have system and order—acting advisedly from such authority with which we are invested. This must nescessarily apply as well to a properly regulated church government, as to the legislative, judicial, and executive government of states; as every department has its peculiar functions to perform, exercised from some delegated power, whether directly from the people, or some executive branch of the government, having the power to confer authority by which legal action is obtained.

How is it with us who claim that all things shall "be done decently and in order?" Do we lack perfect organization, or do we not? Do the wheels of our church government need any legislative oil, so that the affairs pertaining to the better regulation of church government may run smoother, that no harsh sounds may greet our ears, annulling our judical action?—Where grievances of a peculiar character between brother and brother, who have sought redress at the hands of their own immediate arm of the church in circuit council, there failing to adjust the matter satisfactorily, is it, or is it not their prerogative, either in the representative capacity of said church, or in the individual capacity of the respective parties aggrieved, to appeal to district council for adjudication, as a higher court of church government? Failing there to render satisfaction to all parties concerned is the case susceptable of being carried up to Annual Meeting as the highest tribunal exercising authority over the church, all other councils being subordinate thereto—regarding its decision final and complete until reconsidered by that body only.

Many may say I am wasting much time unnecessarily in trying to get this question before the church for consideration; but yet I say that justice demands it: justice to the church, justice to ourselves in a delegated capacity, as well as justice to the individuals who may be represented in cases of this sort. I feel that, if I am called upon to act in a legislative, judicial, or executive capacity, I must know if such power is legally conferred. If not, it is within my province to decline action which will be of none effect; whereas, if the power is legally and properly conferred, the validity of our deliberations cannot be impeached. Hence I feel convinced that in all cases of a general, as well as many of a specific character, we should be delegated with power from the highest tribunal of our church government; as we will then in all cases be acting advisedly, and perfectly secure in the limitation of power conferred upon us. If I am in error I ask correction always willing to submit to the elder in all things tending toward the advancement of the glory of Jesus Christ and his kingdom. Fraternally.

P. S. Newcomer.

Announcements.

District Meetings.

The District Meeting of the East Pa. district, for 1871, will be held, God willing, in the Big Swatara congregation Dauphin Co., Pa., on May 11th.

Members coming by Railroad will stop off at Hummelstown, a station on the Lebanon Valley R. R., unless ordered otherwise by the brethren holding the Meeting. The Hanover Meeting house, the place of meeting is about 4 miles north of Hummelstown.

It is requested that the Elders & delegates be at the place of meeting in the afternoon of the day previous (10th), to organize, and prepare for business the next day; and that all the churches be fully represented.

Lovefeasts.

We purpose to hold a lovefeast on the 20th of May, the Lord willing. An invitation is given, especially to ministering brethren. The meeting will be in the Washington district, 6 miles North East of Warsaw, at brother Samuel Shaver's.—Those coming on the cars will stop off at Warsaw, where they will be met with teams.

D. S. Cripe.

The brethren in Richardson Co., Neb, intend to hold a communion meeeting, the Lord willing, on the 3rd and 4th of June. A harty invitation is hereby extended to the members in other localities; and we desire ministering brethren not to fail.

By order of the church.

John Forney Sen.

The Lord will, there will be a Communion Meeting in the Redbank congregation, Armstrong Co., Pa., on the evening of the 18th of May inst. Meeting to begin on the evening of the 13th. A cordial invitation is extended to all, especially the ministering brethren. Quinter and Wise are expected to be present. J. P. Hetric.

There will be a lovefeast in the Cero Gordo branch, Ills, on the 10th and 11th of June. A general invitation is given; ministers are especially invited.

David Frantz.

The brethren in Lost Creek church, Pa, intend holding a lovefeast at the Goodwill Meeting-house, about 8 miles from Mifflin and about the same distance from Thomsontown, stations on the P. C. R. R. on the 24th and 25th of May. A general invitation is given.

Solomon Sieber.

We the brethren of the Elklick branch, Somerset county, Pa., expect holding a Lovefeast, God willing, on the third day of June, commencing at 4 o'clock, and to continue over Sunday. We give this timely notice so that the brethren from the western states, or those living west of us, can make their arrangements to stop with us over Sunday, as they return from the Annual Meeting. Those that pass over the Baltimore and Ohio R. R., will stop at Cumberland, and there take the Pittsburg and Connellsville R. R. to Meyer's Mills, where you will be met by the brethren on Friday and Saturday, the 2nd, and 3rd of June. This station is 37 miles west of Cumberland, so that if you wish to return to the B. & O. R. R., you can do so, or else run to Pittsburg on the P. & C. R. R. We are very desirous of having some of our ministerial brethren to stop off with us. We also extend a hearty invitation to the surrounding branches, and especially the laboring brethren. I fondly hope I may hear from some that will say we will come.

Yours in behalf of the church.

C. G. LINT.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Falling Spring branch, Franklin County, Pa., April 12th, brother JOHN SARGER; aged 86 years, 9 months, and 18 days. Funeral discourse by Elder Henry Koontz, from the words, "For what is your life?" James 4; 14.

Died February 24th, 1871, at the house of her daughter, in Pleasant Valley, Washington Co., Md., sister NANCY CASTLE, aged about 82 years.

She survived her husband but about two years whose age when he died was 76 years, 11 months, and 7 days. They lived in holy wedlock nearly fifty years. Both were members of the Church for nearly or quite the whole time. Not only did they covenant to live with each other in the sacred relationship of holy wedlock according to the ordinances of God. But evidently they were desirous to sustain still higher relationship—Hence they entered into covenant with their God. And to all human appearance they adhered to that covenant to the end of their ives. The result of which is that they are now in the enjoyment of eternal life, and recognize each other as the angels of heaven,

Funeral service by the writer on John 14; 1 and 3.

To Nebraska, California, and Kansas, and the B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The "Burlington Route," as called, lies right in the path of the Star of Empire. It runs almost immediately in the center of the great westward movement of emigration. Crossing Illinois and Iowa, it strikes the Missouri river at three points.

These three points are the gateways into three great sections of the trans-Missouri region.

The Northern gate is Omaha, where the great Pacific road will take you to the land of gold and grapes, sunny mountains, and perpetual summer.

The middle gate is Plattsmouth, which opens upon the south half of Nebraska, south of the Platte river, a region unsurpassed on the continent for agriculture and grazing. Just here are the B. & M. Railroad lands, concerning which Geo. S. Harris, the land officer at Burlington, Iowa, can give you all information, and in the heart of them is Lincoln, the State Capital and present terminus of the road.

The Southern gate leads to Kansas, by connections with the St. Joe Road at Hamburg running direct to St. Joe and Kansas City

The trains of the Burlington run smoothlyq and safely, and make all connections. It runs the best of coaches, Pullman Palace and Pullman dining cars, and should you take the journey for the journey's sake alone, you will be repaid ; or take it to find a home or a farm, and you cannot find either better than among the B. & M. lands, where you can buy on ten years' credit, and at a low price.

THE

Christian Family Companion

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements ; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political Journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

"There is Death in the Pot."

2 Kings iv: 40.

BY H. L. F.

Prov. i: 8. My son, hear a father's instruction to-day, i: 8. Flee not from the law of thy mother away;
i: 10. If sinners entice thee, consent to it not.
But rest thou assured, "There is death in the pot."

Prov. vii: 9. In the twilight of eve, in the black and dark night, vii: 6. I beheld from my casement a pitiable sight:
vii: 7. A man void of wisdom, to virtue a blot.
vii: 24. I communed in my heart, "There is death in the pot."

Prov. vii: 10. There met him a woman, most subtile of heart, vii: 10. Attired as an harlot, and playing that part;
vii: 13. She caught him and kissed him, 'twas part of her plot, vii: 14. But the fool never dreamed "There was death in the pot."

Prov. vii: 14. She flattered him greatly, and forced him to yield, vii: 19. While her sweet, honeyed words deadly poison concealed;
vii: 21. With her much fair speech he is bound to the spot, vii: 22. Very soon to find out, "There is death in the pot."

Prov. vii: 22 He followed her straightway, as an ox to the block, vii: 22. As a bird to the snare, or a fool to the stock;
vii: 23. Till a dart strike his liver, he knoweth it not, vii: 23. That it is for his life, "There is death in the pot."

Prov. vii: 24. Hearken unto me, therefore, ye children of men, vii: 26. She hath slain many thousands, who return not again;
vii: 27. Her house is the way to a hell seething hot, vii: 27. Going down to the chambers of death, by the pot.

Isaiah v: 22. Woe to the man who the wine cup still grasps,
Deut. 39: 33. 'Tis the poison of dragons, the venom of asps;
Num. v: 21. This liquid damnation his vitals will rot,
Isaiah i: 6. And a putrid existence shows death in the pot.

Wise Words.

From Pand Namah, or Book of Counsels, by a Parsee writer of the fourth century.

A wise man understands a good work from the beginning; but a fool, only when it comes to an end. Seek the counsel of wise and sensible men, of learned men, of intelligent men, and of men of good disposition, and be thou their friend. Keep thy hands from stealing, thy feet from wandering without work, and thy mind from cherishing wicked revenge; for the man who works righteousness obtains a good reward; and the man that does sin, suffers punishment. Do not injure thy soul by wrath and envy. Do not consign thy soul to hell out of a false modesty or shame. Ask God's blessing and keep thy heart cheerful, and thou shalt obtain from the Lord an increase of his goodness. Always, and at every time trust thou in God alone, and make that beloved to thyself which is increasingly profitable unto thee. Labor and sacrifice thy life for the thing which is of God. Meditate on virtue. Do not meditate on sin; for a man does not live for ever, therefore the thing that concerns heaven is most befitting thee.

Good Manners.

Every household should cultivate good manners. They are indispensable, even to the young. A churlish, rude deportment bespeaks a low, unfeeling mind. No position, wealth, or education, can make amends for it. Good manners are attractive and winning, and should be carefully observed in every family circle. Parents should never indulge themselves in careless manners or coarse language, much less their children or domestics. The feelings of those of inferior stations should be regarded as well as those of the highest.

A New Broom Sweeps Clean.

(CLIPPED AND REVISED.)

This is an old proverbial phrase, and as it is generally used, implies that man is changable, and inconstant in his character; that he soon becomes tired of anything which he may possess however valuable it may be, and wishes to exchange it for something new. This seems to have been from old history the characteristic of the ancient Grecians. They were ever seeking after something new and novel in its character.

And, perhaps I might be safe in saying, that there are no people upon the face of the whole earth, who exhibit a greater passion for a constant change, than do our American people. They soon become tired of that which is old, and replace it with something new, for a "new broom sweeps clean."

A young man may toil incessantly, cultivate his mind and talent, and establish a god moral character, free from reproach, yet his talent and moral worth are not appreciated by his neighbors and friends. They do not whisper a word of encouragement in his ear. They cannot see anything extraordinary in one with whom they are so familiarly acquainted; but if a stranger enters the neighborhood, though he may be far inferior in point of talent and moral character; even the old men and women will boast of his fine personal appearance, exalted intellect, and gentlemanly deportment. Even the daughters will set their caps for him. He becomes the great topic of conversation and every body speaks of him in terms of highest commendation. When we witness such occurrences as this, we are reminded of the adage: "a new broom sweeps clean."

A man may set up a business of any sort, in the vicinity in which he has been brought up; and his patronage will be but slim; but if some stranger sets up a shop or store, we see a stir in the neighborhood, and a jingling among the mighty dollars, that will convince his competitors, that "a new broom sweeps clean."

A minister of genuine piety and fine talents, may often speak in his own church on the Sabbath, to empty seats or gaping hearers; but if some new speaker visits the church, what a rush throngs the house, with itching ears, eagerly listening to the discourse, while their own neglected minister says to himself, "a new broom sweeps well."

We sometimes have friends whom we take to be true; they greet us whenever we meet them, with a smile, and spend many a pleasant hour with us around our fireside.—But let a stranger come in, who may make a vain show, with a fine appearance, and immediately we are laid on the shelf. They carve no name beneath our humble cottage roof; they have thrown their old friends aside, for a new one. Deserted by those, whose fidelity we had not dared to doubt, we sit around our lonely fireside, muttering to ourselves: "a new broom sweeps clean."

And if a new fashion comes into the country, we see everybody trying to imitate and follow it, and thus we see in the moral world, by daily observation that "a new broom sweeps clean."

Have you done everything in your power to cultivate your mind, and establish a character unsullied?—Have you spared no pains to please your friends, and yet been surprised to see your efforts fail, and even your character abused, by those whose respect and love, you have tried to win? Have you been at a loss to comprehend why you should be so unfortunate?

Remember that you are an old broom, and that a new broom always sweeps clean. But why does the new broom sweep clean? Is it because it is better than the old one? Nay, verily. It is often inferior.—Yea it is the broom of jealously which reigns in almost every bosom, and instituted by the devil, who is the father of lies. He was a liar from the beginning; yes, he instituted and made, too, the broom of deception, another one of his lies—And do we not use that broom a little too much? I fear we do. Do we not too often say things a little hard of some one, behind his back, which we would not say before his face? Yes, I fear we do; but let us remember what St. James says of the tongue: "Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth. And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity. So is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body and setteth on fire the course of nature, and it is set on fire of hell."

So we see the devil's broom of deception if we suffer ourselves to sweep with it, will cause us trouble. And as we are taught that he is such a liar, let us not use his implements, but as the Apostle tells us; "touch not, taste not, handle not."

We see again, he is a liar, for he uses men as his instruments, even in the so called Christian Church, framing commandments and doctrines contrary to the commandments and doctrines of Christ, of which we are commanded to "touch not, taste not, handle not."

ANDREW STALNAKER.

For the COMPANION.

Good Friday.

We hear this day recommended for sowing seed, saying that it is certain to bring a good crop. I had a conversation with one of my neighbors, who said he would sow to-day; and he named a number of his neighbors who, he said, always sowed on this day. (Flax-seed, we suppose. A. E.) Although I never believed in such signs, yet he referred to the most practical farmers and their experience. I was an attentive listener—never answering a word; yet in my mind I seemed to say, "Then there must be more virtue in this day, than in common days!"

After leaving my neighbor, as I was traveling along the road, my mind still dwelt on the conversation about the virtue of the day, when a thought struck me, which made my heart break. How are we using the virtue of this day? Is it to increase our temporal store Or do we remember that this day in remembrance of Jesus' being crowned with thorns, and scourged, that he was not able to bear his cross from the loss of blood, and from pain?

that Jesus hung on the cross to-day? Is it because to-day he hung between heaven andearth,bleeding for me,for all the human family? Is it that there was none to acknowledge his spiritual kingdom, but a thief? Is it because to-day the great luminary of day, hid his face? Is it because a heathen exclaimed, "They are crucifying the Author of light; it is no wonder that it is dark?" Is it because to-day the earth did quake, and many bodies of the saints arose and appeared to many, and went triumphant in redeeming love with their Master to his glorious kingdom? Is it that to-day the weeping women were again reminded of the destruction of Jerusalem and the great calamity, by the saying, "Weep not for me; but weep for yourselves and for your children?" Is it that to-day he hung six dreadful hours on the cross, suspended by spikes driven through his tender hands and feet—those hands that were always engaged in doing good?

And now, my dear friends, should we not to-day sow seed that we may reap eternal life? Methinks I hear the worldling say, "I will turn and follow Jesus—I want to be with him in glory."

If an angel should tell you, that there is a mansion in heaven for you, that it shall certainly be yours forever, & would not such a message make you rejoice? It is more sure than an angel's word: Jesus says he has prepared a place for all his children. Let us lay up our "treasures in heaven, where rust doth not corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." Friends, let us keep near the cross; let us take the Savior's advice to pray in our closet, or like Jacob, in the field. It is the armor and we must keep it bright.—Our Master is coming, and he has his reward with him. If we get there, we shall walk the golden streets, and wear snow-white robes, and shine bright as the sun; and our highest note will be redeeming love. We there shall meet those with whom we have prayed; and perhaps some that we pointed to Jesus as they were lying on their death-bed, will there welcome us: we shall then part no more. May this be the happy lot of the reader and writer, is my prayer.

Truthfulness at Home.

Of all happy households, that is the happiest where falsehood is never thought of. All peace is broken up when once it appears there is a liar in the house. All comfort has gone when suspicion has once entered—when there must be reserve in talk, and reservation in belief. Anxious parents, who are aware of the pains of suspicion, will place general confidence in their children, and receive what they say freely, unless there is strong reason to mistrust the truth of any one. If such an occasion should unhappily arise, they must keep the suspicion from spreading as long as possible, and avoid disgracing their poor child while there is a chance of his cure by their confidential assistance. He should have their pity and assiduous help, as if he were suffering under some bodily disorder. If he can be cured, he will become duly grateful for the treatment. If the endeavor fail, means must of course be taken to prevent his example from doing harm; and then, as I said, the family peace is broken up, because the family confidence is gone. I fear that, from some cause or other, there are but few large families where every member is altogether truthful.

But where all are so organized and so trained as to be wholly reliable in act and word, they are a light to all eyes and a joy to all hearts. They are public benefits, for they are a point of general reliance; and they are privately blessed within and without. Without their life is made easy by universal trust; and within their home and their hearts they have the security of rectitude and the gladness of innocence.

A Woman's Defence.

For myself, I should be thankful to return to the habits of our grandmothers,—buy a bonnet which would do to wear ten years; have three dresses, two for every day and one for "nice," and wear them year after year till they wear out, without alteration: also twist up my hair in a plain wad at the back of my head. I should then have more time for reading and study, and more money to spend in books, pictures, and traveling, to say nothing of the unlimited time and money for doing good. And I know of very many woman who would be only too happy to throw aside the wearisome shackles of fashion. But what would be the result? With the maiden, no more beaux: with the wife, a cessation of devotion on the part of her husband—results too dire to be contemplated for a moment. I speak what I know, and testify what I have seen. I have myself been to parties sensibly and economically clad, and I was despised and rejected of men; again, I have been more fashionably and expensively attired, and I had more beaux than I knew what to do with. By the way, why don't some of our wise and sensible bachelors court and marry among the vast army of working girls? They are dressed simply, and are accustomed to habits of economy. They would be glad enough of good homes, and would make excellent wives. They are personally attractive, and I doubt not, are quite as refined and intelligent as the average of fashionable woman.—Why is there not a greater demand for them as wives, and why are not the Flora McFlimpsey's a drug in the market? Let the facts speak for themselves. Be not deceived. O my brethren! With you lies the fault; from you must come the remedy—refuse to pay court to the silks, panniers, frills and chignons, and we shall go over to calico in battalions.—Evening Post.

This being a Christian, this carrying the heart to the Lord Jesus Christ through all the experiences of a tempestous life, is a thing that has to be learned little by little. There is nothing that has to be learned so patiently and that acquires so much practice as a Christian character.—Beecher.

Per-everance.—A poor woman had a supply of coal laid at her door by a charitable neighbor. A very little girl came out with a small fire-shovel, and began to take up a shovelful at a time, and carry it to a sort of bin in the cellar. I said to the child: "Do you expect to get all that coal in with that little shovel?" She was quite confused at my question; but her answer was very striking: "Yes sir; if I work long enough."

Humble worker, [illegible] your want of ability by a constant continuance in well doing, and your work will not be trivial. The repetition of small efforts will effect more than the occasional use of great ones.—Feathers and Arrows.

Educational.

As the time for the meeting or the Annual Council is now drawing very near, at which, in all human probability, the educational movement among the brethren, will, to a greater or less extent be discussed, we consider it a duty devolving upon the friends of educational institutions among us as a denomination, to try to set the matter of education as fairly as possible before the Brotherhood.

One fact to my mind is very obvious: we should have engertic men,—self-sacrificing, ardent, earnest working men, such as our brethren in Indiana,—who are willing to take hold of this important matter and push it forward with determination, till it stands forth before some of its opposers in its true light; so that those of us—if any there be—who at present do not see it in its proper colors, may soon comprehend it as we ought, and give it a warm place in our affections, and try to move it forward, so that the children of our brethren might have institutions of learning of which they can say, "We have a personal interest;" and in which there is not taught, amid its literary instruction, a medley of truth and error so closely allied, that, without much discretion, we are unable to tell which is true or which is false. The mind at the time when it is most apt to advance intellectually, is just at the point when it is most susceptible of lasting impressions morally; and if the awakening affections of the heart at this period receive wrong training, it is a very difficult matter ever to correct it, if ever it can be done: the old maxim, "just as the twig is bent so the tree's inclined," seems to hold good here.

How much better would you feel, brethren, to have your children under the care of an instructor who holds the doctrines of the cross in an unbiased mind, and who is obeying, from the heart, that form of doctrine delivered to us in the sacred word of God. I think—yes, I know, that you have a deep rooted affection for your children; and you don't desire to have them led into the errors of the world, and their young minds poisoned with the seeds of vanity, folly, fashion, and falsehood, which cluster so thickly around "Mystery Babylon." If you do not desire this, then put forth an effort to provide places of instruction suitable for your children, where you can feel assured that the seeds of truth, which you sowed in their young minds, will be watered and fertilized by those elements that are calculated to establish them more firmly in the truth as it is in Jesus. How many of you have realized, that, after your children were away for a year or two at some Academy or College that is under the influence of some worldly-wise element or society, when they returned to you, they were drawn aside from the simplicity of the Gospel of Christ? I know some of you at least have had this experience; and how do you feel under such circumstances?

A very kind, intelligent mother once said, "Oh! it would almost break my heart, to see my children running into the errors that cluster around a worldly christianity!" All this may be avoided by an effort to provide suitable places for the instruction of your children, instead of trying to pull down those already in successful operation. Be assured of this fact, my brethren, that your children will seek for the attainment of knowledge; and if there is no provision made for them in the church, they will find it outside of it; for the young mind thirsts after knowledge, as the panting stag for the cooling stream of water, at which to slaken his raging thirst. The thirst of the young mind for scientific development must be satiated at the Pierian fountain of science; and there is no silencing of this desire, only by feeding it with good, solid matter, drawn from the store-house of intelligence.

Besides, we believe it to be the imperative duty of every parent to cultivate this desire in the mind of their children; and then aid them in the enterprise of intellectual training as far as possible. But if we refuse to do this, many have energy enough, and they will, as a last resort, help themselves.

As a closing paragraph to our essay, permit us to give a few instances in a students history, to show more plainly how students are set upon to draw them aside from their faith in Christ. Our informant said: "The institution which I attended did not allow anything sectarian or political to enter into the general exercises of the school, nor the Lyceum connected with it; and I rejoiced, thinking that I would pass my course of instruction there, and my Christian principles would not be meddled with. But, pleasant as matters passed off for a few weeks, I was destined to a speedy disappointment; and I felt it quite sensibly when, one evening at supper, a high official of the school came to me and said, as he laid his hand familiarly on my shoulder, 'Remain with us three or four years, and we will send you out as a———minister, and ask you to administer baptism in a different mode from that taught by the Brethren.' Not many months after the term closed, I received quite a pleasant letter from him, (the same official,) in which was this comprehensive sentence: 'Do you not feel, my young brother, that you ought to enter fully—as soon as qualified—the field of the Gospel ministry? I would be glad to have your views upon this matter candidly.' Here was another allusion, that our student brother would be welcomed as a minister in the ranks of that denomination. But one more trial and we will close; this happened after I was in the ministry; and this time the subject was broached directly. Riding along in a buggy side by side, conversing pleasantly, we finally dropped, as by mutual consent, on the subject of feet-washing; when I was confidentially informed that, if I would relinquish that and the ministry among the Brethren, and preach for another denomination, I would be aided in obtaining a thorough theological education, with little or no expense to myself."

Now, brethren, when we view these inducements held out to the mind, embracing, as they do, a thorough intellectual training a salaried ministry, with worldly honors and emoluments, do we still wonder that we see young persons sometimes falling in with these things, instead of with the simple faith and practices of the church, as taught in the word of God? But, I am asked, how are we to avoid these things? I reply: By encouraging institutions of education among us, and under the control of the church. I well remember how I longed for an institution of this kind under the control of some member of the church, where I might turn my face to and feel at home; and how disappointed I felt when I wrote to brother Sharp, and received the reply that he had disposed of his institution. And I doubt not, that many others feel a like disappointment. Then, dear brethren, we ask you to act prudently in this matter; and if possible, advance the educational interests among us, with only those restrictions necessary to keep it in the bounds of meekness. Written in love for the cause.

Masonry.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER WRITTEN BY ELDER GEORGE W. STUDEBAKER.

Masonry is not of God; because it has no Savior, no atonement for sin, no vicarious death of Christ, requires not faith in Christ, no regeneration and sanctification by the influence of the Holy Spirit, no justification by the righteousness of Christ, no Holy Spirit, no repentence, no baptism, no washing of the Saint's feet, no Lord's supper, no bread and wine as a commemorative ordinance of the vicarious death of Christ, no holy kiss, no anointing with oil in the name of the Lord, (James 5: 14,) no ambassadors for Christ, (2 Cor. 5: 20, Rom. 10: 17, Acts, 15: 7,) no doctrine of the Trinity, (Matth. 28: 19, Luke, 3: 22.) Those holy principles and ordinances belong to the Christian creed, and not to Masons. They are plainly revealed in the gospel of Christ.

The mysteries of Masonry are concealed from the world; the mysteries of godliness are revealed, and the ministers of the gospel are to make them known to all men; Eph. 3: 9, "To make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery;" Eph. 6: 19, "That I may open my mouth boldly to make known the mystery of the gospel." Again, the Savior said, (Jno. 18: 20,) "I spake openly to the world; and in secret have I said nothing." According to Masonic writers, "Were Masonry universally known, it would destroy the institution; were these secrets communicated, they would be of no material service to mankind." TOWN, page 36. According to the gospel and our civil laws, a person has a right to discuss all subjects without endangering his life; but not so according to Masonry. We may take it for granted that a society that will prohibit on pain or death, a full and fair investigation and revalation of its principles, is corrupt and dangerous to church and state.

Another strong evidence that Masonry is not of God, is deduced from the fact that they fellowship heathens, Mohammedans, deists, skeptics, and Jews. Bradly says: "Masonic principles are the same in every age and nation." Page 33. Preston says: "As a Msaon you should study the sacred code, the Bible, and obey it; and where that book is not known, study the religion of the land and obey it." Page 51. This is from high Masonic authority. A man may be a Mason and a pirate. Mr. Town says; "Even the bloody flag of the pirate is changed for the Olive branch of peace by the mysterious token of a Mason. Do you meet an enemy in battle array, the token of a Mason instantly converts him into a guardian angel." Page 160. Town says: "The rude savage of the wilderness, who has the degrees, meets the civilized Mason as his brother."

Masonic oaths are contrary to sound doctrine: they know not the nature of these oaths before they take them. Herod was ignorant of the nature of his oath; and he deserved to lose his life for keeping it. Mark 6: 27. Was it not a greater sin for him to keep his oath than to break it? No man can be justifiable in taking a solemn oath with out having first examined its nature.

It is urged that Masonry is an advantage to a person in a strange land; hence it is said ministers of the Gospel ought to be Masons. If ministers are not willing to trust God among strangers, they need to pray for more faith, and perhaps would do better in some other calling. To say God has communicated divine truth, and things by which man is profited or bettered, and God glorified, to Masonic lodges, which he has withheld from the church of Christ, is blasphemous. "God forbid" says Paul, "that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." Gal. 6: 14. When christians give themselves to God and their brethren they make no reserve.

It is thought by some that nothing should be said on a subject that causes unpleasant feelings. A contention for truth, will generally cause unpleasantness in the minds of those that do not love the truth. The preaching of a primitive minister of Christ once caused some of his hearers to gnash on him with their teeth, and even to take his life. Masonic oaths clash with Christian principles. Suppose two Masons are church members; one is guilty of a crime, which he commits to the other as a secret; the church calls him to an account, and the other is called as a witness against him; his covenant with God and the church demands of him to tell the whole truth, but he has sworn not to do it: the oath and his Christian obligations are at war; and one or the other must be violated.

A part of the foolishness of the Master Mason's oath is, "furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister, or daughter, I knowing them to be such." This oath indicates that they are not under obligations to regard the purity of any females, but those whom they know to be the connections of a Master Mason. If I would solemnly promise and swear in the church, that I would not steal my fellow preacher's corn, I suppose the balance of my neighbors would think it prudent to keep their crib doors locked. The Master Mason mimics death: professes to be killed in imitation of Hiram Abiff. Masons, in a mock way knock him down, kill him, and lay him aside for a dead man. How does a Christian look in this ceremony? Trifling with death and the winding sheet! What an exhibition is made at the burial of of a Mason, and on public days, by a long train of nominal officers with their flowing robes and badges of distinction! Such conduct clearly demonstrate that the God of this world has blinded the minds of them that believe or say that Masonry is a branch of the church of God.

Finally, to take such oaths, to belong to such a society, to profane holy things, to mimic death, to mock titles, to perpetuate jewish and heathenish ceremonies, to violate the christian covenant, manifests weakness and wickedness; and it is extreme folly to think that a Christian has a right to engage in them.

The Deity.

I wrote a short article on the divinity of Jesus Christ, which was published in current Vol., No. 13; and in No. 17 appeared an article called a reply, written by brother S. S. Garman, in which it appears that he takes exception to the idea I advanced, that Jesus Christ, in his Divine nature, is the eternal God.

Now, with all due respect to brother Garman, I will say, that I am of the opinion that he did not comprehend the ideas I advanced on the subject of the Divinity and eternity of Jesus Christ. Brother Garman speaks of Jesus as often being seen, and of lying in the grave: and and then asks the question: "What power, do you suppose, kept the heavens together, and every thing moving in its proper order, while Jesus Christ was lying in the grave, if Jesus Christ be the eternal God?" Answer: It is true Jesus was often seen, and was lying in the grave, but all this is only applicable to the humanity of Jesus Christ; for it was only the body of Jesus that was taken down from the cross and laid in the grave. Surely the Divinity of Jesus Christ never died, and never entered the domain of the dead. Our brother says, "Christ and God the Father are one, spiritually." This is what I claim.

I will now state in regular order the positions I have taken; then it any brother chooses to reply to those positions, it can be done in regular order.

My positions are as follows:

1. That the Christian has but one God.
2. That the Bible declares that Jesus Christ is God, the Almighty, and is called Jehovah.
3. That Jesus Christ is the creator of all things.
4. That all things were created for Jesus Christ.
5. That creation required almighty power.
6. That there can be but one Almighty.
7. That Jesus Christ, in his Divine nature, is eternal and unoriginated.

I will notice Jesus Christ in his humanity. We see him hungry and thirsty, asleep and fatigued, taken prisoner, nailed to the Roman cross, inquiring of God why he had forsaken him; and we see him die, taken down from the cross and buried. But let us now, for a few moments, look at him in his Divine nature. We see him walking upon the water; he calmed the waves of the sea, opened the eyes of the blind, called Lazarus and raised him from the dead, and raised the body of Jesus from the dead, triumphed over death hell and the grave, lead captivity captive and gave gifts unto them.

I will now offer a few additional proofs to support the position I have taken. In Matth. 1: 23, Christ is called "Emmanuel;" which means "God with us"—the strong God with us.

In Col. 2: 9, Paul says to the Collossians, "In him (Jesus Christ) dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." The Godhead did not dwell figuratively in the body of Christ, but in the body of Christ, dwelled the Deity, really, truly, and substantially.

Again, Paul in his letter to Timothy, (1 Tim. 3: 16) informs us, that "God was manifested in the flesh," that is, dwelled in the man Christ Jesus; for "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself," 2 Cor. 5: 19.

Once more, and I will close for the present. Jesus says, "there is none good but one, and that is God:" and I hope and believe that all God's children are willing to call Jesus "good Master," and consequently will admit that Jesus Christ is truly and properly God.

Pleasant Hill, O.

What We Want.

"It is extraordinary grace, not talent, that wins the day. It is extraordinary spiritual power, not extraordinary mental power, that we need. Mental power may fill a chapel; but spiritual power fills the church. Mental power may gather a congregation; spiritual power will save souls. We want spiritual power. Oh! we know some before whom we shrink into nothing as to talent, but who have no spiritual power, and when they speak, they have not the Holy Spirit with them; but we know others—simple-hearted, worthy men, who speak their country dialect, and who stand up to preach in their country-place, and the Spirit of God clothes every word with power. Hearts are broken, souls are saved, and sinners are born again. O Spirit of the living God! we want thee. Thou art the life, the soul, the source of thy people's success. Without thee they can do nothing, with thee they can do everything."

A Sure Record.—There is no way for men to discern their names written in the book of life, but by reading the work of sanctification in their own hearts. I desire no miraculous voice from heaven, no extraordinary signs, or unscriptural notices and information in this matter. Lord, let me but find my heart obeying thy calls, my will obediently submitting to thy commands; sin, my burden, and Christ, my desire; I never crave a fairer or surer evidence of thy electing love to my soul.—Flavel.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper. No. 18.

RECAPITULATION.

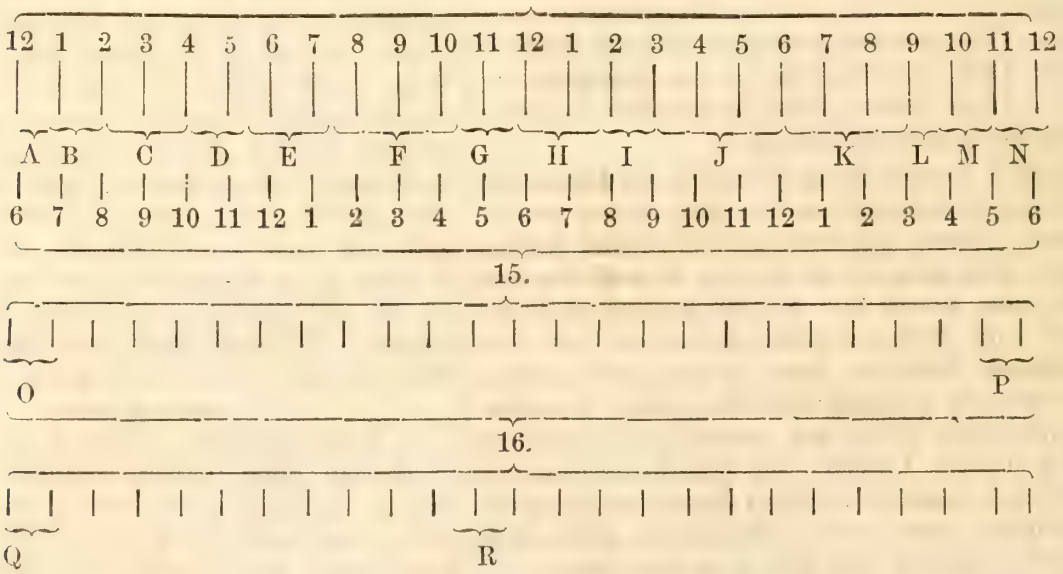
Diagram No. 3 represents the 14th, 15th, and 16th days of Abib, or Nisan, in the year of the crucifixion of Christ.

14 represents the fourteenth day of the month. On this day the Passover must be killed, in the evening at the going down of the sun—between the ninth hour, or middle of the afternoon; and the close of the day. Ex. 12: 6, Deut. 16: 6, Jos. VOL. 2, B. 6, Ch. 10, § 3. On this day they were also to remove the Leaven from their houses, and to eat unleavened bread at even. Ex. 12: 18. Therefore this day was called "The passover of the Lord," (Num. 28: 16.)—"the first of the unleavened bread," (Matth. 26: 17.)—"the first day of unleavened bread," (Mark 14: 12)—"the day of unleavened bread,"—(Luke 22: 7)—"the day of the preparation," (Matth. 27: 62)—"the preparation," (Mark 15: 42, Luke 23: 54, John 19: 31)—"the preparation of the passover," (John 19: 14)—"the Jews preparation day," John. 19: 42.

15 represents the fifteenth day of the month. On this day,—in the early part of the night,—the Passover was eaten: "In the fifteenth day of this month is the feast," Num. 28: 17. But this was also the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, which feast was commemorative of the departure of the Hebrew's from Egypt; and as the fifteenth day was the proper anniversary of their departure from Rameses, in the night of the Passover, it was, by way of eminence called "the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord." Lev. 28: 5, Ex. 12: 42; 13: 4. This day was a holy convocation unto the Lord; and was therefore called a sabbath. (Lev. 23: 7, 15.) In the New Testament this day is called "the feast day," (Matth. 26: 5.)—"the sabbath," Mark 15: 42, Luke 23: 54, 56. In the year of the crucifixion this sabbath day fell on the seventh day of the week; it was therefore a double sabbath; and John says, "That sabbath-day was an high day." John 19: 31

16 represents the sixteenth day of the month. This was the second day of the feast of unleavened bread; and as the fifteenth day was a sabbath, the sixteenth day was "the morrow after the sabbath." From this day the Israelites were required to count seven weeks "Seven sabbaths shall be complete: even unto the morrow after the seventh shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat-offering unto the Lord." Lev. 23: 15, 16. This new-meat-offering was at the feast of harvest, afterwards called Pentecost, because it was the fiftieth day from the waving of the sheaf before the Lord, which was to be waved by the priest "on the morrow after the sabbath." Lev. 23: 11.

DIAGRAM NO. 3.



A marks the time when, in the beginning of the fourteenth day, the disciples said to Jesus, "Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?" Matth. 26: 17, Mark 14: 12, Luke 22: 7.

B shows when they made ready the Passover; that is, prepared for him to eat the Passover, when the legal time should come. Matth. 26: 19, Mark 14: 16, Luke 22: 13.

C indicates the Savior's coming in the evening and sitting down with the twelve to the supper—the institution of the ordinances of Feet-was ing, the Lord's supper, and the Communion—his discourse in the upper room, up to the singing of the hymn and going out at about half past 10 o'clock in the night. Matth. 26 : 20–30, Mark 14 : 17–26, John 13th, and 14th, chapters.

D, the discourse on the way from the guest-chamber to the garden of Gethsemane. John 15th, 16th and 17th chapters. They came to the garden about midnight.

E, from midnight to half past one o'clock A. M., is the time of our Savior's agony in the garden; at the close of which he was apprehended, and the time of his trial set in. Matth. 26 : 36–39, Luke 22 : 43–45.

F, from the apprehension of Christ until the close of his trial before Caiaphas. He was first taken to Annas; and during the trial before Caiaphas, Peter thrice denied his Lord. This trial ended about four o'clock A. M. Luke 22 : 50–62.

G, from the end of the trial before the high priest to the time Christ was brought to the judgment hall of Pilate, or from four o'clock A. M. till about sunrise. This includes our Savior's abuse by the soldiers, the council held "as soon as it was day," by the chief priests, scribes and elders of the people, and the binding and leading away to Pilate. At this time,—near sunsise,—"the Jew's themselves went not into the judgment-hall, lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the passover." John 18 : 28.

H, from the time Jesus was first brought before Pilate until he is delivered to be crucified. During this time, Pilate had examined him, and sent him to Herod, Herod heard him, and returned him to Pilate, and Pilate tried to release him. John 18 : 29—31, Luke 23 : 1—12, Matth. 27 : 24, 25.

It is here to be remembered that shortly before Pilate delivered Jesus to be crucified, he brought him forth "and sat down in the judgment seat, in a place that is called a Pavement, * * * And it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour." John 19 : 12—14. It was shown that the phrase, "about the sixth hour," referred to about half past seven o'clock A. M., and meant the sixth hour of his trial, commening with his apprehension in the garden. This time is indicated by the braces F, G and H.

I indicates the time between the close of the trial before Pilate and the crucifixion of Christ, which took place about the third hour, or 9 o'clock A. M. Mark 15 : 25.

J, from the ninth hour to the twelfth or from 9 o'clock A. M. till noon, indicates the time during which they set up the accusation over the Savior, divided his garments, crucified the two thieves, and so inhumanly mocked and challenged the Son of God—the King of Israel. Matth. 27: 35-44.

K, from the sixth hour to the ninth, or from noon till about 3 o'clock P. M. represents the darkness over all the land. Matth. 27 : 45, Mark 15 : 33, Luke 23 : 44.

L, shortly after the ninth hour, marks the time when the lamb was to be sacrificed at the temple, and when the Lamb of God, our Passover was sacrificed for us: "And behold the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom;—and the earth did quake and the rocks rent." Matth. 27 : 46—52.

M, the time from the death of Christ until he was buried. Matth. 27 : 57–61, Mark 15 : 42—47, Luke 23 : 50—55, John 19 : 38—42.

N, "And they (the women) returned, and prepared spices and ointments." This was just before the sabbath set in. Luke 23 : 56.

O, in the commencement of the 15th day, shows the time when the sepulchre was secured. Matth. 27 : 62-66.

P, in the end of the fifteenth day, marks the time when the women, "in the end of the sabbath," went "to see the sepulchre." Matth. 28 : 1.

Q, in the beginning of the sixteenth day, indicates the time when, the sabbath being past, the women "bought sweet spices," and completed the preparation for the anointing of the body of Jesus. Mark 16 : 1.

R marks the time when the women came early to the sepulchre to anoint the Lord, and found that he had risen from the dead. Mark 16 : 2. John 20 : 1.

With this illustration and recapitulation, we leave this part of our theme, with the confidence that every faithful, candid reader will admit that we have the truth on this controverted subject. Hereafter we intend to show that the Lord's supper—a full evening meal—was observed in apostolic times.

Another Invitation.

In addition to Martinsburg and Meyer's Mills, we have received an invitation from Warrior's Mark, in our own congregation. The brother who writes, says:

"This is the very place you called for. We have a meeting-house and no preacher; a good healthy place, and some members. We also expect a railroad and a good station here.—Why will not this place suit you? Please take us into consideration."

JAS. S. COX.

This amounts to about as much as an invitation to stay where we are, except that it would bring us close to our meeting-house. We shall certainly consider the appeals of our brethren, before making our final decision. But the fact of there being no minister there, is no inducement for us to go there. We expect to do our preaching through the Press, and therefore we would prefer a place where we would have no ministerial obligations devolving upon us. We had rather be free, so that we could give all our attention to one thing; nevertheless we are somewhat responsible for pastoral duty, and nowhere more so than at Warrior's Mark. We shall remember that part.

YELLOW CREEK	J. Miller. D. Snowberger.

The former officers were re-elected.

Nineteen propositions were laid before the meeting for consideration.—The following are all that we feel at liberty to publish.

1. A resolution to change the day of holding this meeting from Monday to Tuesday.

2. Having learned that some deacons are installed into office with the charge not to rise when they exhort, and others are told that they may rise, it was resolved that

We think all deacons should have the privilege to rise when it becomes their duty to speak, and we ask the Annual Meeting to so decide, or to give us a uniform practice to guide us in this matter.

3. Does the Annual Meeting of 1871, claim Salem College, of Bourbon, Indiana, to be under the auspices of the fraternity of our Brotherhood?

Ans. It does not regard it as a church school, or conducted by the general Brotherhood, though it is under the auspices of members of the Church, and is supported by those who patronize it, and not by donations from the church.

4. Has reference to a case where a minister had been expelled by a large majority of the church, afterwards reinstated by a committee of bishops, who had been privately called, in conjunction with a few members, against the will of the church.

5. Will this District Meeting approve of the following amendment to the plan of holding the Annual Meeting?

The Districts to send one delegate to represent them on the standing Committee, and each congregation send one represenative, and these to compose the Annual Meeting, and all queries to be decided by that body alone.

Ans. We approve of the amendment, and recommend it to the consideration of the Annual Meeting.

6 Resolved: that we solicit the District Meeting to petition the Annual Meeting to allow the several congregations to decide for themselves, which mode of feet-washing they will use.

Ans. This meeting agrees to forward the petition.

The above, except the first, are all referred to the Annual Meeting for confirmation or amendment, and for that reason we have thought it not improper to publish them. Those who will compose the Annual Meeting may exercise their minds upon the questions involved.

7. A request for the District Meeting from the Clover Creek congregation.

8. Another request for the next meeting from the Duncansville branch.

9. Another from the Lower Cumberland branch.

10. The Upper Codorus branch expressed a willingness to receive the next District Meeting, if there were no other applications.

11. It was moved and carried to hold our next meeting with the brethren in the Lower Cumberland branch.

10. An urgent appeal was made by Elder F. P. LŒHR, for ministerial aid in the state of Michigan, and requested the District to send a minister to assist him several months, in preaching and administering to the people. He thought the people of Michigan had some claim upon the Brethren of Pennsylvania, as many of them are their children or relatives.

After considerable discussion upon the propriety, expense, and advantage of such an effort, it was calculated that if each member in the District would contribute ten cents, it would more than pay the expenses of sending a brother to Michigan. And it was thereupon agreed by a large majority, to take up a dime collection for that purpose. All contributions for that purpose are to be sent to Elder Daniel Keller, Dickinson, Cumberland county, Pa.

13. Elder Daniel M. Holsinger was proposed as a proper person to be sent to Michigan, to which the meeting agreed, and he accepted the appointment.

14. Brethren Moses Miller and Samuel Longanecker, were elected delegates to the Annual Meeting, the former a member of the Standing Committee.

The attendance at the meeting was very good, by delegates and members. The provision for the accommodation and comfort of those in attendancewas abundant,and everything was well arranged. The brethren and sisters at McVeytown know how to care for the wants of their friends.

The meeting was one of more than ordinary interest, and had before it an unusual amount of business. It consisted of six sessions; two forenoon, two afteenoon, and two evening sessions. The last evening the meeting adjourned at about eight o'clock, for public preaching, and at about ten resumed business again, and continued until after eleven o'clock before it finally adjourned.

Announcements.

We are somewhat perplexed in the matter of publishing announcements. We desire to give satisfaction in this particular, and in certain cases we esteem it necessary to publish more than the simple statement of time and place. Among such are new congregations, or remote places. But in a general way, we think that the announcement of place and time is all that is necessary, and after this season we shall publish them in that way, giving the name of the congregation, county, and state, and day and hour. We request brethren to write their notices in that way. We will then set them up in small type and continue them until the time of holding the meetings.

After once publishing a lengthy notice for one, we feel somewhat under obligations to allow similar privileges to all, when we really see no necessity for it. The publication of a notice of a meeting is equivalent to a general invitation to all, and a special appeal for ministerial aid. Let this be remembered.

We also request the elders to see to it that their notices are sent in good time. It not unfrequently happens that matter is unavoidably crowded out, and when they are not sent in until the eleventh hour, they sometimes do not appear until the twelfth.

Quotas.

Since last reported, the following brethren and sisters have sent us subscribers, and thus filled their quotas in the call for one thousand new subscribers.

To help our friends along, we now offer to give the remainder of this year, from the time orders are received, to the end of the year, for seventy-five cents. This will greatly assist in inducing persons to subscribe.—They will receive one half the year, with the Report and Minutes of the Annual Meeting, all for seventy-five cents. This offer ought to bring us five hundred names by all means.—Who will make the first and greasest effort.

A communication from brother John Beaghly,, relative to half-fare privileges on western railroads, has been crowded out. No favors have yet been granted. His letter will appear in our next.

Several other items of interest were also crowded out. Will find room for all in our next.

Our Books.

This week we have added several new books to our list. They are all good books, and their perusal would be beneficial to all; but we especially recommend Life at Home, as being worthy of a reading by everybody.—It is full of wholesome instruction for every member of the family, and the best may profit by following its teachings. We desire to aid our patrons in supplying themselves with useful books, and any book desired, not in our catalogue, will be sent on receipt of publisher's retail price.

The Christian Harp is the best singing book for Sunday Schools, that we are acquainted with. With this book and the Bible, and a little time for preparation, we would engage to conduct a very interesting Sunday School. We keep them for sale by the single copy or by the dozen. See price list elsewhere.

Answers to Correspondents.

Daniel Smith. The tracts will cost about fifty cents a hundred; or three dollars and fifty cents a thousand. How many shall we print for you?

Eld. Philip Boyle. The place for holding the next Annual Meeting, is at the residence of John E. Merkey, in Berks Co., Pa. It is nine miles north of Myerstown station. Myerstown is on the Lebanon Valley Railroad, and is thirty-three miles east of Harrisburg, and twenty-one miles west of Reading. If you address Christian Royer, at Myerstown, Pa., or S. R. Zug, Mastersonville, Pa., you will receive attention. Brother Zug is one of the committee of arrangements.

George Myers. The money came to hand, and your name was all right, it was our oversight.

J. S. Flory. Right.

Daniel Crofford. $1.75 more, as fifty cents pays for your P. Y. to the close of Vol. 2. Shall we order it?

Harriet Gowen. The Postmaster at Frederick informs us that your Companion sent to that office, is "not called for." What is wrong?

Ephraim Brumbaugh. You have overpaid by forty cents.

George Renner The papers have been sent regularly.

J. B. Tawzer. All right.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Dear Brother Holsinger: I thought I would write a few lines to the Companion. We hear some brethren say they have more temptation than they can bear. But let us see if Christ did not suffer more than we do. To this I answer, true, it is so, and must be so; for had Christ been internally defiled, he had not been a fit mediator for you, nor could you have had any benefit, either by his temptation or suffering. But he being tempted and yet escaping the defilement of sin, has not only satisfied for the sins you may commit when tempted, but also got an experimental sense of the misery of your condition, which is in him; although now he is in glory as a Spring of pity and tender compassion to you. Remember, poor tempted Christians, the God of peace shall shortly tread Satan under thy feet. Rom. 16: 20. From the whole of Christ's humiliation in his life, learn to pass through all the troubles of your life with a contented, composed spirit, as Christ your forerunner did. He was persecuted and he bore it meekly; poor, and never murmured; tempted, and never yielded to the temptation; reviled, and reviled not again. When you therefore, pass through any of these trials, look to Jesus and consider him. See how he that passed through these things before you conducted himself in like circumstances; yea, not only beat the way by pattern and example for you, but has in every one of those conditions left a blessing for them that follow his steps.

But, reader, perhaps you are saying, "I fear I am absolutely and finally forsaken." Why so? Do you find the character of such a desertion upon your soul? Examine and tell whether you find a heart willing to forsake God. Is in indifferent to you, whether God ever returns again? Is there no mourning, melting, or thirsting after the Lord? Indeed if you forsake him, he will cast you off forever; but can you do so? Oh, no! Let him do what he will, I am resolved to wait for him, cleave to him, mourn after him; though I have no present comfort from him, no assurance of my interest in him, yet will I not exchange my poor, weak hopes for all the good in this world.

And now, let me persuade all the dear Son of God came from the blessed bosom of the Father, assumed flesh, and laid down his own life a ransom for their souls, for whom he lived, died, rose, ascended, and lives forever in heaven. Intercede to live wholly to Christ, as Christ lived and died for us. May the love of God rest upon us all. Amen.

Dear C. F. C.: Please let me communicate with some of the brethren, through your columns, as a great many read your pages. I hereby acknowledge the receipt of private letters from brethren S. Yoder, Thomas Bennett, and Ira E. Hopkins, in regard to Oregon, and their emigrating to Oregon; all of which I have duly answered, but have not heard from them. I would like to know whether they are coming. I expected to have heard them preach before ths time, but it seems it is my lot to wait awhile yet.—There are several of my neighbors that would like to hear the brethren preach also, and some of them I think could easily be persuaded to cast their lot with the Brethren.—The above brethren or any others, will relieve my anxities by informing me of their intentions, in regard to coming to this coast, as I am anxious to know whether my companion and I are to be deprived of the company of the brethren in this unfriendly world?

I also received a letter from bro. J. B. Allensworth, which I have not answered yet, but be patient, brother, I will answer you soon.

G. R. KISTLER.

Elk City, Oregon.

The California and Oregon Mission, Was it a success?

Our brethren of said mission, say it was; but although it was as successful as could be expected in so short a time, yet the expectations of the church, were not realized;—for it was expected that the brethren would stay a year. We do not wish to censure the brethren, as we do not know their reason for returning so soon. From their report, it was a success so far as they labored in their mission; for which the church no doubt feels glad and thankful to God, for his blessing upon the effort made by the Church. But we would say to our dear brethren, in the language of Paul, "Ye did run well, who has hindered you?" or why was the work left in such an unfinished condition? The intention of the Mission was to preach the Gospel, and to set things in order that were wanting; that is, organize churches where necessary, and appoint brethren to take care of, and feed the flock. The report gives us one hundred humble and faithful brethren and sisters in Oregon, without even one minister, Here seems to be a lack of setting things in order. It is said the church was not willing to go into an election; but the reason given in a private letter of their unwillingness to hold an election, was not sufficient reason to leave them in that condition; as it seems to have been, not a lack of love and union in the church, but a fear of the responsibility, which is not a rare thing among faithful, humble, unassuming brethren. We think if the brethren could have staid longer, they could have removed that objection; and, in fact, we think it was the duty of the members to submit to an election, considering their isolated condition, being such a great distance away from the general Brotherhood, and therefore cannot expect brethren to visit them often. It seems the brethren did not stay long enough to hold a communion with the members in Oregon, which we think belongs to the setting of the things in order that are wanting. It may be some of the members have been living there many years without attending to the ordinances of the Lord's house; and can it be possible that our heavenly Father has a hundred humble, faithful children in Oregon, who do not earnestly desire to participate in all the ordinances of the Gospel? And again, can it be that among such a number of faithful brethren, the Lord has not a Timothy or Titus, whom he wishes to have set apart by the church, to the work for which he has already appointed them? In short we deem it necessary that two brethren go to Oregon, to still farther the good work which our dear brethren have begun; and if such brethren could take their wives along as helpers in the gospel, it would be still better, provided they, as well as the brethren, be in the order of the church; and surely none other should be allowed to represent the Church abroad. In conclusion, we hope that some district meeting will again petition the Annual Meeting, to send a mission to Oregon and California.

DAVID FRANTZ.

Cerro Gordo, Ill.

"But and if ye suffer for righteousness, sake, happy are ye; and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled; but sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready always to give an answer to every manthat asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meakness and fear." 1 Peter 3: 14, 15.

Dear Brother: This is an imperative obligation, under which the Apostle Peter says, the brethren who were then, and still are, "scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia." We, as brethren in the same common tie, "through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth," are evidently under the same imperative obligation; and oh! how keenly do we often realize the responsibility of the position! But we thank the Lord, that with the bitter there is also a sweet; for, "if ye suffer for righteousness, sake, happy are ye; and be not afraid of their terror; neither be troubled;" for, "who is he that will harm you, if you be followers of that which is good?"

I am now about to relate an incident in the history of my own life and experience; and I most sincerely hope, that all who may read this article, will exercise charity, and not attribute it to a wrong motive. I heretofore, in a former Vol. of the Companion, gave some of the reminiscences in my early life, in a series of articles under the caption of "Spreading the Gospel—My Experience;" in which, as the readers will remember, I frankly confessed that I was not like the apostle Paul, "raised at the feet of Gamaliel, and instructed in the most perfect manner of the law;" but on the contrary, had received my early training according to Baptist theology of that day and time; and the consequence was, that I was very imperfectly trained, so far as the true principles of christianity are concerned. I, therefore was early impressed with the firm belief that war was right in the sight of God, and was perfectly compatable with religion; and although I found many passages in God's word which positively declared the contrary, yet, as I was taught to believe that Baptist preachers were inspired by the Holy Ghost to preach, I therefore believed them incapable of error. I have often heard it iterated and reiterated, that the mere act of going into "the army" in defence of the institutions of "Our country," was sufficient to insure eternal enjoyment.

When I was about 20 years of age, (1847) there was a call made in our country for volunteers to go to Mexico, to assist in subjugating that people, who were then at war with the United States. I, feeling it to be my duty, and believing it to be right, responded to the call of "My country;" and at once left the enjoyments of home and friends, and repaired to the scene of conflict, to assist my fellow countrymen in maintaining the honor and institutions of the United States.

It is not my purpose in this article to write a treatise on the geography of Mexico, or of the United States; neither do I intend to philosophize or speculate upon the vast difference in the climate natural to each; but only to bring one fact forcibly before the mind of the reader.

It is a fact which is well known to all who are familiar with the Geography of the United States, that East Tennessee has an altitude of about 5.000 feet above the level of the sea. Veracruz, in Mexico, is situated immediately on the beach of the "gulf of Mexico;" and is, therefore, probably more than 5,000 feet lower than the mountainous parts of East Tennessee. But this is not all; it is probably nearly 1,000 miles South; and consequently that much nearer the Equator, and correspondingly hotter. Imagine yourself, then, transport in the space of a few days, a distance of 2,000 miles, from the cool bracing air of the mountains of East Tennessee, to the low, hot, poisenous air of the sands of Mexico, and you are at once prepared to foresee the result.

The result of my thus going to Mexico was, the almost entire destruction of my physical constitution, and the loss of my health, which I have never regained. With such a poor constitution and ill health, I soon found that I was wholly unable to procure a comfortable support for myself and family, by manual labor; and being advised by my Physician to apply to the U. S. government for a pension, for services rendered in Mexico, I, acting upon such advice, applied, and was granted a pension; which I continued to draw for many years, until the breaking out of the late rebellion.

During the progress of the late war, communications with the United States government were entirely suspended, so that all Pensioners failed to receive their allowance.—But as soon as the war was over, we were again restored; and continued to draw until quite recently.

It is already known to many of the brethren, that, about two years ago, I suffered greatly from a serious attack of Heart disease, which my physicians say was the result of my old chronic disease, (Diarrhea,) and from which I have yet but partially recovered, so that I have not been able to do three months labor in two years; and only quite recently, to resume my ministerial labors. From this fact it will be very apparent to all, that at present I would be adjudged by any unprejudiced physician to be, if possible, far more justly entitled to a pension than ever heretofore.

Some few weeks ago there was an examiner appointed by the authorities at Washington, to come to our state and examine all those who were drawing a pension, in order to ascertain if there were any impositions upon the government. I in common with others, was accordingly notified to attend at Jonesboro, in order to pass an examination. I have a brother, Dr. G. W. Crosswhite, who is also a pensioner; and who is at present engaged in the practice of medicine, and also a minister in the Missionary Baptist church.

When I got to Jonesboro, I was introduced to the examiner as Dr. Crosswhite. Now, there is a marked resemblance between myself and brother; so much so, that our intimate acquaintances often mistake one for the other; hence the mistake. The examiner therefore asked me whether I was at present engaged in the practice of medicine. Being answered negatively, I at once corrected the mistake, by informing him that I was not Dr. Crosswhite. The gentleman who had thus introduced me, then corrected by announcing me as Parson Crosswhite. He then asked me if I was pretty successful in my calling, and added, that he guessed it paid pretty well. To which I replied, that I had never received a dollar in my life for preaching.

Shortly after this, my brother, Dr. Crosswhite came in, and received an introduction. The examiner then asked him the same question he had me—whether he was engaged in practice, and whether he had had any connection with the army during the war; to which he replied that he had been exempted as a minister of the gospel. The examiner, then remarked that it seemed to be "a family arrangement;" as we were brothers, and both preachers; to which brother replied that we did not both belong to the same denomination, he being a Baptist, and I a Tunker. "Tunker!" says the man, "what is that? I never heard of that church before, I believe." Brother then told him, that one of our peculiarties was, that we immersed persons three times, face forward; and that we were non combatants, and opposed to war; that probably he had heard of our being exempt from military duty during the war, for this cause.

He then turned to me, and asked me if I was opposed to war. Being answered in the affirmative, he then asked me for my reasons. Then remembering the language of the apostle Peter, which stands at the head of this article, "But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye; and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled; but sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready to give an answer to every man," &c. I therefore, in obedience to the injunction of the apostle, proceeded to give my reasons; citing many texts of Scripture to sustain me; and concluded by saying that Christ had commanded, that if we were smitten upon one cheek, we should turn the other.

When I had done speaking, he asked me if I was opposed to defending the institution of our country, even by force and arms. I answered that I had nothing to do with these things. He then asked me if I would not fight in self-defense; (and although I clearly foresaw what this conversation would result in.) I again cited the language of the blessed Master in his sermon upon the mount. Matth. 5: 6, 7. When I had thus replied, he threw himself back in a boisterous fit of laughter, remarking, "Now, ain't this a good joke? I tell you, gentleman, this thing of religion is all a farce." O shame! where is thy blush? Is it so, that a government professedly christian, has so far lost its self-respect and the duty it owes to its subject, as to appoint such men to responsible positions in its offices?—I confess, that, while I sit and chronicle these incidents, my heart is filled with sorrow for such depravity, and sympathy for its christian subjects who are doomed to suffer the evil consequences.

Well, the result of this interview was, that I am suspended, or in other words, cut off from drawing my pension; while scores of persons, who are comparatively stout, sound, able-bodied men, were retained. My brother, Dr. Crosswhite, is conceded by all to be a far more healthy man than myself; and yet he was retained as a pensioner. Every person—physician or citizen—who is at all acquainted with me, seems utterly astonished at the result of the examination; and all insist that I should renew my application, and offer me their support and cirtificates as evidences of my total disability and the justness of my claim.

I have evidently been reported to the department of the interier at Washington, as a person undeserving the support of the government on account of my non-combatant principles. I have had many "ups and downs," and many misfortunes in my life; so that with the patriarch Jacob I can truly say, that "few and evil have been the days of my pilgrimage;" but I do feel to bless the Lord from my heart, dear brethren and sisters, that we are accounted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake; and for the blessed consolation contained in his glorious promises, "that if we suffer with him we shall reign with him, and be glorified together with him;" but, "if we deny him, he will deny us." When I reflect on these things, and then look back over the early part of my life—how I was raised, and the erroneous impressions which were early implanted in my young, and confiding heart, by the various sects which were, and still are prevalent in all parts of the country, and who are so busily and zealously engaged in sowing the seeds of error, I am more abundantly made to to thank God, that I have been enabled, by his grace, to "find him of whom Moses and the Prophets did write"—"Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of God," and to be adopted into that family, whose members are heirs of that incorruptible inheritance, which is eternal in the heavens.

Being more desirous than ever heretofore, to form a more extensive personal acquaintance with the heirs of this glorious inheritance; and having been advised by my physician, as a means for the recovery of my health, to spend the coming summer in traveling in the north-western or northern states, as the surest means of a permanent cure; and not being in circumstances to do so at my own expense, I therefore take this method of placing my case in the hands of the brethren; and if they feel willing to assist me in visiting them, and spending two or three months in traveling among them, or wheresoever they suggest, they can signify the same by writing to me at Jonesborough, Tenn.

Should any brethren and sisters feel disposed to correspond with me upon this subject, or to remit me any means to enable me to perform the proposed visit against the 15th of June, at which time I will start if I raise the means. If I should fail to make the tour, I will promptly return, by mail or otherwise, every dollar thus sent me, they can address as follows:

ELD. JESSE CROSSWHITE.
Jonesborough, Tenn. Box 37.

Brother Henry: Our District Meeting for Western Pa, came off on the 1st inst. We had a very good attendance, and a very pleasant council. We had but few questions, and only one to be forwarded to the Annual Meeting. There was preaching in the neighborhood of the council meeting, from Thursday evening previous. Those meetings were well attended, and good attention given to the preaching of the word, and it is to be hoped that good will be the result.

I arrived at home on the evening of the 2nd inst, about 9 P. M., and found all well. Thank God for his preserving care and great mercy.

Fraternally yours. JOHN WISE.

Change of Address.

Brother Lemuel Hillery has changed his address from Marshalltown, Iowa, to New Sharon, Mahaska Co., Iowa.

Brother Henry; My address is Eaton Rapids, Eaton Co., Michigan; but you will please address Leander Mi bourn, at the above place. My health is poor, but I trust in the Lord, and hope it may improve;—but if not, I want so to live that I may meet my brethren and sisters, where parting will be known no more.

SARAH JANE MILBOURN.

Copies of the Minutes of Western District, of Pa., can be ordered from the clerk.

Brother Holsinger: Please correc the statement with regard to Salem College, concerning the amount paid to redeem it. The impression is there made that the Brethren paid $1500 to redeem it, but that is not exactly correct. I should have added an extra clause, that the town and vicinity raised the $1500 to pay the indebtedness, and $1000 to com plete it. Yours in Christ,

LOVEFEASTS.

We will hold a Communion Meeting in the Tenmile congregation, on the 20th and 21st of May, "if the Lord will." A hearty invitation to all. Brethren from the west will please stop with us; and inform me. I will meet them at Washington, at whatever time they say.

Fraternally. JOHN WISE.

We intend to hold a Lovefeast in Dunning's Creek church, Bedford Co, Pa., June 3rd, commencing at 4 o'clock P. M. Meeting next day.

By order of the church.

THOMAS S. HOLSINGER.

We have appointed our Communion Meeting on the 2nd and 3rd of June, at brother Henry Hohf's in the Upper Codorus congregation, seven miles south-east of Jefferson.

Brethren coming by railway will stop off at Jefferson station, on the Hanover Branch R R., where arrangements are made to convey them to place of worship, free of charge.—We extend a hearty invitation to all members, especially to the ministering brethren. JOSEPH E. BOWSER.

A Lovefeast near River Falls, ierce Co, Wisconsin, on the 17th and 18th of June, at brother Wm. H. Robys'.

Another at brother Joseph Brunk's, near Menomonie, Dunn Co, Wisconsin, on the 20th.

Another at brother Elias Hoover's near Rock Falls, on the 22nd.

To these lovefeasts we give a hearty invitation to all the brethren and sisters to be with us and especially the laboring brethren.

JOSEPH BRUNK.

The Brethren in the Thorn Ap ple branch, Mich., will hold a lovefeast, God willing, at the residence of brother Isaac Smith, on the 11th and 12th days of June, commencing at ten o'clock A. M. A general invitation is extended to all, especially the ministering brethren. Brethren coming from Northern Ind., will come to White Pigeon; thence to Grand Rapids; thence via. Grand River Valley R. The Great Remedy.

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Purifier or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and acts readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. Fahrney, No 30, North Dearborn St. Chicago, Illinois, or

To Nebraska, California, and Kansas, and the B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The "Burlington Route," as called, lies right in the path of the Star of Empire. It runs almost immediately in the center of the great westward movement of emigration. Crossing Illinois and Iowa, it strikes the Missouri river at three points.

These three points are the gateways into three great sections of the trans-Missouri region.

The Northern gate is Omaha, where the great Pacific road will take you to the land of gold and grapes, sunny mountains, and perpetual summer.

The middle gate is Plattsmouth, which opens upon the south half of Nebraska, south of the Platte river, a region unsurpassed on the continent for agriculture and grazing. Just here are the B. & M. Railroad lands, concerning which Geo. S. Harris, the land officer at Burlington, Iowa, can give you all information, and in the heart of them is Lincoln, the State Capital and present terminus of the road.

The Southern gate leads to Kansas, by connections with the St. Joe Road at Hamburg running direct to St. Joe and Kansas City

The trains of the Burlington run smoothlyq and safely, and make all connections. It runs the best of coaches, Pullman Palace and Pullman dining cars, and should you take the journey for the journey's sake alone, you will be repaid; or take it to find a home or a farm, and you cannot find either better than among the B. & M. lands, where you can buy on ten years' credit, and at a low price.

Christian Family Companion

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Father, Take my Hand.

The way is dark, my Father! Cloud on cloud
Is gathering quickly o'er my head, and loud
The thunders roar above me. See, I stand
Like one bewildered. Father, take my hand,
And through the gloom
Lead safely home
Thy child.

The day goes fast, my Father! and the night
Is drawing darkly down. My faithless sight
Sees ghostly visions. Fears, a spectral band
Encompass me. O, Father take my hand;
And from the night
Lead up to light
Thy child.

The way is long, my Father! and my soul
Longs for the rest and quiet of the goal;
While yet I journey through this weary land,
Keep me from wandering. Father, take my hand;
Quickly and straight
Lead to heaven's gate
Thy child.

The path is rough, my Father! many a thorn
Has pierced me; and my weary feet, all torn
And bleeding, mark the way. Yet Thy command
Bids me press forward. Father take my hand;
Then, safe and blest,
Lead up to rest
Thy child.

The throng is great, my Father! many a doubt
And fear, and danger compass me about,
And foes oppose me sore. I cannot stand,
Or go alone. O, Father, take my hand,
And through the throng
Lead safe along
Thy child.

The cross is heavy, Father! I have borne
It long, and still do bear it. Let my worn
And fainting spirit rise to that blest land
Where crowns are given. Father, take my hand,
And, reaching down,
Lead to the crown
Thy child

RESPONSE.

The way is dark, my child, but leads to light;
I would not always have thee walk by sight;
My dealing now thou canst not understand—
I meant it so; but I will take thy hand,
And through the gloom
Lead safely home
My child.

The day goes fast, my child! But is the night
Darker to me than day? In me is light!
Keep close to me, and every spectral band
Of fears shall vanish. I will take thy hand,
And through the night
Lead up to light
My child.

The way is long, my child! But it shall be
Not one step longer than is best for thee.
And thou shalt know, at last when thou shalt stand
Safe at the goal, how I did take thy hand,
And quick and straight
Lead to Heaven's gate
My child.

The path is rough, my child! but oh! how sweet
Will be the rest for weary pilgrim's feet,
When thou shalt reach the borders of that land
To which I lead thee, as I take thy hand,
And safe and blest
With me shall rest
My child.

The throng is great; my child! But at thy side
Thy Father walks: then be not terrified
For I am with thee, I will thy foes command
To let thee freely pass: will take thy hand,
And through the throng
Lead safe along
My child

The cross is heavy, child! Yet there was one
Who bore a heavier for thee; my Son,
My well beloved. For Him bear things and stand
With him at last; and from thy Father's hand
Thy cross laid down,
Receive a crown,
My child

Our Duty to the Poor.

Daily do we offer up prayers and petitions to the Almighty, to have mercy on the poor, the needy, the sick and the afflicted, but if we neglect doing our part, our prayers will not be answered. From this, none need reason, that the prayers of the poor will not be answered, since they cannot give. Have they not done their part? Have they not made it known unto them that are of the household of faith, through our periodicals, that they are in want? And could we all realize the feelings of gratitude that the needy and afflicted feel when they receive a gift of relief, we certainly would not withhold that, which we can so easily spare. When the impotent or lame man in the temple, received what Peter and John gave him he leaped, walked, and praised God. So it is to this day, when relief is given to the needy, and afflicted; they feel like going on and praising God. Their prayers being answered, they are caused to rejoice more than if they had heard the greatest sermon preached.

Now my dear brethren and sisters, let us consider well the circumstances of the poor and needy; were we to be in their condition. Is it not often the case when there is something to be done for the poor and needy, that many who are worth thousands of this world's goods, can scarcely be persuaded to give one dollar for their relief; and some who are worth less, can hardly give anything at all? Some persons are liberal, and very liberal, but often in the time of need, they are not all prepared to give.

"Give alms of thy substance; and when thou givest alms, let not thine eye be envious, neither turn thy face from any poor, and the face of God shall not be turned away from thee. If thou hast abundance give alms accordingly, if thou hast but a little, be not afraid to give according to that little." Tobit 4: 7, 8. Apocryphy.)

"For if there be first a willing mind it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." 2nd Cor. 8:12.

"The poor shall never cease out of the land; therefore I command thee saying, thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy in thy land." Deut 15: 11

"Ye have the poor always with you." Matth. 26: 11.

From these words we can plainly see that there were poor people in the time of Moses and in the time of Christ. And if we examine the word of God, we find that in all ages of the world, it was the will of God, that his people should administer to the wants of the poor. If there be any poor among the children of God, we that are blessed with abundance of this world's goods, shall not harden our hearts, nor shut our hand from them, but shall open wide our hand unto them. And "defend the poor and fatherless;" and "do justice to the afflicted and needy" Psalm 82: 3. Despise not the poor, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" James 2: 5. "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for their's is the kingdom of heaven." Matth. 5: 3.

If we love God we will keep his commands, worship him in spirit and in truth, and live by every word that proceedeth out of his mouth. If we live by every word we must not neglect the poor, for if we only obey in part we may as well forsake all, for he that transgresseth in one thing is guilty of all. "I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said: It is more blessed to give than to receive." Acts 20: 35. "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Gal. 6: 10. "But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him." 1 Jno. 3: 17. "He that giveth unto the poor shall not lack; but he that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse." Prov. 28: 27. "He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given will he pay him again." Prov. 19: 17. "And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones, a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward." Matth. 10: 42.

Now we will see the example of the apostolic churches on this subject. "For it hath pleased them of Macdonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints which are at Jerusalem." Rom. 15: 26. "Moreover, brethren, we do wit of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia: how that in a great trial of affliction the abundance of their joy, and their deep poverty, abound unto the riches of their liberality." 2 Cor. 8: 12. "Being enriched in every thing to all bountifulness which causeth through us thanksgiving to God. For the administration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints, but abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God: while by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God for your professed subjection unto the gospel of Christ, and for your liberal distribution unto them, and unto all men." 2 Cor. 9: 11-13. Let not the poor be neglected, but let their causes be judiciously attended to Answer to a Query on Page 159, Vol. 6.

"Will some brother please inform us what special marks the Apostle had allusion to in Gal. 6: 17? The Scripture reads: From henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus."

This is the query. Now in the first place let us consider what kind of marks the Lord Jesus bore in his body. We can not read that he put a special mark on himself, that he should be known from other men; or that he wore a special dress different from other men. But we can read that they spit in his face, and butted him; and others, smote him with the palms of their hands; and they stripped him and put on him a scarlet robe, and platted a crown of thorns and put it upon his head, and a reed in his right hand; and spit upon him, and took the reed and smote him on the head. By this time we may imagine what kind of wounds and marks he bore in his body.

Now we will try to compare the apostle Paul's case with the above. He says: "Are they ministers of Christ? I am more: in labors more abundant; in stripes above measure; in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods; once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep. In journeyings often; in perils of water; in perils of robbers; in perils of mine own countrymen; in perils by the heathen; in perils in the city; in perils in the wilderness; in perils in the sea; in perils among false brethren. In weariness and painfulness; in watchings often, in hunger and thirst; in fastings often; in colds and nakedness."

Now if we consider all the sufferings and persecutions that the apostle Paul went through, and all for Christ's sake, we need not wonder if he bore the same kind of marks in his body, produced by persecution, that Christ bore in his body, produced in a similar way. Hence I think it is proper for Paul to use the expression he did: "THE MARKS OF THE LORD JESUS."

What Manner of Child shall This Be?

A certain celebrated painter once saw a very beautiful little boy. He thought he had never seen a face of such perfect loveliness before. So much was he pleased with it, and so truly did it represent his ideal of all that was pure and holy, he determined to paint a picture of it, and call it "Innocency." After doing so, he wanted for a match picture a representation of vice.

But nowhere could he meet with what came up to his ideal of all that was hideous, malignant, devilish. Although he was constantly on the lookout, and visited hospitals, prisons and brothels for the purpose of securing his object, still years passed without avail. At last, when about ready to give up the search as useless, on visiting a prison he found a man, still young in years, yet under the sentence of the law for taking the life of his fellow-being. Here he had found the object of his search. In this yet almost beardless face was reflected a heart in which there was not a vice or passion but had its dwelling place. His model was complete. He was satisfied. But what was his consternation on learning that the original of both pictures was one and the same person!

Well may we ask ourselves, "What manner of child shall this be?" as the infant lies upon our lap, as the Sunday-school scholar takes its place in our class. God is faithful. His curse is "unto the third and the fourth generations of them that hate him," but his mercy is shown unto thousands of generations of them that love him and keep his commandments. What an inheritance!

Sabbath Schools and Social Meetings.

Dear brethren and sisters, I know that in writing upon these subjects, I shall cross the path of some of my old brethren, whom I love dearly; and what I say in this article I say out of a heart overflowing with love. I love the cause of my Master dearly, therefore I love to be engaged in doing whatsoever I find that he and his holy apostles were engaged in. "What," says one, "Christ and his apostles engaged in Sabbath-schools and social meetings!" I say emphatically, they were; and if I do not prove it by the word of God, I will yield the point.—We read Luke 14; 15, 16. "And he taught in their synagogue, being glorified of all. And he came to Nazareth where he had been brought up; and as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up and read." Now it appears this was immediately after his temptation, even before he commenced his public ministry; so it could not have reference to public preaching. Besides, it appears he went to Nazareth the place where he had been brought up, and his custom was there to attend Sabbath-school. In the German, synagogue is translated school. Therefore I contend he went into the Sabbath-school, and stood up and read, as his custom was; for it was in the school and on the Sabbath day; and according to the reading this was not the only time, but he was accustomed to it, or it was his custom. Now I candidly believe that Christ, from the time he was 12 years old when he entered upon his father's business, attended Sabbath-school. We find him even after he entered the public ministry, at different times, going into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and teaching. Thus I hope those who are still opposed to Sabbath-schools will consider these matters seriously; and will not be a stumbling block to others, who would carry on so good a work, and one upon which we have so plain scripture. My earnest prayer is, that I might be able to convince every brother and sister in the brotherhood that it is our indispensable duty to have Sabbath-school, where we can assemble with our children, and our neighbor's children, and sing and pray with them, and read the word of eternal truth to them and with them, and raise them as we are commanded to do—"In the nurture and admonition of the Lord." I would to God I might be instrumental in inducing the brethren, not only in our arm of the church, but in every arm, to have good and interesting Sabbath-schools, conducted solely by the church. In what way can we be more profitably engaged, than in teaching our dear children the word of eternal life? I verily believe that there may be more good done in Sabbath-schools than in public preaching; for in the Sabbath-school we teach the youths of our land, whose hearts have not yet got so hard; and in this way we keep them from running into every vice and folly. Then when they are old enough to understand preaching, the preached word will find well prepared hearts, where it may root down and spring up and bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of God.

But fearing my article will be two long, I will now leave this part with you, and take up my second proposition, viz. Social Meetings; and endeavor by the word of God to prove that such meetings existed in the apostles' time.—We read in Acts 1: 14, "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren." Now I fancy here was quite an interesting little prayer-meeting, or social meeting, if you please; for I verily believe that they were very social, and that any one had the liberty to pray or speak as he felt moved, either male or female; although it appears Peter, who it seems always was the boldest, stood up and began to expound the Scriptures to the rest.—Now brethren, I cannot see this in any other light, than that it was a social or prayer-meeting,—and one that lasted ten days, or from the ascension of our blessed Lord until Pentecost.

We will cite you to another case. After the angel had released Peter out of prison, (Acts 12: 12,) "And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying." Now what else was this than a social prayer-meeting? And we must believe that it was approved of by God; for no doubt they were praying for Peter's deliverance, and their prayers were answered. Also John 20: 19. Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut, where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst of them," &c. (26th verse) "And after eight days his disciples were with him, and Thomas was with them, Jesus again appeared to them." Now I would ask, what were these, if not social, weekly meetings? And it appears Jesus loved to be present at those meetings. Hoping I have done no harm, I close by invoking the blessing of God on all that has been said agreeably to his word, and will. A. B. MILLER.

Antioch, Ind.

The Tongue.

The tongue was designed by the Creator to express only holy and righteous thoughts, and thereby be a blessing to the race. But this, like many other good things, is wrongly used by many, and will prove a curse in the end. The following are some of the ways in which the tongue is wrongly used, even by many who are trying to be Christians:

First, By speaking vain and idle words.

"But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment; for by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Matth. 12: 36, 37. If all could realize this at all times, words would be much fewer and far better chosen.

Secondly, By foolish talking and jesting.—This is generally done when one feels cheerful; but Paul says this is not convenient, but rather giving of thanks. Eph. 5; 4. "Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms." James 5: 13.

Thirdly, By cursing others. Are any of those who are trying to be Christians guilty of cursing? James says, speaking of the tongue, therewith bless we God and therewith curse we men. James 3: 9. That the reader may more readily see how cursing is very often done, I will here give one of Mr. Webster's definitions of the word: "To bring great evil upon; to be the cause of serious harm or unhappiness; to vex, harass, or torment; to injure." In the light of this definition of the word, how many have been cursed by the tongue of the slanderer, the backbiter, and tale-bearer?

There are those who would not be guilty of raising a slanderous report against another, yet would not hesitate to utter and help to circulate one. The wise man says that he who does this is a fool. Prov. 10: 18. And David, in describing what kind of a character shall abide in the tabernacle, says, He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. Ps. 15: 3.

Another very common way of cursing is by speaking angry words, and fretting and scolding. Who can estimate the evil that originates from the tongue of the fretter and scolder? Thousands of families are made miserable and unhappy by irritating words. Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?

It is no small matter to curse others with the tongue. If we curse our fellow-creatures who are made in the image of God, and have God for their Father, we offend God and he cannot accept a blessing from us. Perhaps this is one reason why so many of our prayers are so weak and powerless, and do not seem to go any higher than our heads.

Says James, "The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. It is a fire, a world of iniquity, it defileth the whole body, it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison; but no man can tame it." James 3.

How then can it be managed? There is only one way, and that is to always keep it bridled. "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, . . this man's religion is vain." James 1: 36.

Every word should be considered before the tongue is allowed to utter it. "The heart of the wise teacheth his mouth, and addeth learning to his lips." Prov. 16: 23. "Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue, keepeth his soul from troubles." Prov. 21: 23. "He that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile." 1 Pet. 3: 10.

H. NICOLA.

GRACE to live from day to day an increasingly Christian life, without being inordinately anxious about the morrow; faith in Christ as the only and all-sufficient Savior for us; and more success in imitating the example of him who is Lord and Master, are, and must be, the great aim of every Christian: and if reached and realized, will prepare him equally for death and life.

end of life."

It seems mysterious that a king or any person could exist without parentage: neither did Melchisedec.—As regards father or mother, we are sure he had both, as other persons; but the question seems to be: who were they? or of what tribe did they spring? There is no record in the Bible as to who they were or of what tribe they sprang. This silence concerning them, accounts for his being without father or mother, "without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life:" that is, his birth would be the beginning of life; but it is not recorded in the Bible, hence, no "beginning of days." His death is not recorded in the Bible: hence, "no one of life."—But he whose descent is not counted from them received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises." "For he of whom these things are spoken pertainied to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the alter. For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood." This seems to me to account for the mystery of Melchisedec. The tribe from which he sprang is unknown, as there is no account of it given in the Bible; hence as there is nothing said of a priest arising from the tribe of Judah, and as our Lord sprang from that tribe, he is called "a priest after the order of Melchisedec." The whole mystery, if any there be, is in regard to not having any man at the altar to have his birth recorded, which would be the beginning of his days: and some one to record his death. This would make the matter very plain to all.—The above are my views.

The Folly of Procrastination.

We are not of the opinion that there is not enough said about the danger of procrastination; but should there not be more said to the sinner about the folly of his procrastinating the day of grace? That those who have not the love of Jesus in their hearts, nor ever have experienced a rest in him, are not easily convinced of the fearful as well as unhappy po-way to secure safety and happiness. When the sinner is convinced that outside of Christ he cannot even so much as secure his present happiness, he will "lay hold on salvation," about as quick as a man in the act of drowning will seize the rope thrown him from the shore. I like to hear those sermons that tend to convince the sinner of his insanity. In a spiritual light, the sinner is insane, or at least blind, or asleep in sin; or why would the apostle say, "awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead and Christ will give thee light?"—But in convincing the sinner, care should be taken that he be entirely awakened to a sense of the duty he owes to God; and that the light of the glorious Gospel may shine in his heart with such brilliancy, that he may never again lie down in sin, and sleep a sleep that is not unto life, but unto life, with prowling wolves and and roaring lions for his guardians. Not long ago I heard a minister speak with much force and with great earnestness to the unconverted, about their sleeping condition, and the danger and folly of closing their eyes to the great and glorious light of the Gospel, and sleeping away precious time in the service of Satan—in the service of one who offers death as their wages, and in fact can give nothing else; and yet the impressions soon, yea, very soon, will be forgotten by many.

Dear readers, you who are yet living in sin, contented with the wages thereof, let me entreat you with the apostle: "Arise from the dead, and Christ will give thee light." You cannot look upon the dead without you are made to tremble and shudder, but if they be dead in Christ, they are blest and you tormented. Why do you not come to Jesus when you connot be happy by staying away from him? "Heaven," you say, "is the place of the blest." So it is, and do you not wish to be blest? The blest are happy; but they had to secure their happiness. Then seek happiness where it can be found, in the arms of Jesus. You have sought and found a sinner's happiness; but it is little better than misery. Such happiniess vanisheth away when you look upon eternity, as in your by J. H. Moore.

On the sixth day from the beginning, Adam was created; he lived nine hundred and thirty years, and died one hundred and thirty-six years before the birth of Noah. Abraham was born only two years after the death of Noah; so that, from the birth of Adam to the death of Abraham, there were only one hundred and twenty-eight years in which one of these three did not live.

Methuselah was born two hundred and forty-three years before the death of Adam, and died the same year of the flood, at which time Shem was ninety-eight years old. Adam and Methuselah were contemporary 243 years; which was ample time for the former to impart to the latter his entire collection of knowledge. Shem had the pleasure of spending ninety-eight years of his life in the days of Methuselah, and hence had time to become well acquainted with Methuselah's vast stock of information, which he had received from the lips of Adam.

While Shem was wisely favored with the reception of knowledge from one who had seen the face of the first man, he also enjoyed the pleasure of imparting it to the world until Isaac was fifty years old; when, in a good old age, he died, only ten years before the birth of Jacob, twenty-five years before the death of Abraham, and ten years after the marriage of Isaac and Rebecca.

Shem was permitted to see and learn that which has long been the wonder of the early history of the world. He enjoyed ninety-eight years of Methuselah's life, saw the building and completion of the ark, was one of the eight who survived the mundane deluge and once more beheld the uninhabited earth; he saw the building of the tower of Babel, beheld its downfall, the confusion of language, and dispersion of mankind throughout all parts of the then known world; saw Nimrod lay the foundation of Babylon; beheld Europe, Asia, and Africa settled by the three races of mankind; beheld the time of Abraham's birth, the journey to Canaan, his marriage with Sarah, the birth of Ishmael, and of Isaac, saw the cities of the plains laid low, and was alive when Abraham offered his son Isaac. Such an eventful life in an early age, but few have lived. J. H. MOORE.

Remember thy Creator in thy Youth.

How important to remember our Creator when young. There are many reasons why we should attend to religion in our youthful days.—Many think they could not forsake the pleasures of this world and attend to religion. But ah! how much mistaken they are, if they think that we who are members of the body of Christ, have not fully as much and more real enjoyment than they who are outside of the church.

Then dear young friends, who have carelessly turned from the pleading voice of our Savior, who no doubt has called you time and again, pause, and consider how you are devoting your precious time that has been allotted to you to prepare for heaven. God may ere long cease striving with you. God says, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man." Perhaps he is striving now for the last time; and if you do not heed his warning, you may bound into endless eternity unprepared. You may not, perhaps, think or care much for religion when in health, until the wasting hand of affliction is laid upon, you and you almost feel the icy hand of Death grasp you. Your faltering tongue asks, "Can this be death?" Oh! how merciful then God is, to hear your pleading voice raised in prayer, perhaps for the first time your lips ever breathed a prayer since that dear mother taught you to pray, when you could first lisp the name of Jesus.—Then dear young sisters, we who have lately been initiated into the body of "Jesus Christ," let us be encouraged, and ever remember each other in our prayers; that God may throw around us the mantle of love, and extend his protecting arm over us, and not suffer one of us to become weary in our warfare. Though trouble and care shall be ours, and at times the heavens become rayless, and friends forsake us, we have the consolation that our Savior is near us, and ever ready to hear and answer our prayers; and we think we hear the sweet voices of unseen angels and we are comforted. Then if we are faithful to the end, though we very often come short of our duty,—if we do what we can, we know there is a fadeless crown reserved for us, and a happy home in heaven.

Afflictions.

"For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." 2 Cor. 4: 17.

Were it not for the above quotation, and the many comforts and consolations that the Christian receives through the Word of God, we would often sink beneath the rod of affliction. Knowing this by our own experience, we feel like talking upon this subject a little. While we live in this world of trouble, we meet with many afflictions of various kinds, but none so afflicting to the heart as that of death, which is often sent upon our dear family circles. Having been called upon to part with two of our very near and dear ones, but a short time ago, we feel that earth can give us nothing compared to that of a sister's love. Her seat is vacant, and none to fill it; and where shall we go to find that of a mother's sympathy—that dearest name of all names of earth? We know that we have had her last sympathies; and we shall no more hear her kind admonition, nor hear that loving voice that we could once hear around the family altar; but all is hushed in death. They have left an aching void the world is not able to fill. Yet we have this consolation of the apostle, to cheer us in all our afflictions, knowing that our "light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." They are but for a moment, compared with eternity. Then dear brethren and sisters, let us not be discouraged, though afflictions befall, and troubles and trials surround us; but let us remember the Psalmist David, when he says, "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." And again the Psalmist says, "Before I was afflicted, I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." Then let us perseveringly press on, forgetting those things that are behind, and press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus; knowing that we have no abiding city here, but that the time and place that now know us, will soon know us no more forever; but if we are found faithful, "we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." But not so with the ungodly and sinner. "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." Then unconverted reader, repent while it is called to-day. Seek salvation while it may be found, before the night of death comes, wherein no man can work. Remember the awful judgment. "It is appointed unto man once once to die; but after this the judgment;" and as death finds you, the judgment will receive you; then awful will be your doom if not prepared to meet a just God.—Then why will you still delay your return to God? Will you lose heaven for the sake of a few earthly enjoyments? Remember your eyes must soon close to earth and all its vanities; and then, no doubt, you would give worlds like this, had you them in your possession, for a home in heaven. Then seek Jesus while he may be found. Live the life of a Christian, that you may die the death of the righteous. Count all things but loss that you may win Christ; "knowing that our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

BE GENTLE.—Habitual gentleness is a safe-guard against outward annoyance. A mind calm and serene, beholds everything in the most favorable light, and like a smooth stream, reflects every object in its just proportion and fairest colors. A spirit always in agitation communicates something of its turbulence to those with whom it comes in contact, and is a disturbing element in whatever society it may be thrown.

Firm resolutions and practicable performance, belong to the Christian religion.

It is easier to keep out of difficulties than to get out of them.

Pasture.

"I am the door, by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture." John 10 : 9.

When God first formed man, he enclosed for him a garden: "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden; and there he put the man whom he had formed." Into this blessed inclosure our first parents were placed, surrounded by everything that could minister to their happiness; and to perfect their bliss, their Creator frequently visited them and held sweet converse with them. There, in this dear retreat, they found rich pasture. Everything was freely and abundantly provided for them.—They only had to dress the garden and to keep it.

But they sinned and were thrust out; into the bleak and barren world they were driven. Here they found no pasture. What a contrast between their situation now and what it was when they were inclosed in the garden of the Lord. There all was safety, peace and happiness. God was their friend, and with him they could have free and intimate communion; but now all this is lost, with God they could no longer have converse. They must go out into the world, and there, oh! there they must feel the power of their cruel deceiver! How terrible has been that power! To what a depth of degradation have they been reduced, under his sway!

One ray of hope alone is given them: one bright star is seen amid the almost impenetrable gloom: this star is the promise of a deliverer.

At length, God chooses a family; he takes them under his especial care and separates them from the rest of the world, and hedges them in.—Through this family he intends to bless all the nations of the world. It is his will to use them in the accomplishment of a great purpose, and this purpose they must accomplish, whether they will or not. No matter how rebellious, and stiff-necked they may be, God still works through them separate from the world, and brings about through their instrumentality the most glorious event the world ever beheld.

The first church formed amidst clouds and darkness, amid shakings and tremblings, was at last clothed with an effulgence of light, and gave birth to the promised seed. Glorious was her consummation. Glorious her final triumph.

This glorious Deliverer is ushered into the world amid strains of heavenly melody. Much labor he had to perform; much work awaited him.

The chosen flock of God, the church which had been instrumental in his incarnation, he found in a state of fearful carnality. They were almost wholly reduced to the letter, while the spirit had departed. To the lighting up of this people, he devotes his energies. The lost sheep of the house of Israel occupy his attention; for them he labors, with them he pleads. To them the words of our text are addressed. He announces himself to them as the true Shepherd. Other shepherds they had, and many of them had proven false. Ezekiel, in his thirty-fourth chapter, complains much of these false shepherds. In the fore part of the chapter from which our text is taken, Jesus labors to prove to his people that he is the true Shepherd. He that enters into the sheep-fold through the door, says he, is the shepherd of the sheep. Jesus had come in through the door: he had come in through the way the prophets had marked out, thereby proving himself the true shepherd.—Others who had claimed this honor, had not come in through this avenue—they could not, for the prophets had marked out the way but for one, consequently Jesus denounces them as thieves and robbers: they have come, says he, "but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy.

Jesus being the true Shepherd, the porter, the Father, or owner of the sheep,—opens to him. He delivers up the sheep to him. He must now be their leader, if they are led; for there is no other name given under heaven whereby men can be saved. And he calls his sheep by name and leads them out; and when he has put forth all his own, he goes before, and the sheep follow him, for they know his voice. He goes into the Jewish church and there he announces himself as the true shepherd; as many of that fold as are true sheep, at once recognize his voice and follow him out. He puts forth his own, goes before them, leading them into another fold.

But blessed Jesus! thou hast said, "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." To this other flock he sent his ambassadors; they went to and fro throughout the empire of darkness, inviting the poor, the down-trodden, the oppressed, and the heavy laden, to come to this dear fold. Ah! they had good news to tell them: that which they had lost in Adam will now be restored. Another inclosure is now prepared. Jesus has erected a place of refuge in the midst of the dark domain of sin. Here, right here in the world, he has prepared a resting place; and he has abundantly furnished it with all things needful for the nourishment and support of those within. This dear inclosure is also his chosen meeting place. Here, in this blessed pavilion, can the sons and daughters of Adam hold sweet converse again with the King of heaven.

But says Jesus, "I am the door." As Jesus has proven himself to be the true Shepherd, by coming in through the door that the prophets had appointed; so we must prove ourselves the true sheep, by coming in through him, or through his appointments. "He shall be saved;" ah! here is safety, blessed, blessed comfort! Our feet have at last reached a sure foundation. Formerly all was insecurity, care and anxiety; now all is safety, peace and happiness. We can now look forth from our dear shelter and smile at the storms of the world; its waves may dash against our rock, but they cannot reach our retreat. We now have found shelter in the rock that was cleft for us; and oh! here we have pasture too, sweet, refreshing pasture. We have gone in and found pasture.

But the empire of light, the kingdom of heaven, is established here.—The Son of God came into a world filled with rebel angels and rebel men. He came where the evil was; there he labored, and there, in the midst of darkness, his glorious light shone forth. He completed his part of the work here, and then went to the Father's throne to accomplish his mission there; leaving the completion of his work here to his church—his bride. As his spouse, the church should be deeply interested here. She should labor faithfully for her husband, and endeavor to gain much wealth for him. But she will need nourishment while she labors, as we have seen; this is abundantly provided for her in the inclosure. This is the center of light here, but from thence light must radiate in all directions.

She cannot stay all the while in this hear retreat; her Master sends her back into the world again from whence she came; but he sends her with a message of love to the famishing ones without. "Go," says he, "into all the world, and disciple all the nations."

Again he has said of his Church: "Ye are the light of the world;" and commands them to let their light shine before men, that they may see their good works, and glorify their Father who is in heaven.

To carry out his glorious plans, the children of light must mingle freely with the children of darkness. This, in the all-wise purpose of our adorable Master, is intended to result in the mutual benefit of both. The former must be developed and educated in this school, before she is qualified for the full enjoyment of her Beloved. It is necessary that she should fall into various temptations. These temptations she could only meet with in the world. Says the Apostle, "The trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." It is opposition that will bring out dormant energies. Ah! it were an easy matter to live religious in the bosom of the church, could we always sit under the sound of the Gospel trumpet—could we be always with our dear brethren and sisters in the celebrating of the ordinances of the house of God: then our faith would scarcely be tried. But we must scatter from thence; out into the world we must go; that is our field of labor; the former is our place of rest. As the body needs rest and labor for its perfect development, so does the soul; but as the rest would not be sweet and refreshing without Christ's presence, so our labor would not result either in the development of ourselves or in the advancement of his cause, did he not go with us out

First, then, we must yoke ourselves to him as a living sacrifice, yield ourselves completely up. We must come to him disrobed and emptied, wholly divested. Thus joined to him, and lost in him, we are prepared for anything that he commands. If he leads us in, we find pasture there; if he leads us out, we find pasture out.—Then can we realize the language of the confiding David: "Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies."

To be in the world, and not of the world, must be the situation of the children of God: to be in the world, and yet be dead, and their life be hid with Christ in God. Such an one may safely come in contact with all forms of sin, for it will excite no other emotion than that of pity. Thus protected and filled with love, he may, as did his Master, mingle with sinners, even with those who are the most abandoned, without fear of contamination. Then the example which these holy ones set before the world is beneficial indeed. By the holy ones, we mean those that are in truth begotten by God. We know that many who profess to be his, are yet carnal.

The Master has represented his flock as sheep among wolves, therefore says he, "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves." Wisdom and meekness combined, will insure safety to them in their dangerous situation: the one will teach them to know where to go, what to engage in, and how to engage in it; the other will enable them to bear patiently all the ill treatment they may receive. They will have to bear much abuse; their labors of love will be treated with contempt, and they receive evil in return for good. Sometimes the wolf will not have on his proper clothing; then he will be more dangerous But their foes are more powerful than they: to resist them with their own strength, would be sure destruction; therefore they are told to avenge not themselves. They are simply to perform their work, leaving results with their Master.

Jesus, being the great shepherd of the sheep, his chosen flock are always under his care. He leads them by his word and Spirit wherever he will have them go. Where he leads there they follow, and they always find pasture. They need not go where he does not lead; in all lawful callings, he leads. The husband, the wife, the parent, the child, the servant, the neighbor, the friend, all these may be led by him: he gives directions to all, if all labor faithfully in their proper spheres, there they will have pasture. The dear Shepherd has provided pasture for his sheep wherever he has commanded them to go.

Varied are the duties of this flock. Some are destined to labor in an humble sphere; others occupy a more conspicuous position. It matters not what labor we do, only so we do that which the Master has assigned to us. It matters not whether it be to do, or to suffer: we are not blessed for the kind of work we do, but for the manner in which we do it. None of us are great, nor can do any great things: our honor and greatness consists in our being in conjunction with Christ. The lower we sink in ourselves, the higher we rise in him. The humblest saint that trusts in him, is far greater than the most giant minded, that trusts in himself,

Blessed Jesus, thy promises are precious to those who have taken thy yoke upon them, and have learned from thee to be meek and lowly of heart! Thou hast said, "To him that overcomes I will give of the hidden manna." The overcomers shall feast upon this, no matter where they are whether here, or whether they have crossed the flood, this shall be their nourishment. This is their pasture and they constantly feed upon it—They have overcome the world, therefore they have no pasture there: it is dead to them and they are dead to it But in Christ, in Christ! they have life, in Christ they have nourishment, in Christ they have all; having him they have all, they want nothing more. They have already passed through death: the destruction of the body is but the releasing of them from their prison-house, and taking them to a nearer enjoyment of the altogether Lovely One.

The white stone will also be given them; they will not only be acquitted, but they will have given them the seal of their acquittal, which will enable them to look up with confidence and say, "Abba Father." That the bride of Christ may arouse herself from her slumbers, clothe herself with her beautiful garments, and come up with her united strength to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty, is the prayer of the writer.

Rejected communications or manuscript not used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Holsinger: We send you the petition of a dear sister, who was last year a subscriber of the C. F. C., but says she is not able now to pay for it; while she would love to read it. We will therefore set forth the facts of the case, and are willing that you shall be the judge, whether she shall be included among the number who get the paper free.

She is a sister who has neither father or brother to lend a helping hand, in administering to the wants of an old, sickly, helpless mother, and two sisters, neither or whom is healthy, and the younger of the two, is seriously afflicted, not able to render any service. While our sister is of that class, who are called poor, she is nevertheless rich in the faith. She uses no tobacco, nor anything else that is contrary to sound doctrine, and is a warm advocate for the truth taught and practiced by the Brethren. Besides all this, she seldom hears a sermon by the brethren, owing to her home being a distance from the places of meeting. These are positive facts in her case.

With all our heart we say, she shall be counted in the number for a free copy, and tender you our thanks for affording us the opportunity of doing good to so worthy a person. We are glad to know that our brethren and sisters feel themselves interested in supplying our worthy poor with healthful reading matter. And it must be borne in mind, that somebody must find the persons to receive our gifts, as well as to collect them.—Suppose we had a hundred copies of our paper to give away to persons who are industrious, and economical, and yet not able to pay for it. We could not think of that number of such persons in our acquaintance.—We would therefore be obliged to call upon others to name them for us, and in doing so, such persons would become joint partakers in the good work, with those who contributed the funds for the distribution. Those who have means will give up their means, and those who have none, may join in the work by carrying the contributions of others, to those for whom they are intended. Let us all be workers together for good, administering, to each other's necessities.

There will be a lovefeast on the 23d and 24th of September next, in the Stone meeting-house in Marshall county, Iowa. The reason we make this request so long before the time, is, we have been informed that some of our ministering brethren in the East, wish to travel through this part of our state, in September and October, and desire to attend some meetings; therefore we wish to have this published to give those brethren an opportunity to make their arrangements, as well as the brethren to make their appointments in rotation with ours.—Might commence in Linn county, thence to Benton, thence to Black Hawk, thence to Marshall, thence to Story, thence to Polk. Now if the brethren in those named counties, will make appointments to come in rotation with ours, we hope they will give notice in the Companion. I wish to say to our Eastern brethren, that I have confidence in our Iowa brethren, that they will convey them from place to place, by them giving notice of their coming. All things must have a beginning, therefore I have written what I have.

Contributions.

One idea I wish to present to the brethren and sisters in general. There have been several calls for assistance in building churches; but I do not think that any have been extensively helped. Now could there not be something done? I have thought it would be well if it were a general rule throughout the Brotherhood, when there is a call for help, to meet together and throw in from five to ten cents each—and you know some could do more than that, and never miss it. I think I could give ten cents if there were a call every month to build churches. And would not this do something in spreading the Gospel?

I have often thought the Brethren have the most common churches of any society; they work hard and do not dress costly, and what do they with their money? I think we ought to have enough and to spare. If I were at the Annual Meeting, I would rather hear this discussed than anything else at present. Now I want to hear the views of brethren and sisters on this subject.

Editor C. F. C.: Permit me to make a correction, inasmuch as some of our friends here feel grieved at what was published in Companion, March 6th, No. 10, concerning the closing of their house of worship, for the third appointment.

In justice to the United Brethren Church, I will now say, the mistake occurred through a misunderstanding between myself and some of the trustees of the house, in changing dates of meetings. J. M. WOLF.

Brother Henry: I feel like giving a little item of church news. According to previous arrangement the members of the Monticello branch, White county, Ind., met on the 15th day of April, in their meeting-house in a church capacity, for the purpose of choosing brethren to labor in the church, having Elders Isaac Ikenberry, David Wise, and Henry Metzger, to assist in the work. The meeting was opened in the usual order of singing and solemn prayer, for the guidance of God's Holy Spirit, to direct all to his glory; after which the first chapter of Acts was read and some appropriate instructions were given by brother Ikenberry. Every thing being ready, the lot was cast, and a choice made for speaker, and brother John Rife was taken.

The church being informed of their choice, the Elders again went to their desk to receive the vote for a visiting brother, when the lot fell on brother Wm. Rothrock. May the Lord grant grace and ability to the dear brethren to discharge their ry, and to the advancement of his little zion, in this part of his heritage. Having all confidence in the brethren, we hope they will trust and cast their care on him who said to one of old, "My grace is sufficient for you;" he is the same yet, full of tender compassion toward all that draw near to him.

The church here is in a tolerably healthy condition; the prospect good for some additions during the summer. One applicant for baptism next Sunday.

J. S. Snowberger.

Brother Holsinger: As Church news is solicited, I will inform you, that the brethren in this part of the country, have, at last, become fully aroused to a sense of their duty, with regard to organizing a Sabbath school. We have now a school organized in our new meeting-house, which promises well. The attendance this afternoon was large and orderly. The scheol was very appropriately addressed by brother J. B. Shoemaker. The address was well received by all present; the smaller scholars especially manifested a deep interest in what was spoken for their special benefit.

Whilst noticing this marked attention on the part of the little ones, I was more impressed than ever before, with the importance of establishing schools, especially adapted to giving instruction to the young. How much better to have their eager, listening minds taught something useful, than that which is hurtful or pernicious, as is so often the case with those who are left to seek their own company on the Sabbath day. And how can brethren and sisters be more perfectly engaged in the cause of their Master, than to call the children of a neighborhood away from the haunts which Satan has appointed for them, and gather them together into the capacity of a Sabbath-school, and teach them of that blessed Jesus, who has commanded little children to be brought unto him?

We hope that the Brotherhood Sunday-school Library, and Hymn Books supplied at an early day. It is the intention of the officers of the school to give a full report of the school through the Companion, if the space is granted.

Fraternally yours

The Evidence.

At our late District Meeting, during a discussion relating to the Deacons, brother J. S. Holsinger, and myself stated, that, according to a decision of A. M., it would not be inconsistent for such to rise upon their feet and exhort; but when reference was had to the "Brethren's Encyclopedia", this decision could not be found. Remembering very well that such decision was made in my presence, I referred to the original Minutes, when I returned home, and found it; and for the satisfaction of thote who were present at said meeting, and all others whom it may concern, I here transcribe the 35th Article of the Minutes of 1858, which will show that we were correct.

"How is it considered when ministering brethren have preached at meeting, and visiting brethren rise to their feet to bear testimony? Or, which is the proper order for deacons, to rise or keep their seats in exhorting? Considered, that it is not advisable, when two or three ministering brethren have preached, for deacons to rise and speak. But if there is but one speaker, or if there is none present, it is not inconsistent with the order of the Brethren for a deacon to rise and exhort."

When the publication of the "Brethren's Encyclopedia," was announced, congratulated ourselves that it would be very convenient for reference, but we were miserably disappointed, as many of the decisions of the A. M. are not found therein.

Brother Holsinger: We are away out here on the frontier, where we cannot, at the present at least, have word of God in its purity. I do not know of any brethren living nearer than 35 miles; but I think there are, possibly within a few miles, as I have indirectly heard that there were brethren living in our county. We have only lived in this wild country a few weeks; and have not yet got much acquainted.

There is yet a good chance here for chea farms. Some pretty good land is not yet taken up. I think, considering water, timber, soil, and climate, this is a pretty good country.

My wife and I, would be very happy to have brethren intending to settle in the far west to call and see us; especially ministers; and I hope they may suit themselves here.

Brother Henry: A few words of correspondence.

The ark of the Lord is still moving along, and a few are entering in to be saved, while others are moving in from other districts. This church numbers as near as I know, about 100 members; and yet there is room for many more. May the Lord add to the church daily such as shall be saved.

For the information of J. Fisher, I give the names of several brethren that can be addressed at Falls City, Richardson Co., Neb.: Daniel Fry, Isaac Fry, Jacob Royer, M. W. Miller, L. Nedrow, and Brother Henry: I wish to say through the C. F. C. to our many dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, which we left in the Old Coventry church, that we took the cars at Pottstown, Pa., April 17th, for the West, and had a pleasant trip. We arrived safe at Buckeye, Ill., on the 19th; and were met by kind friends. We feel very thankful for our heavenly Father's protection and kind care over us thus far.

As the yearly meeting appointed me a year ago to superintend making arrangements for half fare, from Pittsburg west, I would just say, that I have tried to do so, & I have not been successful in getting much done. I went to see the Gen Ticket Agent, for the T. W. W. R. R., at Springfield, and he said they would not grant my request this year; for they would not give any tickets for half fare to any meetings except in this state. The agent for the C. I. R. R., says the same.

I wrote to Henry Davy. He said he was in Columbus twice, and could do nothing. He said he would go to Columbus again, and telegraph to the agent at Pittsburg and see if he will do anything; and that if he cannot do anything, he will go to A. M., and stop in Pittsburg and try again.

John Ebersole wrote that he would see to the Cincinnati, Dayton and Sandusky R. R. As he has not yet reported, I will say to him and H. Davy: If you make any arrangements publish in our periodicals without reporting to me.

I have done the best I could so far; and will try to accomplish more in the future, and let you know how I succeed. JOHN BERKLEY.

Information.

An appeal has been made, coming from Edgar county, Ill., to use all my influence, that they, as members of the church, residing in said county and vicinity, may be supplied with a brother in the ministry. At present they number thirteen souls. This spring a year, six in number, but now by immigration their number has been swelled to the figure above stated. Others have immigrated to the same place, chiefly from Dauphin, Lebanon, and Lancaster counties Pa. They make a strong appeal to be recognized by the Brotherhood in the line of a preacher, to live among them, speaking both languages, English and German, if possible; but if only one language, English preferred. It seems to me the brethren in Illinois and Indiana, who are the nearest to Edgar county, should be concerned about the welfare of the little flock of sheep now calling for a shepherd to deal out to them the gospel bread, which is so highly necessary to live and grow thereby, especially in a strange country. It is now two years since some have been living there, and were only once fed by the word which was not adulterated, during all that time! Is it not almost a starving trial, for such who were used to have the word every two weeks or oftener, and now in a strange country once in two years? It is indeed a matter which should not escape the notice of the Elders adjoining the members in want. If no brother can be prevailed upon to move there and dwell among them, there are some other ways yet in store to supply their wants. I will not prescribe any, but leave the matter over to the adjacent Elders for their serious consideration, to dispose of, as the wisdom from on high may direct; but from all appearance, if proper means are made use of, the cause of our Lord Jesus may be advanced greatly in your immediate midst, and by neglect of duty a great sacrifice may be made. If I were living in Ind., or Ill., my conscience would bind me to co-operate in the work; but I live in Dauphin county, Pa., too distant for the purpose. Hoping this admonition may aid my beloved brethren nearer the field.

In the vicinity of Paris and Vermillion, the most of them may be found and addressed. If any would like to open a correspondence with them, address, Philip Sider, Paris, Ill, or George Hess, Vermilion, Ill.

Yours in the bonds of love.

ELD. WM. HERTZLER.

Elizabethtown, Pa.

Brother Quinter visited us on the third of March: Commenced meeting in the evening, and continued day after day until he had preached thirteen sermons. The church was very much revived; and since the commencement of the meeting 12 young women have been added to the family of God, by Christian baptism, and two married persons also. We certainly think if the church could only appreciate the value of protracted efforts, we would have more such meetings in our fraternity.

Brother Quinter's labors were well received among us here. He spoke with power; showing at once to his hearers that his whole soul was in the work. This is the kind of labor we need. Too many of us preach as though we were not in earnest.—If we could all be "sons of thunder," much more good might be done.

DANIEL SMITH M. D.

Hagerstown, Ind.

Report of the Meeting of the Western District of Pa.

Our District Meeting is past.—These meetings, if we can judge properly from such circumstances as representation, good feeling, unity of sentiment in general, interest in discussion, more for the sake of instructing and edifying the general audience, than to gain favorite points, are certainly growing in interest and usefulness, showing that they are expedients in the church, valuable in furthering the interests of our Holy Christianity, in cheering, edifying and instructing the pilgrim on his road to Zion.

Judging from the representation, this meeting was certainly a success; all the churches embraced in the district, but two, were represented, either by delegate or by letter. The representation by delegates was as full as any former meeting but one, and would certainly have been greater had not the Lord in his wisdom "cut off" the "purposes" of one of our dear brethren in visiting on him a most severe affliction. He surely has the sympathy of every soul, and the united prayers of the church ascend to a throne of grace, in his behalf. The writer can truly say, from past experience, that it is a sore affliction. To the good feeling every one that was present can testify, and we hesitate not in saying, that the report, of the delegates and guests at home will substantiate our assertion, and relieve us from the stigma of enthusiasm, which otherwise might be accorded to us by the absent.

As to unity of sentiment, there was certainly as much of this element as at any former meeting of this kind, at which we had the privilege to be present. It is true, the home Mission question elicited considerable discussion, in which a great deal of ability was displayed, but there was certainly a unity of sentiment with regard to the necessity of a stronger and more extended effort in the work of evangelism, and we have reason to believe that none went away, whose disappointment in this question justified his fears, and O! may we all realize, during the year on which we now have entered, that our fondest hopes in this work will not be made ashamed! Brethren, lay this subject fairly before your several charges, and we have no fear of the result. If you hear that your ministers have calls to which they do not respond, visit them, investigate the case examine, deliberate, weigh and consider, act, enable your ministry to do their duty. They will do it, but don't forget to pray "the Lord of the harvest." The harvest is ripe, the season favorable, work, work, ALL WORK. Make a great effort, a united effort. O DON'T, let your hands hang down until the harvest season is past, summer ended, and we are not saved.—Ministers, don't wait to first count the money, but count the cost. The price is that of precious souls, the cost, the blood of Christ, your sacrifice, your own body; don't wait for more pleasant accommodations, the train is moving, soon we shall hear the signals at the several stations, and along the line. The music of the pilgrims, the exhortations and invitations of the servants, the prayers of the saints, even the songs of the redeemed to the King of saints.

A great amount of ministerial labor was performed at the place of meeting, and in the surrounding country, for which we thank the ministry indeed most cordially. The churches of other denominations were offered freely, the voice in this country is, "come and preach for us," brethren, do you hear the call? "come over into Macedonia and help us." more might, perhaps, have been done on this occasion, by a better organized effort. For this seeming delinquency we feel to blame no one; we think we understand human nature to a high degree, and therefore feel charitably disposed; but we should try not to allow our modesty or timidity to overbalance our judgment. Let our past experience be our teacher for the future.

Fraternally.

Jos. HOLSOPPLE.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, I cannot refrain from expressing my approval of the suggestions and proposition of brother F. P. Loehr in No. 15 of Companion relative to the tobacco question. As brother L. well remarks "we must not push the matter too vehemently." The disciples of Jesus remembered upon a certain occasion that it was written, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up" (John 2: 17.) So we shall remember there is danger in being over zealous in any cause were we to push the matter of religion upon the mind of the sinner in an improper or too hasty a manner the very object—his conversion—thwarted. Religion after the order and stamp of Christ is like "leaven" it must work its way lawfully until the whole lump is leavened. We have no faith in this forced religion. Coercion is a term foreign to the Gospel, so far as relates to the acceptance of the principles thereof. The church is divinely invested with power to cut off dead or fruitless branches, but has she the right or ability to force a tree to live or bear good fruit? Moral and religious suasion is the safe ground we think to occupy. Let us then brethren and sisters be content to work and wait, use every lawful means to work out by a gradual process those practices that seem to many of us so inconsistent to true and genuine christian principles, and by no means let us despise those that can not just yet see these things in the light we do. Patient work and earnest prayer will and must accomplish the desired end; viz. to bring about such a reformation that the intemperate or unnecessary use of tobacco will be consigned a place beneath holy christianity. To the brethren and sisters enlisted in the cause, let me say, let us be consistent in the prosecution of the work before us, "be wise as serpents and harmless as doves." By no means should we as yet, if ever, make the habit of using tobacco a test of church fellowship. We must deal with facts as they exist to-day, what will be our duty in the future, time will tell. And to all the dear brethren and sisters that are not altogether with us in this question we would say, bear with us in the Spirit of christian forbearance. If you can't be with us, don't be against us, in open opposition unless you are certain we are wrong and our labors tend to evil. We are laboring, I do hope, only for the good of the church. We have a deep interest in the welfare of your sons and daughters as well as those of our own and the rising generation in general.

To the solemn appeal made by brother Loehr that we all fast and pray that God would emancipate the church from the intemperance of tobacco, and all other forms of intemperance, and give it into the heart of his people, to apply the means thus saved to more noble purposes," our hearty responce is Amen! Amen! And now, dearly beloved soldiers, let us deny ourselves—flee to the closet, and down upon our knees, plead with God in secret, that we may be rewarded openly, in this that we may hear of, and see hundreds, yea thousands, that are free! free! forever free! from the tyrants grasp.

J. S. FLORY.

My dear Brother: This is to show you that we have a very poor brother in the church, who likes to read the COMPANION, and is not able to pay for it. He is old and must depend on the charity of the good people. His wife, (a Sister,) has been perfectly helpless for more than seven years; a daughter insane and a son subject to very many spasms. Now if you would feel kind enough to send him the paper free, I would feel very much pleased. I told him your proposition, and he said that I should ask you to send him the paper. Perhaps if some brother or sister that is able, would know this poor brother's circumstances, they would willingly pay for it. But send it at all events; for Jesus said, "The poor ye have always," and we believe that it is for a wise purpose. Yours in Christ.

In the Chamber of Suffering

Speechless, debilitated, with "silver cord" weakened, "the golden bowl" breaking, and "the strong men bowing themselves," I will try to gather my energies and scrawl a few lines to many correspondents who still solicit contributions from my pen.

My only capacity at present to serve my Master, is to hold still in the furnace of affliction, and glory in tribulation. Writing for the Press is out of the question. Mind and body need rest—a long rest, perhaps the rest of the grave.

This is Ascension-day. Eighteen hundred and thirty-eight years have elapsed since Emmanuel rose from Olivet to the right hand of the Majesty in the Heavens. He is to-day making intercession for us—praying that our faith fail not, presenting his blood as the ground of our hope and the channel of our peace. In His death he paid our debt. In his resurrection "He was declared to be the Son of God with power, by the Spirit of Holiness"—showing that our last and greatest enemy is no match for him. In his ascension we have the evidence that God is fully satisfied with the atonement his Son made for a condemned race. And if God is satisfied, we ought to be. If Christ's merit is sufficient to set Divine Justice at rest, it ought to be sufficient to set the vilest sinner's conscience at rest. True faith in such a Savior, will bring peace into any guilt-burdened soul. But if Jesus had not ascended to heaven, we would have no Advocate with the Father: He would have died in vain. This is a great and glorious anniversary, which we may well celebrate with praise and thanksgiving. On this memorable day our Great High Priest was welcomed back to Glory by the Father, amid the acclamation of Angels. May we be dead with him, risen with him, seeking those things which are above, so that "when Christ who is our life shall appear, we may also appear with him in glory."

Announcements

The brethren of the Monticello church, White county, Ind., purpose holding a Lovefeast on the 8th of June, commencing at 2 o'clock P. M. Meeting on the ninth. A cordial invitation is given to all, especially to ministering brethren. Monticello is the railroad station.

J. S. SNOWBERGER.

The Brethren in the Spring Creek branch, expect to hold their Communion meeting at brother John Schriver's, on the second day of June. All, and especially ministering brethren, are invited to attend. The meeting will commence at 10 o'clock. Place of meeting 8 miles south of Pierceton. Conveyance at Pierceton, day before meeting.

E. UMBAUGH.

We, the Brethren of the Middle Creek branch, the Lord willing, intend holding our Lovefeast on the third and fourth of June, at the residence of brother Pfoutz, in Mahaska Co., Iowa. We extend the usual invitation.

We hope traveling brethren will remember us: and we would say to brethren who desire to come West to find a home, pay us a visit, and you will not regret it. If a minister, you will not only find as good a portion of country as there is in the west, but will find a great field to labor in; and by proper living much good can be accomplished; for the people seem anxious to hear and know what the will of the Lord is, concerning them. And we think that we can say that the church is in a prospering condition.

Signed in behalf of the Church.

LEMUEL HILLERY.

On the seventh and eighth of June, the brethren will hold a Lovefeast at brother John Y. Snavely's, ten mile north-west of Hudson Station, on Ill's Central R. R., at which place stop off, where conveyance will be in readiness to accomodate all who come. A hearty invitation to all, and especially ministering brethren to attend.

T. D. Lyon.

There will be a Communion meeting in the Berlin Church, somerset Co. Pa. on the sixth of June: commencing at ten o'clock.

The usual invitation is given.

E. COBLE.

A Lovefeast in the Panther creek Church, Dallas Co. Iowa, on 10&11 of June.

We extend an invitation to the brethren and sisters to be with us.

Fraternally yours.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Quemahoning branch, Somerset county, Pa., April the 28th, sister FANNY SCHROCK; aged 89 years, 3 months, and 13 days. She had 9 children, and as near as I could ascertain, 53 grand children, 88 great grand children, and 4 great great grand children. All her children are members of the church, and two of her sons, and one son-in-law, are ministers. She lived in widowhood for 24 years. Some years before her departure, she had apparently set her house in order, and was anxiously waiting for the time when her soul was permitted to leave its tenement of clay. Funeral occasion improved by elder Tobias Blough, and the writer.

In the same branch, May the 6th, FRANKLIN, Son of brother Christian and sister Margaret GNAGY; aged 1 year, 2 months, and 1 day. Funeral occasion improved by brother Jacob Spicher and the writer.

Valentine Blough.

Of Typhoid fever, near Brooklyn, Iowa, CHLOE ALLETTA DIEHL, daughter of brother Abraham and sister Caroline Diehl; aged 15 years, 4 months, and 6 days. The deceased was an interesting young woman, and much respected by all who knew her.—She leaves many sorrowing friends to mourn her loss, which we hope is her eternal gain. She lingered several weeks with the disease. Funeral services by brethren Wm. Palmer, Thomas Graham, and the writer, to a large and attentive congregation.

Visitor please copy.

J. S. Snyder.

Sister LUCRETIA WAMPLER, wife of Daniel Wampler, and daughter of Eli and Fanny Witzel, Feb. 18th; aged 23 years, 4 months, and 21 days. The deceased lived at Meyers Mills; and went to her father's on a visit; (a distance of 14 miles.) where she was taken with an attack of Typhoid fever. She suffered about 8 weeks, when she died in the triumphs of faith. She leaves her husband and three children to mourn their loss, but not as those that have no hope—

Funeral services by brethren Jacob M. Thomas and Jacob Beeghly, from Heb. 9 : 27.

Jacob Beeghly.

Near Covington, Miami county, Ohio, January the 17th, brother DANIEL FOREMAN, formerly of Somerset county, Pa ; aged 80 years, 8 months, and 22 days. Funeral discourse by elder Risser, and Samuel Murray. Proverbs 14 : 32.

Isaac L. Eshleman.

Near Blain, Perry county, Pa., April 29th, NANCY TROSTLE, wife of brother Adrew Trostle ; aged 55 years, 11 month, and 22 days. Funeral attended by Mr. Secrist, Lutheran, and the brethren.

Christ Myers.

In Spring Creek branch, April 27th, sister CATHARINE WORKMAN, wife of Elder Levi Workman ; aged 59 years, 7 months, and 20 days. About 5 weeks before her departure, her youngest son left home, to spend some time in Iowa with his brother N. C. Workman, who is a minister of the Church of Christ. Our sister also longed to go and see her children in Iowa, and had been making arrangements for the journey, saying that if she did not soon go, she should not remain long in this world. Funeral service from Rev. 14 : 13, by brethren David Younce and George Cripe.

E. Umbaugh.

In the Yellow Creek congregation, May 6th, FANNIE SOLENBERGER, daughter of brother John and sister Catharine Solenberger ; aged 5 years, and 10 days. The funeral occasion was improved by the brethren, from Heb. 13 : 14.

S. A. Moore.

At his residence in the Sandy Creek congregation, Md. April 21st, brother HENRY FURNEY ; aged 63 years, 1 month, & 1 day. The deceased was a member of the Church a number of years, and for some time a deacon in the church. He was a humble Christian, and adorned his profession of the Savior, loved and respected by all that knew him. Funeral services by the writer, from Rev. 14 : 13.

Visitor please copy.

John L. Work.

In the Missisinnewa branch, Indiana, [time not given] brother JOSEPH SNIDER ; aged 70 years, 5 months, and 15 days. Funeral discourse by Elders G. W. Studebaker and Samuel Rarick, from Phil. 1 : 2.

Visitor please copy.

In Champaign county, Ill., Jan. 15th, JUDSON FRANCIS, son of brother James and sister CULLEN ; aged 1 year, 3 months, and 15 days. Funeral services by the writer, from Matth. 18 ; 14.

John H. Moore.

In Black Swamp congregation, Sandusky county, Ohio, infant daughter of friend Aaron and Mary MOWERY ; aged 5 days.—Funeral discourse from Matth. 18 : 1—6, by brother Noah Henricks. We hope it will receive the infant's reward, and be forever blest.

The Great Remedy.

[illegible] are positive against anything [illegible] Dr. Fahrney's Blood Purifier & Tonic was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever. From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and will cordially recommend it wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. To Nebraska, California, and Kansas, and the B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The "Burlington Route," as called, lies right in the path of the Star of Empire. It runs almost immediately in the center of the great westward movement of emigration. Crossing Illinois and Iowa, it strikes the Missouri river at three points.

Each of these points are the gateways into three great sections of the trans-Missouri region.

The Northern gate is Omaha, where the great Pacific road will take you to the land of gold and grapes, sunny mountains, and perpetual summer.

The middle gate is Plattsmouth, which opens upon the south half of Nebraska, south of the Platte river, a region unsurpassed on the continent for agriculture and grazing. Just here are the B. & M. Railroad lands, concerning which Geo. S. Harris, the land officer at Burlington, Iowa, can give you all information, and in the heart of them is Lincoln, the State Capital and present terminus of the road.

The Southern gate leads to Kansas, by connections with the St. Joe Road at Hamburg running direct to St. Joe and Kansas City

The trains of the Burlington run smoothly and safely, and make all connections. It runs the best of coaches, Pullman Palace and Pullman dining cars, and should you take the journey for the journey's sake alone, you will be repaid; or take it to find a home or a farm, and you cannot find either better than among the B. & M. lands, where you can buy on ten years' credit, and at a low price.

Beers' Expanding Scroll Water-wheel.

[Patented 1868.] This wheel is now running with the overshot, in a Flouring Mill, and is using less water than the overshot. Inventor being a Millwright, and having seen and used all the new waterwheels, does not hesitate to say it is the first iron wheel that can compete with the overshot, and is one half cheaper, simpler and better. THE
Christian Family Companion

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

God's Design in Requiring Beneficence.

God is not dependent on us for the support of his poor. He could have so diffused the gifts of his providence, as to have had no poor; or he could so have fitted our frames to the world, and the world to them, that all the elements of human life and comfort would have been as abundant and free as air and water, so that, like the lillies of the field, the whole human race might meet every want without toil; and he might have published his gospel to every creature without our aid. He might have made his angels, in another sense, "ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to the heirs of salvation;" Or he might have written out the whole on the face of the heavens, and made them in a higher sense declare the glory of God, and made it in a higher sense true, that "their line is gone out through all the earth." He does not ask us to do this work or that, because of any dependence on us. He says, "Every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. If I were hungry I would not tell thee, for the world is mine and the fulness thereof." Whatever necessity there is of our agency, he puophsely laid in the present arrangement of things, for our good. His benevolence could have reached its object without our concurrence, if it had not made us also its object, and formed the design of blessing us in its course by enlisting us as co-workers. He knew that it was "more blessed to give than to receive" and when he put in motion the broad mechanism of his mercy, he put upon it laws of action and reactions, and made the work of heavenly charity, in all its branches, twice blessed: blessing him that gives and him that takes. He laid on us a necessity of cultivating benevolent affections. If we could so arrange one's circumstances, and throw around him such influences, as to keep him habitually and constantly giving to the poor; if we could attach to him dependent relatives, or in some other way bring to act upon him a constant succession of calls that he would not resist, we should bring him under the best means of cultivating a benevolent disposition; and this is what God does with us, in laying on us this necessity of giving alms. The fact that he could have published the gospel and fed his poor without us, while he could not, without our concurrence in giving, secure to us the blessedness which attaches to those that give, indicates that his main design in laying on us the necessity of giving, was, to give scope to our benevolent affections; for this end he has ordain- that we shall have the poor with us always, in in so many forms of human distress besetting our path, pleading at the bar of conscience for the forth puttings of that charity, which is the high excellence of our nature. Yea, he has placed all the interest which we have in evangelizing the world, on such a footing, that it will advance no farther than his redeemed people pour forth the means of its advance; that in that forth pouring the church may take in those riches of grace in which the whole work of redemption has its termination; in other words, he will not have the evangelizing of the world advance faster than the sanctifying of his church; and will sustain a reciprocation between the two advancing together. Nor do we exaggerate in presenting this as the main ground of what necessity there is for alms giving; for all the ends of redemption accomplished upon man are comprehended in his renovation from a state of supreme selfishness to that of perfect benevolence; and if we should say that all these occasions of benevolent action were created for the sole purpose of furnishing means of exercising men to benevolence, we should not make the means disproportionate to the end. The whole work of Christ, his humilitation, ministry, death, ressurrection, and mediatorial government. The whole work of his gospel and his spirit, and all the enforcements of his providences look to this end. We speak, therefore, not without warrant, when we say that all the human suffering that now pleads for human charity, and all the heathen darkness that lingers upon the nation for human benevolence to enlighten, is suffered to exist, among other purposes, as a means of developing christian character.

But let none imagine that the necessity for giving alms is on that account the less real. Divine wisdom has appointed it, and made it as unchangeable and imperious as if God himself were bound by it. The poor that God has cast upon the charity of men will inevitably suffer and die, if men do not feed them. The people that are perishing for lack of vision will continue to perish, until christian men convey to them the light of life. God will not lay this work on men for wise reasons, and then send down his angels to take it out of their hands. It is by establishing such an order of things, and sustaining it after he has established it, that he gives reality and force to the motive to benevolence, and to the means of drawing out and strengthening benevolent affections. And all his purposes to secure the sanctification of his people, and the whole ends of his redemption, will lead him to an inflexible support of this order of things. The sum of the matter thus far is, that God throws on his poor, for the purpose of enriching us. He sends the poor, as the represenative of himself, and of the cause of the gospel, out to begging of us; and so, as it were, repeats the acts of his humiliation, that the din of their solicitations ever sounding in our ears, and the sighs of a ruined world borne on every breeze, may draw forth from us those benevolent emotions and acts that shall more and more assimilate us to him who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor." God takesthe place of man: in his poor he asks, and man bestows; that in bestowing man may accumulate the true riches—more precious than gold, which perishes. It is God himself who asks; and our enriching with grace is the end for whichhe asks. He asks in the only way in which he could test and exercise our benevolence. For this purpose he must needs ask as a beggar and not as a king. Should he come to us in regal splendor or heavenly glory, his asking would be a command, which we should not dare to disobey; but our giving would be no act of compassion or benevolence. But now he comes to us in the person of his poor—he comes as the king dethroned and dependent—banished from heaven, covered with rags, pining in want—he comes uttering the tale of misery and real suffering, unless we afford. And now what we give is given by the promptings of compassion, and from no sordid motives. Here is both a proof and exercise of benevolence. Yet, to enforce his calls, he gives us to know that it is He that speaks and pleads for compassion, through the open words and uttered agonies of dying men: and that every donation shall be acknowledged by him in person when he shall come in the glory of his Father, with all the holy angels, and say to every one who has exercised compassion on his poor, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me." It is not for his good but ours, that he thus beggars himself, and pleads as a beggar before us. "Our goodness extends not to him."

A wise father often draws out the disposition of his child by bestowing gifts, and then soliciting a portion in return, or getting proxies to solicit for him, anxious to open the child's heart to an expansive generosity. So Christ clothes himself in rags and casts himself on our compassion, for no purpose so much as to give us the reflex benefit of our own benevolent acts. And here we wish it to be specialy remarked, that this design appears prominent in the manner in which the duty of almsgiving is inculcated in Scripture. Like the other graces, this charity seems to be insisted on for its own sake—not because their is so much suffering to be relieved, but because it is good and right for us to engage in its relief. God will have us give, not of necessity, but from the spontaneous flowing of the heart: "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give: not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver." Almost in every instance, you will observe the duty is enforced from higher grounds than the fact that there is so much suffering to be relieved. In one case we are exhorted to "do good and commanicate, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." In another, we are prompted to remember "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor." In another, the parity of reason drawn from the other graces is urged: "Therefore as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also." In another case it is, "Freely ye have received, freely give." In another, "Give alms of such things as ye have, and all things shall be clean unto you;" as if charity were the centre in which all virtues meet.

When the poor christians at Jerusalem were in great suffering, and the apostles went round to solicit relief of Gentile churches, their inspired letters, sent here and there, contained no rhetarical painting of the distresses to be relieved. In all that they said, there appears next to nothing adapted to draw upon the natural sympathies. For this word they seem to be laboring with a single eye to the sanctification of the Christians of whom they asked relief, as if no relief was wanted. The fact that God was to be glorified and the hearts of men were to be sanctified, was their main argument. One of the most distinct references to the distress, was this: "For the administration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant through many thanksgivings to God." And here the revenue os praise to God is the great consideration absorbing the other. Now, for a right appreciation of the views which we are to present, this fact, that man's sanctification for for the glory of God, is the main design of the Scriptural provisions for alms-giving, and the main thing aimed at in the duty, should be kept well in view; for by overlooking it, we have lost a principle that is the key to the understanding of this portion of the Scripture:

Organization of Sabbath-schools.

I will endeavor to give him my plan for organizing and conducting Sabbath-schools. Being an old Sabbath-school teacher, having been connected with such schools for 30 years, I claim to have some experience in that direction. The organization consists in this; viz. a Superintendent, and an assistant Superintendent, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and two Librarians; and if you please, a Chorister. This completes the organization.

OFFICERS DUTIES.

It is the duty of one of the Superintendents to be present at each school, and open school by singing and prayer; also close by either singing and prayer, or by singing alone.

The Secretary should keep a book in which he should keep a correct proceeding of each lesson; the number of pupils present, the number absent; the number of verses committed, or chapters read, by each pupil; which report should be read to the school at each meeting. Also, in addition to this, he should at the end of each quarter make out a quarterly report, and read it to the school; and if you please, to the church, and thus the church would all the time know what the Sabbath-school was doing.

The Treasurer should keep charge of all the money paid into the school; and pay it out for books and such things as the school from time to time may direct.

The Librarians should take charge of the books, distribute them among the school at each meeting, and at the close gather them up again.

Good music gives life to a Sabbath-school; I would therefore have a Chorister to lead in singing.

The Bible and Testament should be the only reading books. I would have no religious novels for the children to read.

I would have the school divided into classes of no more than five pupils each. Each class should have a competent teacher; who should be furnished with a class book, in which to keep a record of his or her class. After the lesson is read, each teacher should ask his or her class such questions as are applicable to the lesson; after which one of the Superintendents should ask some general questions on the lesson, thereby drawing out the different views on certain passages of Scripture; after which the privilege should be extended to any one to propose some Scripture questions to be answered at the next meeting.

I also found it to give life to a Sabbath-school, to have some one to deliver a lecture on some religious topic, say every alternate Sabbath. Let these persons be appointed by the Superintendent from time to time. Now, if the brethren all turn out to such a conducted Sabbath-school, I am satisfied they will have an interesting time, and will all learn something. May the Lord add his blessing is my prayer. Amen A. B. MILLER

Holiness.

"Without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

A solemn declaration! The unchangeable God hath made it. Shall not then the unholy sinner see the Lord? See him indeed, the sinner must, when he cometh in the clouds. Every eye shall behold him, and all unholy hearts will fear and tremble. But to behold the Lord in peace—to see his face and live, will be to the sinner forever impossible. Impenitent and unholy, he is under condemnation—a prisoner to offended justice. The wrath of God abideth on him. "He that believeth not, is condemned already." "The wages of sin is death." It is naturally impossible for the sinner to see God in peace, while sinful principles and tempers reign within him. There is no agreement between sin and holiness. The heart must be pleased with the character, government, and service of God, before it can be happy in God himself. The sinner dislikes God and all his holy requisitions. He is pursuing interests and pleasures which God hath forbidden. He will not have God to reign over him. Such opposition of character and views will keep the soul at an infinite remove from the presence and enjoyment of God. Sin cherished in the soul will fill it with darkness—will exclude the light of God's countenance and the tokens of his favor. The sinner with his unholy heart and carnal affections cannot approach the throne of grace. He has no interest there. He s an alien—an enemy, by wicked works. He has no access to God—no communion with him—no settled peace of conscience—no preparation for heaven.

When flesh and heart begin to fail, and the sinner feels himself drawn irresistibly towards death and judgment, whither will he look? Will he raise his eyes to heaven? Alas! he never sought the friendship of God, and now God is not his friend. As he was far from God in life, now God is far from him. Darkness and gloom brood over his mind, and shut out the light of heaven; conscience, and guilt, and fearful forebodings, anticipate the wrath of God. Besides, the heavenly world, with all its glory and felicity, would be a place of torment to an unholy mind.

Should the sinner, with his unholy heart and character be admitted into the regions of the blessed, what would he find suited to the desires and reigning temper of his heart? He would find the character and taste of every being totally opposite his own. He would find every employment of heaven holy and spiritual, and opposed to his inclinations. He would find himself perfectly alone—no one to associate with him among the millions of the heavenly world. He would feel himself unfit for the society of the blessed. A sight of the glory of Jehovah would fill his soul with unutterable pain, and awake within him the worm that never dies. Covered with pollution, and filled with conscious guilt, he would shrink from the place, and hide himself in the dark abodes of hell, rather than endure the light the purity and the joys of heaven.

Readers let me entreat you to consider, as a dying, accountable creature, the momentous truth before us. Do you not wish to know what is necessary to see God in peace, and what you must be to enjoy his favor, and be happy forever? This is of all concerns the first and greatest. Whatever interests you have in this world, depend upon it, they are far less important than being of the temper and character necessary to enjoy the favor and friendship of your Maker. God has expressly assured us, that without holiness, we cannot see his face and live. It is a point irreversibly determined. Deceive not yourself, then, with the vain hope of being blessed in his favor without holiness of heart and life.

Has God declared that holiness is indispensable to the enjoyment of him here and here after? And can you be indifferent whether you have this all important qualification for heaven, or are yet in your sins—whether you are travelling the narrow road to life, or the broad road to death? Can you trifle with heaven an hell? Is it a small thing whether you be doomed to the lake of fire, or dwell forever in the paradise of God? When these heavens shall be on fire, and these elements melt with fervent heat—when the voice of the archangel and the trump of God shall sound the general alarm to call the world to judgment, then, oh, dreadful to declare! then will trembling sinners call for rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the sight of their offended judge.

Yes, this dreadful day will surely come; and are you prepared for its amazing solemnities? How can you escape if you neglect so great a salvation? for the end of your present course is the second death—the punishment of hell.

Reader, if, after you read this solemn warning, you remain stupid and forgetful to God, you are in danger of losing your soul, and then you will say: "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and I am not saved." Oh! prepare to meet your God; and remember that without holiness you cannot see the Lord. May the Lord save his people. Amen.

Gog, the Man of Sin.

In the January Number of the Gospel Visitor, is an article written by D. P. Saylor, under the above caption, which I will notice; and with due respect to the age and rank of our esteemed brother, we offer the following thoughts.

He says he believes the man of sin (2 Thess. 2 : 3.) to be the prototype of Gog. Ex. 39 : 1. We think in this he is mistaken. That the man of sin is the Pope of Rome, there is no doubt. He is that ten-horned Papistic beast, that John saw rise up out of the sea Rev. 13 : 1. which is the prototype of the ten-horned Pagan beast, also of Rome. Dan. 7 : 7. And the Turkish Sultan is the prototype of the Gog of Ezek. 38th and 39th chapters, Rev. 20 : 8 Here are two noted characters in prophecy, and in treating of them, we sometimes mistake one for the other and do great violence to the Scriptures, and our calculations necessarily must fail. Such will doubtless be the case with our brother, in making the man of sin to be the prototype of Gog, and our land of America to be the land of unwalled villages. That the man of sin will cause our country some trouble I believe, but when, we do not know; but Gog, never; because he is too far off, having no interest here; furthermore, it was not given him to persecute the Christians, but only those men that have not the seal of God in their foreheads. Rev. 9 : 4.

We come now to notice those two characters more closely. The Man of Sin, or Papistic beast with seven heads and ten horns, to him was given a mouth speaking great blasphemies; and power was given him to continue forty and two months. Rev. 13 : 1–4, Dan. 7 : 25. By forty-two months are no doubt here intended twelve hundred and sixty years. If we can find when this man became the Universal Bishop over the Church of Rome, we can tell when the 1260 years expire.

Brown, in his Bible Dictionary, says, "Boniface, the third Bishop of Rome, procured for himself the title of Universal Bishop, A. D. 606 or 608 : but we think the year 610, is the time when the man of sin became the Autocrat of the Roman world — The monarchs of Europe were made to tremble under his tyranical power. It is said that he wore two swords, one representing his clerical, and the other his civil authority." From A. D. 610, 1260 years would fall in with 1870, when, upon last year, it is known that by Victor Emanuel, the Pope was driven from his seat of civil power, fulfilling Rev. 13 : 5. We believe he will continue to exercise his spiritual power to the end, when Christ will destroy him with the spirit of his mouth, and brightness of his coming. We think this will not be brought about by 1872. How long it will be, we cannot tell; suffice to say it will be long enough for Gog to get out of the Land of Palestine, when Israel will return home, to rebuild the city with many other towns and unwalled villages.

We come now to Gog more fully. The prophet says of Gog, "I will bring thee forth and all thine army, horses and horsemen, even a great company, all of them handling swords: Persia, Ethiopia, Lybia, Gomer, and and Togarmah, and all his bands; all of them riding upon horses; a great company and a mighty army." Ez. 38 : 4–6, 15.

This mighty army we believe to be blood kin to the one John speaks of as numbering two hundred thousand thousand, all horsemen, commanded by four Turkish generals, or the four angels that were loosed out of the great river Euphrates. They had power one hour a day a month and a year, or three hundred and ninety-one years and fifteen days. Rev : 9.

It is no doubt that the Turks, or Saracens, have had the greatest armies of horsemen in the world; and from A. D. 1281 to 1672, just 391 years, this cruel army of the Turkish Gog, it is said, shed more human blood, than any one army ever did; and in that year a treaty of peace was effected. Since that time, 198 years, the old Turkish Gog has been quietly sitting in the land of Palestine; and he will sit there, until God drives him out to make room for the return of Israel.

The Turks are the descendents of the ancient Scythians; and Magog their father was the second son of Japheth. Daniel was permitted to see this terrible army of Gog and his ravages Dan. 11th. And with amazement he asks, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? The man standing upon the waters, lifted up his hand and swaere by Him that liveth forever and ever, that it shall be for a time, times, and a half." Dan. 2 : 6, 7. "I heard but understood not," says Daniel, 8th verse and it looks almost vain for us to try to explain the time, which we think however, is 1260 years, or a thousand three score prophetic days; and the time times and a half, belong to the Turks, for he says, "He shall enter also into the glorious land." Dan. 11 : 47. This we understand to be the land of Canaan, which was given to the Gentiles; and the Holy City shall they tread under foot, forty and two months," Rev. 12 ; 2, i. e. 1260 years.

If we knew when the Saracens got possession of that land, we could calculate the end; but dates are uncertain, yet they will serve us for our purpose. Kitto says, "Caliph Omar, the third from Mohammet, conquored Jerusalem A. D. 636." Forty-two months, or 1260 years, will fall in with 1896. There are seventy-five days more to be added to the twelve hundred and sixty which makes 1335 days. Dan. 12 : 12. Add 1336 to 636 and it falls in with A. D. 1971.

Here you can see the mistake that brother Saylor makes.

Spiritual Culture.

Development in the grace of the Gospel, is of transcendant importance in behalf of the enjoyment of the Christian religion. The realizations of the blessings and joyfulness of the religion of Christianity, depends greatly upon the development we make therein. It is not the profession of religion alone, that renders it joyful and benelicial; but it is a constant advancement therein, towards a higher state of perfection in the divine economy. He who expects to enjoy the Christian religion and experience its glorious benefits, both in time and in the future state, should wisely and diligently seek after a disclosure of its divine nature and tendency in the heart. To expect to enjoy religion without seeking after a development therein, is truly a sad procedure in divine life, and will inevitably fail in realizing the peace and joyfulness which it tends to impart It is a lamentable mistake with a great many that entertain the idea that a mere profession of religion is sufficient to realize its triumphant benefit in a coming day. This is a vague and dissolute idea with regard to the Christian religion. The culture and development of the mind and spiritual members in the kingdom of grace, is the only condition upon which we can realize the glorious and unfading fruits of the Christian religion; and hence the further we advance in the divine economy of grace, the better will we enjoy the religion of the Bible, and experience its heavenly blessings. The enjoyment of religion is only in proportion to its culture and development in the grace of the Gospel; and by diligently improving and developing that which the Holy Ghost has wrought within us, we can grow up in the Gospel economy unto a state of manhood; and thus become better qualified for the prosecution of the race.

The mind and spiritual members require to be strengthened and developed in the grace of the gospel, in order to be enabled to comprehend the hights and depths, and length and breadth. This is what the Word of God demands of all those that have entered the vineyard of Christ, to grow in grace and in the knowledge of Christ, and thus be strengthened with all might in the inner man.—This is the way to render the Christian religion useful, beneficial, and productive of much good in the gospel of salvation; and he who neglects the observance of this duty, evidently deprives himself of the one thing needful, and cannot see afar off. The spiritual eyes require to be enlightened and illumined in the grace of the gospel, in order to be enabled to penetrate into the mysteries of Godliness and practically discern between that which is good and acceptable to God, and that which is evil and rejected.—A spiritual development in the various Christian virtues is of essential importance to the enjoyment of pure and undefiled religion, and it is something that we should ardently seek for our practical benefit and edification in the gospel of salvation.

The religion of Christianity is of a progressive nature and tendency, always and continually growing brighter and brighter, even unto the light of the perfect day. This is what we should constantly endeavor to attain unto while in the pursuit of divine life: a disclsoure of the divine nature in the heart, an unfolding of that pure and heart-felt religion which the Holy Scriptures reveal to our mind; and constantly advance forward in the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, and seek to attain unto a state of manhood in the grace of God.

It is not meet that we should always remain in the kingdom of God as little children; but we should seek to become men in the grace of God, and advance forward in the light and knowledge of salvation, as we advance in age. This is consistent with the word of God, and highly beneficial to our spiritual welfare, both in the life that now is, and in that which is to come; it should be our ultimate aim and object at all times, to grow in grace and in the knowledge of Christ, and seek to become wise unto salvation, and men in understanding. It is only by pursuing such a course in divine life, that we can successfully run the Christian race, and realize the triumphant victory in the end. The faster we advance in the kingdom of divine grace, the nearer we approach the divine Being, and become more like him in virtue and loveliness, in purity and heavenly mindedness.—Our peace with God, and hope of heaven and happiness, will become brighter, more glorious and delightful. Our ideas and conceptions of God and his divine dispensation, will be more rational and consistent with his word; and all things pertaining to the economy of redemption will appear more beautiful, more pleasant and glowing in their divine nature and tendency. We will experience more pleasure and delight in executing the divine service of God, and in laboring for the advancement of his heavenly cause in the world, and for the illumination of mankind in the light and knowledge of the plan of salvation.

Who are the Least.

In Companion No. 10, David Barringer asks to know, who are the "least esteemed in the church," and quotes Paul, 1 Cor. 6: 4.

In looking up an answer to this query, we have referred to two Dictionaries, expecting to learn something that would edify us all, but so far have failed to find it; and in giving our own views of this portion of Scripture, we do it more from a desire to hear from other brethren than to try to answer the query ourselves. The brethren will therefore be free to criticise and instruct as they may see proper.

The apostle in this letter to the church at Corinth desired to correct some errors which had taken hold upon them in his absence. And well for us, that he was not there; for had he been present to reprove them in person, we had never known some very important truths that we can now learn in his letter to the brethren at Corinth.

From some who had come to him from them, he had learned more about their true condition, than perhaps they wished him to know; as you can see in Chap. 1: 11. The divisions which had made such inroads into their church, and which threatened its destruction, were something similar to what we can all see in the world in this day, only in a much less degree than we now see it; namely, "that every one of you saith, I am of Paul, I of Apollos, I of Cephas, and I of Christ." After he had fully reproved them for their contentious spirit, and had justified himself in the course he had taken; and more than all, how he denied himself for their sakes, he says something on the subject of fornication. He says it is a common report that comes from you at Corinth, that there is fornication among you, and that of such a kind as the Gentiles were not guilty of; to wit, "that one should have his father's wife." He reproves them sharply, for allowing such a one among them, and because they seemed to glory in the rapid progress they were making, as they thought, in the religion that had so lately been introduced into their city.

When he had given directions how to correct the evils, by purging out the old leaven, he passes on to another; namely, that of going to law with each other, and that "before the unjust, and not before the saints."—That there should be differences in respect to worldly matters, the apostle seems to admit; but the manner in which they treated the matters of difference, was what he reproves them for, as you can see in chapter 6: 7. In verse 2 he reproves them for their ignorance of the fact "that the saints shall judge the world;" and argues from that fact that the servants of God should be much preferred to all others in judging the smallest matters. He reproves them for going to law before the unjust, when the most lowly or least esteemed member in their church, had more principle of truth and justice than those they had chosen to settle their difficulties.

But we have another view. He says, "I speak to your shame." This refers to something before, and we think it applies where this query is founded, namely, "set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church." "Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you, no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?" This searching question of Paul's, seems to imply that they had not the desire to do right, and to have their difficulties adjusted on the principles of justice, and with feelings of brotherly love that they should have had; but with feelings of revenge, they went to law before unbelievers to gain the victory, and make it cost the other party as much as possible. Just as people and professed Christians do now. They make choice of men to settle their troubles, who were not as good as those they might esteem as least and lowly in the church; and Paul could well say, "there is utterly a fault among you." Let us take warning then, and if difficulties come up between brethren, let them take the Savior's royal plan for peace, in the 18th chapter of Matth; and if we want to be right and do right, it will bring peace without fail.

Church Government.

I see by the last COMPANION, (No. 20,) that brother P. S. Newcomer is somewhat exercised by what he thinks to be an uncertainty, or, perhaps, a defect, in the Constitution of our Organization, as a body of Christians

I believe that the brother is a careful reader, and that he possesses a discriminating judgment; yet I must confess that I think, if he will read again Matthew 18th chapter, with kindred scriptures, in connection with the Minutes of the Annual Meeting, especially those under which our present system of District Meetings is created, he will have his doubts removed and come to something like the following conclusion.

Such a case as he refers to—"a purely business transaction,"—should be proceeded with about as follows: The aggrieved party should first inform the aggressor privately, and try to have the difficulty adjusted; if he cannot succeed, take one or two others with him, and make another effort; if still unsuccessful, give it into the hands of the church for adjudication, if, as may happen, for some cause, the judgment of the church will not render satisfaction, they can call to their assistance, a "Committee" of Elders; and if they cannot render a satisfactory decision, there is reason to believe that there is a spirit of stubbornness, and a close observer can see it crop out, and it should be dealt with according to 1 Cor. 5. But should the church think it expedient they can make a statement of the case, in writing, to the District Council;—which writing should be read in presence of the church and both parties, and should be agreed to by both parties; then the District Council can give their decision intelligently, and we might suppose, satisfactorily; and there should be no higher court of appeal, unless the party who still might feel himself oppressed, could get a number of members to sign a petition to the Annual Meeting, asking for a committee. I feel that we need not pursue this subject any farther at present.

Sincerely, JOSEPH HOLSOPPLE.

Aid.

There is a request for aid to assist a young ministering brother to move to Oregon, next September. The brother referred to, is John B. Allensworth. He was chosen to the ministry about three years ago, in Richland Co. Ill., Eld. G. W. Studebaker assisting.—He is a man of considerable talent; and we have reason to believe that he has his Master's cause—the building up of Zion—the saving of souls, at heart; having corresponded with him for six or seven years, and visited him once on a Communion occasion when he lived in the state of Indiana. He has a wife and five children, (brother J. Callert has it three, in the Gospel Visitor). He and his wife have been sick a good deal, and he is not in good health now; but he thinks he could accomplish more good in Oregon and hopes that a change of climate may improve his health.

From what we know of brother Allensworth, we believe him to be a good brother to send: and we all know the best way to build up a church, is, for the ministers to go and live where they preach, where there are no organized churches.

Now, brethren and sisters, do be entreated to send this brother and his family to that large field of labor: he is too poor to go without help. It will be bread cast upon the waters; for what we give for the Lord's work can never be lost. We hope the elders of churches will lay the cause before the members, and hold a collection. And individuals can send too,—those who are blest with means. We wish to impress this matter, so that we get more in the way of duty, in sending the Gospel to those who are without God, and without hope in the world. So send in your aid as soon as possible, to Michael Forney, Parkersburg, Richland county, Ill.—Brother Allensworth must know soon whether he can get the assistance to go, or not.

Brother M. Forney will acknowledge the receipts of what is sent.

DYING.—There is a dignity in going away alone, which we call dying—that wrapping of the mantal of immortality about us; that putting aside with a pale hand the azure curtains that are drawn around this cradle of world; that venturing away from home for the first time in our lives, for we are dead, and seeing foreign countries not laid down on any maps we have read about. There must be lovely lands somewhere starward, for none ever return who go thither, and we very much doubt if any would if they could.

SPENER said that, for himself, though an old man, he wished neither to die nor to live, because one could already, even here, be with God, so soon as one only had God within him, and that we ought to be able to see without grief our holiest wishes wither, like sun-flowers, because after all, the lofty sun burns on, which forever raises and nourishes new suns, and that a man must not so much prepare himself for eternity as plant in himself the eternity which is still, pure, light, deep, and everything.

Ungodly and Sinner.

"And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?" Peter 4: 18.

The above is a subject of interest. The distinction between the ungodly and sinner appears to be so small, that they can hardly separate the two classes; and while some do discern distinction enough to separate the two characters, they place the ungodly in advance, or rather, make him the better of the two. The idea seems so strange to me, that I thought I would present a thought, with a quotation or two, hoping that some one may correct me, should I be in error; nevertheless, we expect to bring evidence as we go along, to prove the position we may take.

We maintain there is quite a distinction, from the fact that the conjunction is placed between the two words ungodly and sinner, and that the ungodly is the worse of the two; and the reason why we maintain the idea is simply because the word of God tells us so, which is the best reason that I can assign.

The word of God by Jude tells us, "For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before, of old, ordained to his condemnation: ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ." "Crept in," we understand to mean, those who have crept into the fold by an illegal way; they do not enter the kingdom according to the law of the king; they are trying to climb up some other way, separate and apart from the way the Savior has prescribed. The ungodly we understand to be those who make a profession of religion, and yet do not enter in by the door; or in other words, they do not enter into covenant relation with Christ in the manner the Savior directed. In his language to Nicodemus, the Savior says: "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." The apostle Jude further tells us in the 10th verse, "But these speak evil of those things which they know not;" and in the 11th verse, "Woe unto them;" and in the 12th he tells us they are "feeding themselves without fear," and in the latter clause of the 13th verse, he says they are "wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever."

Dear fellow traveler to eternity, mark the language, "to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." The ungodly I understand to be those who are beyond redemption: they will not be saved upon the easy terms of the gospel, but reject the council of God, and as the Apostle Paul tells us, "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."

Again, Rom. 1: 18, "For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness." We see here again, that the ungodly are those who make a profession of faith in an ungodly way—not in the way the Savior has directed: "For in vain do they worship me," says the Savior, "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." From every consideration we think that the ungodly, as generally spoken of in the New Testament Scriptures, are those who think they have religion, but have it in an unrighteous way; holding and observing the traditions, or commandments of men, and gainsaying the simplicity of the Gospel. Yea, the simple injunctions of the Savior are too simple for them to perform; but they will tell you that they are unnecessary, they are of no utility to salvation.—May the Lord rebuke such folly, and grant them grace; peradventure they may acknowledge and obey the truth.

We might present many more passages to prove the ungodly as being a very strict, professing class of people, but deem it unnecessary; nevertheless, permit us to use one more, as given in the Revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave and signified by his angel unto his servant John, 2nd chapter and 2nd verse: "I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil; and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles and are not, and hast found them liars." We think the above quotation might be very appropriately applied to the subject; and more especially the later clause of the verse. They claim to be apostles, or followers, but are liars. It seems from the quotation that they claim to have religion; they hold the truth in an unrighteous way; they do not rightly divide the word of truth, as they are commanded, consequently they are liars—false teachers, as Peter tells us. And as we believe they are undoing what God has ordained, they are following a man-devised plan of redemption, and instead of making the sinner godly, they are making him more ungodly. It is harder to unteach and teach aright, than teach from the start, those who have never been taught. Even so is it in the school of Christ; for we do understand from the teachings of God's word, that all men have need to be taught; for we read in Acts, 18th chapter, that there was a certain Jew named Apollos born at Alexandria an eloquent man and mighty in the Scriptures unto whom Aquila and Priscilla expounded the way of God more perfectly.

And is there not another class of men who might be termed ungodly men; viz., those of whom the Apostle speaks in his letter to the Hebrews? (6: 6.) "For it is impossible for those who were once enlighted; and have tasted of the heavenly gift; and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost: and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." We understand from these words, that those of whom the apostle speaks, are a class of people who have been in the way, but through much carelessness and the deceitfulness of unbelief, they have fallen away, and as the apostle says in another place, they "count the blood of the covenant wherewith they were sanctified an unholy thing." So we see they are entirely beyond the hope of redemption: they are loose from God, for the Scriptures tell us that the Spirit of God shall not always strive with man.

And now, dear reader, whoever you may be whether professor or non-professor, whether old or young, bond or free, please to examine, with me, your most unworthy writer; this important subject, and flee for your life from the ungodly, and lay hold upon the words of eternal life—the Gospel of Christ; "for it is the power of God unto salvation;" and there is no other power given among men whereby we can be saved.

We will next proceed to notice the second character spoken of in the text; viz., the sinner. We are taught in the Scriptures that whosoever knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is a sin: he, then, is most certainly a sinner, even while he may not commit actual transgression, yet he is a sinner because he omits to do that which he is commanded to do

We admit that the ungodly are sinners; but while they are sinners, we are taught that they are ungodly sinners; but the second of sinners there is yet a hope; peradventure they may acknowledge accept and obey the truth. In another sense we might say we are all sinners; for for while we would do good, evil is present with us; and as the apostle John tells us, "if we say that we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." But thanks be to him who hath revealed his will to man, the apostle further tells us that, "if any man sin we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." O fellow traveler, what a glorious thought, that we have such a high priest, who appears in presence of God for us, advocating the cause of the flesh, advocating the fallibility of man, and who is the propitiation for our sins! Let us then, one and all, both saint and sinner, purify our souls. Hark! says one, "The soul can never be purified until it is redeemed from this tabernacle of clay, and made to bask in the sunshine of eternal glory around the throne of God." It must have been the opinion of the apostle Peter that it could be purified here on the earth while in this tenement of clay; for he says in 1 Pet. 2: 22, "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth:" and we understand that God's word is truth, and strict obedience to God's word, let it appear ever so simple in the eyes of the world, will purify the soul, and give us an inheritance which is incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away; reserved in heaven for us.—Obey the Gospel.

ANDREW STALNAKER.

For the COMPANION.

Often I am Sad.

How often I feel sad when contemplating upon the goodness of God, to lost and perishing humanity. He so loved a lost and dying world that he gave his only begotten Son, who died and bled upon the Roman cross, that we, through his death burial and resurrection, might enjoy everlasting life beyond the grave. Those are the hours when I feel sad. But when our blessed Savior was bear on earth, he made use of the encouraging language that if we would love him, and follow his examples as laid down in his divine word, we should have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city. Reading those beautiful words that fell from the lips of the Redeemer of the world, drives away all my fears; and when the busy cares of the day are passed away to return no more forever the solemn thought arrises in my mind, have I passed the day in that manner that will be pleasing and acceptable in the sight of my heavenly Father?

Dear brothers and sisters, let us put forth a strong effort in time to come, if God spares our lives, wielding an influence over our dear friends who are living without God and hope in the world. We all can do some little good. Others will see our good works and will be constrained to glorify God our heavenly Father. The time is drawing near to hand, when we must pass the stage of action. Let us so live and so conduct ourselves while traveling here in this lower world of sin sorrow and death, that we in a dying hour can look back upon a life that has been spent in the service of God our heavenly Father, and die in the triumphs of living faith. May this be the happy lot of all, is the humble prayer of your brother. Amen

J. W. GREEN.

Scripture Reading.

The daily, regular, and solemn reading of God's holy word by a parent before his children is one of the most powerful means to direct them to a Christian life. it is a constant dropping, and it wears its mark into the living rock. A family thus trained cannot be ignorant of the word. Properly read, the whole scriptures come repeatedly before their mind. The most heedless child must receive and retain some portion of the sacred word. The most forgetful will tresure up some passages of holy writ. The contrast between families thus instructed, and those where the word of God is never heard, is very striking; and he who neglects this duty does his children a wrong, and robs them of a blessing the importance of which he can hardly estimate.

The word of God, thus hidden in the heart of a child from infancy, enters into the very texture of the mind. Involuntarily its sacred teachings are recollected in after life; and though in the years of manhood, the child may wander wide and far, yet the recollections of the hour of prayer, the open Bible, the sacred word read with reverent voice, the bended knee, and the earnest supplication that arose at morn and eventide, will often be a holy charm, to keep him from the paths of sin and folly, and lead him in the way of life and truth. And when, in the providence of God, the child is permitted to take his place as the head of a new family, the memories of home and the home altar will go far toward making his house also a house of prayer, his home a place of peace and blessing.

Pres. Edwards says: God's people ought especially to abound in deeds of charity or almsgiving. If God's people in this land were once brought to abound in such deeds of love as much as in praying, hearing, and singing, and religious meetings, and conference, it would be a most blessed omen. So amiable would be the sight in the eyes of our loving and exalted Redeemer, that it would soon, as it were, fetch him down from his throne in heaven, to set up his tabernacle with men on the earth, and dwell with them."

HUMILITY.

Humility is not meanness. It is not disageeable; but it is lovely. It is considering ourselves just as we are, and a desire to have others think and treat us so. It is a willingness to act in the sphere in which we are placed.

J. A. SELL.

THE case of the Canaanitish woman is not only peculiar in its greatness, but in this, that it obtains a blessing, not for herself, but for another. It is a case of successful intercession.—Whedon.

The Approaching Annual Meeting.

Before the arrival of the date of this paper, we expect to be at the place of next Annual Meeting, and ere this issue reaches our readers, the Meeting will be in session. We hope the brethren and sisters everywhere, will send up their prayers for those whose duty it shall be to participate in the business of the meeting. Matters of great importance will be brought before the meeting, and questions will be discussed that have long agitated the mind of the Brotherhood. May the Spirit of God overrule all to his honor, and for the peace and welfare of his people.

We hope to be able in our next issue to give part of the proceedings of the Meeting, unless we should be detained by unforseen circumstances.—As soon as possible, we will also furnish a copy of the authorized Minutes to each one of our subscribers.

The Minutes alone, will be sent for $1.00 per dozen, postage paid. The Companion from the date of the Annual Meeting, with the report and Minutes, to the end of the present year, for 75 cents.

Clover Creek Lovefeast.

According to our custom we attended the lovefeast at Clover Creek, on Friday 19th inst. Uncle Daniel Leedy of Belleville, Richland county, Ohio, having been with us several days, on a visit accompanied us. Having been raised in Morrisons Cove and having been absent for thirty six years, he observed many changes. What we knew as Brook's Mill, he called Slingluff's Mill. When we spoke of Bare's mills; he though of Neff's mill; but we both thought of the same place, when we said Roaring Springs. The Morrison's Cove Railroad is now nearly graded to the above place and is in running order to McKee's Gap.

The lovefeast commenced at four o'clock, in the evening. There was good attendance and good order. Brethren F. P. Loehr, Graybill Myers,—Daniel Snowberger. Isaac Brumbaugh, and John B. Replogle, were the "strange preachers" in attendance. On Saturday brother John Garber joined in also. Meetings were continued on Saturday, and on Sunday at three different places. We hope some seed has been sown, that will in due time bear fruit to God's honor.

On Monday morning we were brought to McKee's Gap Station in time for the morning train and at eight o'clock we were at home.

Visitors.

Occasionally we have the pleasure of entertaining many of our friends in the Companion Family, and then for a long while we have quite a dearth. Lately we have been favored with a number of visits. First, came our uncle, brother Daniel Leedy, of Richland county, Ohio, who had never before been at our house, and will not likely come again, unless it should be during the present visit, as he is nearly fourscore years of age.—He is a warm friend of the Companion, which he evidenced by bringing us four new subscribers. Soon after, brother Christian Newcomer, and friend John Will, of Bryan, Ohio, arrived and remained with us over night. Mr. Will is the inventor of the Portable Fence advertised in our columns several years ago, and his daughter was an esteemed member of the Companion Family over a year, and we were glad to see him, and to hear from her, as we highly value the friendship of both.

On the 13th inst, brethren J. L. Wineland, and David B. Burget, dropped into our sanctum quite unexpectedly, and almost as suddenly dropped back again, having come in one train and returned in the next; but their visit was long enough at that time, for we accompanied them on their return.

On the 22nd, brother John Beaghly, wife and two daughters, and brother Ephraim Speicher, of Waterloo, Iowa, lodged with us over night, and in the morning set out for the city of Brotherly Love. We were glad to meet our Iowa friends, who so kindly served us a year ago.

We also saw brother Quinter, and brother Loebr, on the cars, but they could not stop off with us. We fear that fast trains and excursion tickets, have taken many of our friends by, who would otherwise havebeen pleased to stop with us. Perhaps on their return it may please some to remain with us over Lord's day, and attend our Lovefeast on the third and fourth of June.

Sunday School Supplies.

We receive frequent inquiries for books for Sunday Schools, and therefore announce that we have no books for that purpose, except the Christian Harp, Patent Note Music Book, the New Testament, and the Pious Youth. We have arranged the Youth in such a way that each paper is separated into four parts, one for each Sunday in the month. Each part is complete in itself, and answers the purpose for distribution as well as a weekly paper. It is better adapted to the wants of Sunday Schools, than any paper we have ever examined; and any school that is well supplied with Bibles and Testaments, Hymn and Tune Books, and copies of the Pious Youth, and an energetic corps of teachers, will not be in great need of many other books. We will supply ten or more copies at five cents a month each, all to be sent to to one address. They need not be taken the whole year, but may begin with the May number, and be continued for one or six months. Send for specimen copies. The Harp will be supplied for 38 a dozen, or 35 cents a single copy.

We respectfully solicit contributions and selections to the YOUTH.

Quotas.

The work is still going on finely, and every day new names are being added to our list. We now announce the following:

Daniel Leedy,	4	Cath. Mustin,	1
Jacob Bahr	1	John Seachrist,	1
Jacob Beeghly,	1	Jonas Trimmer,	1
Enos Crowell,	1	Joseph Zahn,	1
J. R. Fogelsanger,	1	Levi Gockley,	1
F. P. Loehr,	4	Henry Hertzler,	1
Sam'l Ulrich,	1	S. B. Stuckey,	1
A. C. Nomer,	1	H. Slingluff,	1
A. Heise,	2	Reported before	117
A. Hoover,	1
J. L. Wineland,	1	Total	143

With a little effort, several hundred new subscribers may be obtained from the date of the Annual Meeting, which we now offer for seventy-five cents. Come brethren and sisters, we expect each one of you to make an effort to send us at least one new subscriber. Invite your neighbors to subscribe, and nine chances out of ten, you will succeed in filling your quota. We need the assistance of all our friends. Our circulation ought to be ten thousand, and could be, if every friend would exert his and her influence to its full capacity. It should be remembered that subscribers may be obtained at any time, and not only at the beginning of the year. We must work all the year round, week in and week out, and we invite our friends to come to our help.

Brüder Berichter.

Some time in March last we published a communication from brother James Y. Heckler, favoring the publication of a periodical among us, in the German language. About the same time we proposed to issue a specimen number, so as to be ready for distribution at the Annual Meeting. We had so far advanced upon the enterprise, as to select for its title the significant name of Brüder Berichter, and were patiently waiting for contributions to fill its columns. But we heard not a word of the German periodical since, until quite recently, when we received a letter of encouragement from brother John Lohmann, of Cameron, Clinton county, Mo.—His letter may appear in these columns.

As there was no visible exertion on the part of our German brethren, we concluded that there was no great want of such an enterprise, and therefore the Berichter has "a name," but no "local habitation."

Book Notices.

THE MANUFACTURER AND BUILDER for June, is exceedingly instructive. We regard it as the liveliest paper of its class. Address Western & Co., 37 Park Row, New York.

GOOD HEALTH. If you wish a really good paper for treating on the means of preserving health, send for GOOD HEALTH. Price two dollars a year, or twenty cents a number.—Now is the time to subscribe for Vol. 3, which will commence with the June number. Vol. 1 and 2, are now ready bound, and may be ordered for $2.50 each. Address, Alexander Moore, 11 Bromfield St., Boston.

PETERS' MUSICAL MONTHLY.—Three dollars per annum; single copies 30 cents. Address J. L. Peterson, 589 Broadway, New York. The June number before us, contains seventeen different pieces of music, most of them new, and some fine stanzas of Poetry.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for June is at hand. It contains no less than eight illustrated articles. The first "The Wonders of the Yellowstone." It is deeply interesting to all who admire the wonders of Nature. We think Scribner's a first-rate Monthly, and very cheap. Three dollars per annum. Specimen numbers, fifteen cents. Address Scribner & Co., 654, Broadway, New York

THE SILVER SONG. A new Sabbath School collection, in Round Notes. W. W. Whitney, Publisher, 111 Summit St., Toledo, Ohio. Price 35 cents.

It is a very popular book and is highly recommended.

Answers to Correspondents.

J. R. FOGELSANGER. No charge against you. It must therefore have been as you say: $3.00 instead of $1.50. J. H. Fogelsanger's paper had been ordered to be stopped at Shippensburg, by whom we cannot tell.

Shirleysburg, Pa., will please notice that No. 16 are all out. Sorry we cannot send again.

JAS. A. SELL. We found none of the credits referred to, except J. Crumpacker's.

JACOB L. MILLER. It did not come to hand. Try again. Send seventy-five cents for balance of this year.

J. H. FRANTS. The money you sent before is acknowledged in No 16. The papers have been sent. We await farther orders, as the Tune and Hymn Book is not out yet.

DAVID M. GARBER. There is yet a balance of seventy-eight cents in our favor.

MICHAEL GLOTFELTY. When did you order the Moomaw book? and how many?

ISAAC KULP. Check received. We now have a good supply of paper covered Harps.

WM. H. PULLEN. The C. F. C will be sent to Noah Laush. It will be 75 cents. What do you mean by the first part of your letter? Did you send anything that has not been published, or are you speaking for others? We receive some things at this office that we would not publish if they had been written by the Queen of England and our paper were as large as the Red Sea. Any thing very good that comes to our office, will come to light at some time or other, no matter where it is from. Please explain.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as a guaranty of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

GERMANY VALLEY, PA., June 11th. 1871.

I visited the school at Bourbon, Ind., on Monday, 29th ult. I was well pleased to find so large a number of learners, 86 young men and ladies, of various ages and sizes; all attentive and exceedingly well behaved. They are from Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Michigan. Everything went off in regular order and precision. Cleanliness and neatness characterized, not only the students, but books, papers, and even the floors of the rooms. Not a speck of tobacco juice nor a stump of a cigar, was visible. After dismission there was no knocking off of hats, pulling of hair or clothes, etc, all walked off gently, pleasantly, and quietly to their boarding places, getting ready to attend at the Brick Church, to hear words of encouragement in the presence of the citizens, and friends of education.—The scholars were seated in front, and before opening the exercises proper, sang a beautiful song which enlivened the speaker, that instead of speaking half an hour, the time was doubled. But fifteen minutes remained to reach the train. Cane and satchel were picked up, but spectacles and book left on the stand. Bidding farewell to all, accompanied by a number, young and old, the train was reached in time, at a little past nine. The night was pased with many reflections of what had been done and learned during the last 9 or 10 days. A report made by the officers of the Educational Institute at Bourbon, showed the liquidation of all debts (or provisions made for the same) and between three and four thousand dollars of a surplus. The school commencing with but seven, and the first term closing with some twenty. The middle of the second term counting eighty six, with the assurance of an increase, by next day.

Stopping off at Columbiana, the writer paid a visit to his old friend and relative, H. Kurtz and wife.—Brother Kurtz seems to lean strongly towards the grave, yet has a great desire to see his old acquaintances in Pa., once more.

Bidding farewell next morning, we took the train fifteen minutes before ten o'clock, and arrived safely at Johnstown. Found lodging with sister Cobaugh, a widow with three lovely children. May the Lord be her husband and her children's Father.—The brethren in Shade branch, not looking for a visit, my letter giving notice, having failed to come to hand, made no appointment. Yet by exertions part of the members came together on Friday, at their meeting-house, and in the evening a goodly congregation met at Scalp Level meeting-house. Parting with the friends here, we took the P. M. or Mail train, next day, Saturday, and arrived at McVeytown in time to be taken out by the kind brethren.—Next day at different places meetings were attended by the brethren, who had come to attend their District Meeting, and I have no doubt the seed sown and the plants nurtured, will not be in vain.

Monday morning opened with a fair sky and cool breezes, after a prolonged rain. Pleasant morning this was indeed, to meet with so many children of our Father's family. O, the happy greeting! When sunshine beams from every face and good wishes from heart to heart, truly a faint fortaste of that great meeting in that other land, where parting shall be no more.

The delegates coming in: things prepared for the work. After dinner the labor was commenced and prosecuted till the proper time. The supper being taken in the basement story, the evening services being ended, all found lodging and a place of rest for the night. Next morning the work was prosecuted till late in the evening and finished. The writer enjoyed himself quite well as a spectator, impartially listening and observing, he learned and stored up some excellent lessons for future use.

Among the queries, a number of them about Salem College; and I did not blame them for it, consideringthe fictitious circulars and exagerated reports in the secular papers, which if true, would have made our fraternity, if not culpable, yet would have shown them to be careless in regard to the common good and safety of our principles and practices. And happy did F. P. L. feel when H. R. H presented the matter in its true light, refering to the explanation given by H. Miller in the Companion, and testified by F. P. L. This being understood and believed, quieted all uneasiness and no blame thrown on the Northern Indiana brethren.

It being desired by a number of the brethren that the truth in this case should be known by all the brethren in the fraternity, the writer felt it his duty to try to give satisfaction, though it may be imperfectly.—For "Blessed are the Peace-makers," and he loves peace,love,and harmony, while he also entreats all his dear brethren everywhere to "judge nothing before the time," and especially not to condemn upon outside reports; for if a body of brethren are reported to have done wrong, it becomes us first to investigate in the gospel order, and not pass judgment until the accused has a hearing.

Permit me to remark here, that it would not comport with our Christian profession to cast reflections upon those of our friends and well-wishers, to do what they did and as they did. I am willing to ascribe to them the purest motives. There are many things done in the world that would seem not to have been done for Christ's sake, or by pure motives; yet the cause of Christ and the glory of God was promoted or furthered, or at least God's purpose accomplished for the benefit of mankind. I might here refer to inventions and improvements of all kinds, for illustration, but shall forbear.

F. P. LŒHR.

Brethren Editors: The following arrangements for supplying meeting places, with preaching for the ensuing year, were made at D. M. of the N. E. JONESBORO, TENNESSEE,
May 13th, 1871.

Mr. D. C Davis.

Dear B——, I had like to have said brother: well, no matter; for although you are not at present a full brother, yet I fondly hope that the time is not far distant, when I may call you by that endearing appellation. At present I can, however, but call you half-brother; for although we may be children of the same Father, yet we have not the same mother; for, "ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus; for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God;" "if not the Spirit of Christ dwell in you, the body is dead, because of sin; but the spirit is life, because of righteousness." "Let that mind be in you, therefore, which was in Christ Jesus;" and humble yourself under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time;" for, a broken and contrite spirit, is in the sight of God of great price;" and "if any man will come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me: but he that is ashamed of me, and of my words, of him will I be ashamed before my Father and the holy angels" "And he that saith he loveth me, and keepeth not my words, is a liar, and the truth is not in him."—"Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?

The preceding quotations, I presume, will suffice as evidences to point out our duty, as professed children of one common Lord. The apostle Paul says: "There are god's many, and lord's many; but unto us there is one God, the Father, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, and we by him." And again, "To wit, that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto him, and hath committed to us the word of reconciliation; and this is the word by which the Gospel is preached unto you;" that, "if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved;" for, "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation;" for, whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." But, "how shall they call on him in whom they do not believe? and how shall they believe on him of whom they have not heard?" "So, faith cometh by hearing; and hearing, by the word of God."

Again Paul says: "By faith we understand that the world was formed by the word of God;" and St John says, that "the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." With what thunder tones does "the voice which once shook the heavens—but declares that it will shake the earth also, and which cannot lie"—fall upon our ears, saying: "He that saith he knoweth me, and keepeth not my commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him;" and, "All liars shall have their part in the lake which burns with fire and brimstone."

Let us now briefly consider what are the commandments of the Lord, that we may thereby be able, as nearly as possible, to obey; knowing that Jusus Christ is "the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him;" and that "he giveth the Spirit only to such as obey his word—to such as remember his commandments to do them," hearkening to the voice of his word"—"that many false spirits have gone out into the world," and that we are to "try the Spirit whether they are of God;" for, "every Spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God."—Now to confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is nothing more nor less than to acknowledge him to be the Son of God, sent down from heaven to reveal to us the will of his Father, in such clear, unmistakable language, according to our comprehension, that we cannot fail to understand our duty—"that he that runs may read, and a wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein." "But if this Gospel of the kingdom is hid, it is hid to them that are lost, in whom the God of this world has blinded their eyes, lest the glorious Gospel of the Son of God should shine in unto them" And the apostle cautions, "beware lest any man spoil thee through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ;" for, "the Gospel is to them that perish foolishness; but to us that believe, the power and wisdom of God"

And now for the commandments of the Lord

1st. "Hear, O heaven! and give hear, O earth! hear and your souls shall live." How shall they believe on him of whom they have not heard?

2nd. "Ye believe in God, believe also in me;" for, except ye believe that I am he, ye shall die in your sins;" but, "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved;" "it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved;" but, "how shall they call on him in whom they do not believe?" "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out." "Let the wicked man forsake his ways, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, who will have mercy upon him, and to our God, who will abundantly pardon." But, "wherewith shall I come before the Lord?" "I will take the cup of salvation, and pay my vows in the presence of all the people." "I will confess his name now in the presence of all the people. Selah.

3rd. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation; for if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."

4th. "For he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned."—"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God:" "except a man is born of water, and of the Spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." "Marvel not that I said unto you, ye must be born again." "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptable, by the word of truth which liveth and abideth forever." "The words which I speak unto, they are Spirit and they are life; and they shall judge you in the last day." "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations; baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." "Marvel not if the world hate you; for it hated me before it hated you." "Ye are not of the world; if you were of the world, the world would love its own; but because you are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." "A new commandment give I unto you, that you should love one another, even as I have loved you, that you also should love one another;" for, "by this shall all men know that you are my disciples, if you have love one for another." "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man should lay down his life for his friends; and ye are my friends, if you do whatsoever I command you;" and, "if I your Lord and Master have washed your feet, you ought also to wash one another's feet; for I have given you an example, that you should do as I have done to you.—For, the servant is not greater than his Lord; neither he that is sent, greater than he that sent him;" therefore teach them to observe these things, which I have commanded you, remembering the words which I said unto you, that the servant is not greater than his Lord. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." "Again it is given, that man shall not live by bread alone; but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God." "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not, shall be likewise unto a foolish man that built his house upon the sand; and the rains decended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house, and it fell; and great was the fall of it." "But if you continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and you shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—It shall come to pass, when the Holy Ghost shall come upon you, whom I will send in my Father's name, that he shall guide you into all truth, and bring all things to your remembrance. Then shall you be witnesses of me in Jerusalem, in Judea, in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth;" for, "this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." "Behold, I told you." "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you;" but, "if any man shall add anything to the sayings of the prophecy of this book, God shall add to him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any shall take away from the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and from the holy city, and from the New Jerusalem;" because, whosoever shall break one of the least of these my commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven; but he that shall do and teach them, shall be called great in the kingdom."

I have herein given a brief sketch in Scriptural quotations, of the system of religion instituted by the great head of the church, and given to his Apostles to be handed down to all generations succeeding them; and have also shown that they were under imperative obligations to teach just what they were commanded: no more, or no less, without any addition or subtraction, under the penalty of having the plagues which were spoken of in the book, visited upon them, or their names taken out of the book of life.

The questions then arise, 1st, did they teach then? 2nd. If so, were they essential to salvation? 3rd. If not, what part of them were dispensable? 4th. How are we to determine that matter? 5th. Where are we to go for information upon the subject?

In answer to these questions I would say, 1st. They did; 2nd. They were; 3rd. None; 4th. Impossible; 5th. By the standard of eternal truth.

And now, in conclusion I would say to you, my dear friend Davis, that I have endeavored to keep my promise with you to write you a letter when I got home and had opportunity.

After I left North Carolina, I stoped with the brethren in Johnson county, where we had one meeting, when I again resumed my Journey towards home. I stopped at Dr. A. L. Crosswhite's, stayed over night with him, and next morning, as it was still raining, and he fearing that the River would be past fording, came with us that far, in order to see us safely over, if so be we could cross. We had to swim our horses, and cross ourselves in the canoe; but we had no misfortune in so doing.—We arrived home the same day, and found all well. I know not at present when I can visit you again; in fact I could not respond to one tenth of the urgent calls which I am constantly recieving from various parts of the country, even were I enjoying the best of health, much less in my present state of health. Truly it does seem that the harvest is great and the laborers few.

Hoping to hear from you soon.

I remain &c.

JESSE CROSSWHITE.

Queries.

I desire to know from what authority the brethren obtained the practice of standing up when they preach, as we cannot learn of our Savior ever standing up when he preached, but always sat.

"And when he was set, his disciples came unto him, and he opened his mouth and taught them." Matb. 5: 1, 2. "I sat daily with you, teaching in the temple." Math. 26: 55. "And he closed the book, and gave it again to the minister, and sat down, and he began to say unto them" Luke 4: 20, 21. "And he sat down and taught the people out of the ship." Luke 5: 3. "And early in the morning he came again into the tempel, and all the people came unto him, and he sat down, and taught them." John 8: 1.

A. CRUMPACKER.

Dear Companion: I this day seat myself to pen a few lines for your columns. I often read the Companion, and with much pleasure. I love to hear from those I love so well. I often think of my dear brethren and sisters, and kind relatives that are scattered over the world. How I would like to see them. I often wonder whether we shall all meet in heaven, there to praise God forever. Dear bretheren and sisters, I write this to let you know that I am alive and trying to serve God, and I hope and trust it is the same with you. I am left alone a great deal. I said left alone,oh, no, not left alone, for my God is with me. I can converse with him during the day, and at night give myself and family into his care and ask him to keep us all safe through the night. Though weak in body, yet strong in faith. Though surrounded with many difficulties, troubles, and disappointments, on every side, God has promised to be with his people in six troubles, and in the seventh, will not forsake them. So let us all put our trust in him, and bear our cross with patience.

Though my days are dark with trouble,
And my heart is filled with fear,
There is one that sees me ever,
And will hold me ever dear.

Cheerful hearts and smiling faces,
Ofttimes make me happy here;
Yet none was e'er so happy,
But sometimes dark clouds appear.

There is a friend that is ever near. Never fear.

Farewell.

SOPHIA LOAR.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Near Burnettsville, Ind., sister ELIZABETH REIF, wife of Christian H. Reif, formerly from Union Co., Pa.; aged 68 years 3 months and 3 days.

About three weeks previous to her death, she took a very severe pain in her right foot, from which she suffered much. Ten days before she died, she lost the use of her left hand and foot from palsy. The pain in her right foot, which proved to be Dry Mortification, continued until she died.

On the 22nd of April, she realized her ardent desire to die, and on the 23d, her husband, seven of their children, and others, followed her remains to the place of interment.

The Great Remedy.

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and sells readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. Fahrney, No 30, North Dearborn St. Chicago, Illinois, or

To Nebraska, California, and Kansas, and the B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The "Burlington Route," as called, lies right in the path of the Star of Empire. It runs almost immediately in the center of the great westward movement of emigration. Crossing Illinois and Iowa, it strikes the Missouri river at three points.

These three points are the gateways into three great sections of the trans-Missouri region.

The Northern gate is Omaha, where the great Pacific road will take you to the land of gold and grapes, sunny mountains, and perpetual summer.

The middle gate is Plattsmouth, which opens upon the south half of Nebraska, south of the Platte river, a region unsurpassed on the continent for agriculture and grazing. Just here are the B. & M. Railroad lands, concerning which Geo. S. Harris, the land officer at Burlington, Iowa, can give you all information, and in the heart of them is Lincoln, the State Capital and present terminus of the road.

The Southern gate leads to Kansas, by connections with the St. Joe Road at Hamburg running direct to St. Joe and Kansas City

The trains of the Burlington run smoothlyq and safely, and make all connections. It runs the best of coaches, Pullman Palace and Pullman dining cars, and should you take the journey for the journey's sake alone, you will be repaid: or take it to find a home or a farm, and you cannot find either better than among the B. & M. lands, where you can buy on ten years' credit, and at a low price.

THE
Christian Family Companion
Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

*Prayer and Potatoes.

A SERMON BY J. T. PETTEE.

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them: Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful for the body; what doth it profit?—James ii: 15, 16.

An old lady sat in her old arm-chair
With wrinkled visage and disheveled hair,
And hunger-worn features;
For days and for weeks her only fare,
As she sat there in her old arm chair,
Had been potatoes.

But now they were gone; of bad or good
Not one was left for the old lady's food
Of those potatoes;
And she sighed and said, "What shall I do?
Where shall I send, and to whom shall I go
For more potatoes?"

And she thought of the deacon over the way,
The deacon so ready to worship and pray,
Whose cellar was full of potatoes,
And she said: "I will send for the deacon to come;
He'll not mind much to give me some
Of such a store of potatoes."

And the deacon came over as fast as he could,
Thinking to do the old lady some good,
But never for once thought of potatoes:
He asked her at once what was her chief want,
And she, simple soul, expecting a grant,
Immediately answered "Potatoes."

But the deacon's religion didn't lie that way,
He was more accustomed to preach and to pray,
Than to give of his hoarded potatoes:
So, not hearing, of course, what the old lady said,
He rose to pray, with uncovered head,
But she only thought of potatoes.

He prayed for patience, and wisdom, and grace,
But when he prayed "Lord give her peace,"
She audibly sighed, "Give potatoes;"
And at the end of each prayer which he said,
He heard, or thought that he had heard in its stead,
The same request for potatoes.

The deacon was troubled; knew not what to do;
Twas very embarrassing to have her act so
About "those carnal potatoes."
So, ending his prayer, he started for home;
But, as the door closed behind him, he heard a deep groan,
"O, give to the hungry potatoes!"

And that groan followed him all the way home;
In the midst of the night it haunted his room—
"O, give to the hungry potatoes!"
He could bear it no longer; arose and dressed;
From his well-filled cellar taking in haste
A bag of his best potatoes.

Again he went to the widow's lone hut;
Her sleepless eyes she had not yet shut;
But there she sat in that old arm-chair,
With the same wan features, the same sad air,
And, entering in, he poured on the floor
A bushel or more from his goodly store
Of choicest potatoes.

The widow's heart leaped up for joy;
Her face was haggard and wan no more.
"Now," said the deacon, "shall we pray?"
"Yes," said the widow, "now you may."
And he kneeled him down on the sanded floor,
Where he had poured his goodly store,
And such a prayer the deacon prayed
As never before his lips essayed;
No longer embarrassed, but free and full,
He poured out the voice of a liberal soul,
And the widow responded aloud "amen!"
But said no more of potatoes.

And would you, who hear this simple tale,
Pray for the poor, and praying, "Prevail,"
Then preface your prayers with alms and good deeds:
Search out the poor, their wants and their needs:
Pray for peace, and grace, and spiritual food,
For wisdom, and guidance, for all these are good,
But don't forget the potatoes.

Meriden, Ct., 1871.

Of this poem—a fragment of a charity sermon, preached in Dorchester, Mass., some twelve or fourteen years ago—John G. Whittier wrote: "It is more valuable than some poems I am not sure but it is more to the Master's purpose than any hymn of the sanctuary which has been published since it was written."

SIN produces fear, fear leads unto bondage and bondage makes all our duties irksome.

For the COMPANION.

Peace, Peace.

"Blessed are the peace-makers; for they shall be called the children of God." Matth. 5; 9.

Peace is a quality that highly adorns the followers of Jesus, and makes pleasant the home of the weary pilgrim. It is a pleasant, a delightful ornament of the christian—a native of the celestial clime: it is a product of the Spirit. Peace, is one of the parting blessings which Jesus breathed upon his disciples: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." Therefore we are commanded, "be at peace among yourselves;" Seek peace and ensue it;" "As much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men."

Oh, how pleasant to parents, when their children are agreable: when brothers and sisters dwell together in unity and peace! Cheering, it is to children, when father and mother set a good example of union and peace before them! Most delightful and encouraging it is, when we meet to labor in the church of God, and find peace prevalant among all the members!

"The end of the upright man is peace." Surely, those who have traced the foot-prints of the Savior, the "Prince of Peace," need not fear the darkness of the shadow of death; for the Lord will be with them: his rod and his staff shall comfort them. "Blessed are the peace-makers."

Brethren, inasmuch as war has been declared against the excessive use of tobacco, and some of my beloved brethren, (who, like myself make use of the weed), have expressed great dissatisfaction against the course pursued by the press in trying to subdue the evil—have taken up their weapon (the pen) in defence of the enemy, to fight against a good cause, I, therefore appear before you, beloved brethren of both parties, as an embassador for peace. "Behold! are we not all brethren?" Now therefore do you, I pray, cease the discussion of the subject in question; and, instead of an armistice of 60 days, let us have continual peace; or at least 5 times 60, and 65 days.

We acknowledge that the excessive use of tobacco is a great evil; and we will endeavor to suppress the same by portraying to our children its consequences in their darkest colors. And now if my petition is not accepted, and the subject shall and must be continued. let it be, I beseech you, beloved brethren, mild, by reasoning together in the spirit of meekness.

To my beloved brethren who are addicted to the habit of using tobacco I would further say: Be not offended at any thing that has been written upon the subject; but let us, if possible, profit by it. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he recieveth. Now no chastisement for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." Now, therefore, having been chastened and scourged, let us not grieve and fret over it.—"Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin;" yet some of us have withdrawn our helping hand from a good cause.

Pray, let us reflect seriously upon our cause of conduct, that we cast not our influence in favor of evil. Did not the Editor of the Companion exert his influence in our behalf at the last A. M., at Waterloo? Was brother Holsinger to blame in that the tobacco question was brought up at conference? Or is he to be censured even now, in this, that this question is discussed through the Companion? We answer in the negative. Why then such unkindness in withdrawing our helping had from introducing our periodical (the C. F. C.) into every family? I advise every brother who has refused to act in the capacity in which he has heretofore, and render assistance to the interest of our paper. I say "Our paper," because the Companion is the only paper through which we brethren can pass sentiments freely. It is the best medium, in my estimation, by which to form one anothers acquaintance, instruct and encourage one another on our pilgrimage journey.

The Companion is designed to advocate primitive christianity. If we undertake to accomplish this great work either by the press, or from the stand, we must expect to meet with opposition. Let us remember then, brethren, we are soldiers of King Jesus; we have a warfare to wage against sin; the Companion affords us a favorable opportunity of so doing, and far less expensive than any other to my knowledge. In conclusion we invite all who may chance to read this epistle: Come to our help—to our help against the enemy. Lay your shoulders to the wheel, your hand to the pen, and help to extend to all the world the Ark of the Covenant of Peace, by soliciting subscribers for the Companion, and sending on for publication your essays of truth with meekness.

I have intimated in the above, that I also make use of tobacco. I do; but will here give an explanation. I have ever, for the last eighteen years, kept it in my house, principally, however, for medical purposes, and to accomodate those of my friends, neighbors, and brethren who come to see us, and would wish to make use of the pipe while at our house. ("To the weak became I as weak." 1 Cor. 9: 22.) I have also a pipe which I occasionly lay hold to. Temperance, however, has always been strictly adhered to; so that from three to five cents worth of tobacco, yearly, has ever been sufficient for all purposes. If temperance were observed by the members of our fraternity, there would be no occasion to stain the columns of our beautiful "Companion" with the ugly, black word, "TOBACCO." Under existing circumstances, however, we deem it just and proper, that occasionally there be some scourging and scoring. There has been sufficient of this for the present time, in my estimation. More at present would be scoring too deep, and would be unprofitable. After scoring, the broad axe is generally applied; which makes scoring profitable, and the timber fit for use. This is intended by this communication. In hewing, as well as in scoring, it is necessary occasionly to strike pretty severe blows; (which you percieve is also the case in this note, yet no offence is intended.) I am no friend of tobacco, but am a friend to those who use it; and as a friend advise every one that uses the weed to excess, to reflect for a few moments upon this very important question: Is not the habit of using tobacco one of the most useless and disgustful practices that people have fallen into? And yet there is no other, perhaps, so much indulged in as this.

No later than last Sabbath, (the second sabbath of the present year,) being assembled for worship, we sat by the side of an individual, (not a brother,) who, before the services were ended, had before him a puddle of tobacco spit of about four feet in circumference. Horrible sight! thought I. Brethren and sisters, you that are in the habit of using the weed to excess, allow me to appeal to your modesty and better judgment. I ask you once more to reflect for a moment upon this very important subject, and you may know at once, that it is very disagreeable—very unpleasant, for those of your dear brethren and sisters who do not use the weed at all, to engage with you in our common salvation. This do then, I beg of you, (if you can do no better,) leave your pipe and plug at home when you come to worship the Lord in the public assembly. Do it for your own good and for the sake of your brethren and sisters, that you may avoid offence. Brother Paul says: "If meat maketh my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth." 1 Cor. 8: 13. And the Savior says: "Woe unto that man by whom the offence cometh."

Freemasonry vs. Christianity.

LYMAN WHITING furnishes to the Chicago Advance an account of the burial of the deacon of a city in the West, under Masonic auspicies. He says:

The "Order" appeared splendidly. The pastor, after years of intimacy, brother deacons, old and tried brethren and sisters might get in—come into line, as they could. No place whatever was made for them. The grave was near the gate of the cemetry. The swords and aprons filled the way so that most of those behind them halted "without the gate." A strange, mumbled recitation was heard while and after the coffin was lowered—but not a word from pastor or any Christian friend. A pert young man read the Christless burial service; literally Christless, the name Christ, or Jesus, not allowed in it; "for," said an M. E. minister, a member of the "Order," on the way back from the grave, "for regard to Jews who are Masons, and hold that name in such abhorrence." So a man professing Christ, ministering at a communion-table for forty years and more, buried from the house of God, where all his life had been spent, is laid to his rest by heathen-like ceremony, which is not allowed to have one mention of Jesus Christ, his Redeemer and hope in the resurrection

Children of God by Faith.

"Ye are children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."

My dear brethren and sisters, and especially those who are faithless, if you will bear with me, I will, in my humble capacity, make an effort to define, in my illiterate way, the living principle of faith, in close connection with obedience; as upon this subject hinges our final redemption. In the common acceptation of the term faith, its signification is, verily, in truth, firm to the truth, loyal, upright; in its Scriptural sense, "The substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." In either capacity, when properly employed, it results in efficacies desirable in their character; especially so in the divine sense, having attributes attached, holy and sanctifying in essence. In its worldly aspect, it is a ruling power, that wields a powerful influence in shaping our desires and in satisfying nature's necessities. It is by faith, we place implicit confidence upon our fellow-man, in securing to us the possession of the things we may desire at his hands, whether it be a mutuality of good will and fellowship, or any especial or coveted favour, pertaining to our worldly comfort.—But our confidence is made to rest only securely upon our faith in the genuineness of the proffered assistance; otherwise we could not accept of it in a positive and believing sense. In its divine attributes it assumes an infinately higher and holier character; leading to results most beneficial, as well as triumphant, in their attainments, satisfying the spiritual desires of the soul—a motive power propelling us forward in obedience to God's holy will, so that we may lose our hopes, that they may rest upon the sure foundation stone, that he be not a stumbling stone or rock of offence, set at nought by the builders. By faith we rely upon his being the Chief Corner Stone or the great Head of the corner. By faith we believe that the Scriptures are the revealed will of God; and that the hope contained therein, flowing from obedience to the divine will, is able to save our souls from eternal death. By faith it is that we believe that God exists and has become the Mediator of a new and better covenant. By faith we believe that by one offering he has perfected forever them that are sanctified through the truth; for we have his declaration from the mouth of the prophets and apostles, "This is the covenant I will make with them after those days: I will put my laws into their hearts; and in their minds will I write them; and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." It is evident that nothing but a living faith can effect this for us. The Law made nothing perfect; but the bringing in of a better hope did; for as many as are under the law are under the curse, for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, is evident; for the just shall live by faith. Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ: by whom also we have access, by faith, into the grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in the hope of the Glory of God." Do you not see how all those trusts harmonize? Ye are all children of God by faith in Christ Jesus? Do you remember the rebuke Paul gave his Gallatian brethren, who retained too much of the works of the law to satisfy the demands of Christ, under the law of grace obtained through faith? "O foolish Gallations! who hath bewitched you that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ has been evidently set forth, crucified among you? This only would I learn of you: received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?" "Faith cometh by hearing; and hearing by the Word of God." See how the truth chimes in sweet accord: the just shall live by faith—for we walk by faith, and not by sight. "For we are saved by hope; but hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we through faith hope for that we see not, then we with patience wait for it."

Having attained access, by faith, into the grace of God, we glory in tribulation; because we are admonished of the fact, that "tribulation worketh patience, and patience, experience, and experience, hope, and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us." "Repent and be baptized * * * for the remission of your sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do; then, when we are led thus far by a live, acting faith, into obedience to the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, we have the assurance that all these virtues and Christian graces will flow upon a life truly devoted to God's service; looking with an eye of faith, single to the advancement of our spiritual good and his glory, do we but accept the proffered terms of mercy, flowing from the saving efficacies of his power, in and through the merits and mediation of Christ our Redeemer.

But we discover, in an especial sense, two kinds of faith in the world: one an abstract faith; and the other a live, acting faith. By an abstract faith, we mean, a faith without works, being dead. We may believe there is a God; that we have had his substance manifested in the flesh; that he died that we through him might live. This being as far as our faith extends, we do not make the application of his atoning blood to our souls, hence we conceive that he has not really become our Savior, except in a prospective sense: not virtually so; because our faith having not yet lead us to obedience to his divine will, we are yet without hope of eternal life in the world; for he, being made perfect, has, by virtue of that great truth, become the Author of eternal salvation to all who obey him; for by one offering, Jesus Christ, himself the great Sacrifice, hath perfected forever them that are sanctified. How then are we sanctified? Why, through the truth as it is in him: "My word is spirit and my word is truth." Hence we infer that the direct opposite would be, that his authority in a saving sense, does not extend to those who do not obey him. Purify yourselves in obeying the truth, whilst the things pertaining to our spiritual necessities, are spiritually discerned. Yet we must necessarily examine the teachings of Christ in a philosophical point of view, in order to the affirmative and negative sense, as applicable to us in our saved or unsaved condition. "For as many as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." This a postive and imperative demand, from which we justly conceive the opposite to be, "for as many as have been baptized into Christ, have not put on Christ."—Our conclusions are based upon a having faith in Christ and his redemptive plan of salvation. Obeying from the heart, through faith, that form of doctrine once delivered to the saints, we can claim peace with God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

But to be more specific upon the principles of an abstract or living faith, we refer you to James, who defines the matter more closely than I can do. "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him?" Nay, verily. "Yea, a man may say, thou hast faith, and I have works; shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works."

We now refer you more especially to that abstract faith, to which I have already referred; in which James comes to my relief. "Thou believest there is a God; thou doest well: the devils also believe and tremble. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?" We will perceive that something is required to perfect our faith: Was not Abraham justified by works in offering up his son Isaac? Can you not see how faith wrought with his works, and by his works was his faith made perfect? Not that we should boast of any works that we may do; for it is the gift of God through Christ our Lord. It is then evidently through faith, in obedience to the divine will, that we become partakers of the promises. "Ye are all children of God by faith in Christ Jesus;—hence it is indespensibly requisite in the great plan of redemption, that by faith, and through faith only, can we attain to that perfection necessary to qualify us for heaven; therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom also we have access by faith into this grace which is the gift of God wherein we stand, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God.

Now my dear faithless and unconverted friends, if this be the glorious result of implicit faith in Christ, is it not worth attaining to? You who have a hell to shun and a heaven to gain, you who are perhaps risking your eternal salvation upon a dead faith, you who have not made an application of the cleansing blood of Jesus Christ to wash away the stains from your poor, perishing souls. You who have not accepted his Redeemership in an actual sense, but only in an abstract capacity, why yet delay? The time is short. Remember the anxiety of Zaccheous, who climbed the Sycamore tree in order to see Christ as he passed by. Have you do anxiety to see him? Will you let him pass by you without an invitation to abide with you? Will you evade the significant appeal he made unto Zaccheous as he looked up, beheld him, and said: "Make haste and come down, for to-day I must iabde at thy house?" He did make haste and came down, and received him joyfully. The murmuring that was heard in the crowd, that he was gone to be a guest with a man that was a sinner, had no influence upon Jesus; for we hear him exclaim, "This day salvation is come to this house; for the Son of man is come to seek and save that which is lost; for I come not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." So perhaps he has been passing by, and calling upon you these many days; but instead of coming down, bowing in humble submission to his holy will, you turn a deaf ear to that pleading voice, and still ascend higher and higher in the scale of sin and iniquity, until, perhaps your sins have become as scarlet. No faith, and without hope in the world. When such a small portion is only required to make thee whole, can you not touch the hem of his garment as did that faithful woman, when he perceived virtue had gone out of him; he has a rich storehouse of mercy for you, if you only make the demand upon the virtuous efficacies in which he abounds, which is as illimitable to day as it was 1800 years ago, he is the great Physician of souls; his prescriptions have the same healing influence; he is ever ready to apply the balm of Gilead to your sin sick souls. I will put my laws in their hearts and in their hands will I write them, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." What a refreshing assurance to calm the most disturbed soul, seeking peace through a crucified Redeemer, who took upon himself the form of sinful flesh, in order to condemn sin in the flesh, that our souls may be purified in obeying the truth as it is in him.

Sinner, come lay your claim at the feet of Jesus, that ye may, through that living faith, become partakers of the blessed promises vouchsafed unto us through His meritorious attonement; when you can clearly and in a saving sense, exclaim, He has become my Savior indeed, Verily and in truth; my faith has made me whole!

Come freely, come, by sin oppressed,
On Jesus cast thy weighty load,
In Him thy Refuge, find thy rest,
Safe in the mercy of that God.

Thy God's thy Savior; glorious word!
O hear, believe and bless the Lord.

P. S. N.

For the COMPANION.

The Mind of Christ.

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." Phil. 2: 5.

Whoever takes a view of Christianity as displayed in the precepts and examples of Christ, its great Founder, must acknowledge it to be a very lovely religion, admirably calculated to promote the happiness of man in the present world, as well as to secure his eternal salvation in the next. "It is a faithful saying, and worthy of acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners;" to save them from their sins, not only to deliver them from the wrath to come, which is the wages of sin, but also to restore in them the holy image of God, which they had lost by their fall in Adam. He came not only to restrain the practice of sin, but to purify the fountain of the heart, from whence the streams of sinful practices proceed.

To affect these great designs, he became a sacrifice for sin; he was made sin for us; he died for our sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God. He procured for us and sent down to us the Holy Spirit, the great sanctifier of the Church. And having given to the world the purest precepts that were ever delivered, he gave infinite force to them by a perfect example of purity in his own temper and walk, and has left us this example for our imitation.

All true Christians are followers of Christ; they must walk even as he walked, and in order to do this, they must possess the same holy temper, or as it is expressed in the text, the same mind must be in them, which was in Christ Jesus. This mind or disposition is the subject of the discourse. May the good Spirit of God explain it to us, and produce in us. We might express the whole in a single word. Love is the mind of Christ, for God is love; the whole law is fulfilled in love. Love to God, and love to man; this filled the heart of the great Redeemer, actuated him in the whole of his obedience and sufferings, supported him under them, and rendered them acceptable, meritorious, and efficacious to the salvation of the church. This is the mind that was in Christ; this his prevailing disposition; and the principle part of our holiness consists in being like him, and living under the daily influence of love to God and love to man. But it is necessary to be more particular, and to consider the Christian temper in its several branches.

First, Humility; second, Piety; third, Spirituality; fourth, Contentment.

Humility. This deserves the first place, both because it is that grace in Christ to which the text refers, and because it is in every believer the root of all other graces. Wonderful indeed, was the humility of the Son of God, "Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, but made himself of no reputation and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men, and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross!" Behold here the greatest example of humility that the world ever saw, or ever will see, and this example is proposed to our invitation. And what argument can be so forcible? for shall the glorious Savior be humble and the miserable sinner be proud? How preposterous, how absurd!—Pride is natural to apostate man. It was a principle ingredient in the sin of Adam, and every child of his is born proud. Adam got it from the devil, and we get it from Adam. And yet it is truly said, "pride was not made for man; it ill becomes him."—For a sinner to be proud, is the most monstrous thing in the world. Nothing is so hateful to God; and if we are born of God, nothing will be so hateful to us. Now faith lays the axe at the root of pride. Faith beholds the majesty and holiness of God, and shrinks as it were into nothing before him. The proud man swells by comparing himself with other sinners, but the Christian compares himself, his conduct, and then his heart, with the most pure, holy, spiritual law of God; this prevents self-righteous boasting, and shows that even his best duties are tinged with sin. He was alive without the law once, but now the commandment is come, sin revives and he dies. This experience will force him to the cross; he will gladly renounce his own works and righteousness, and supremely desire to be found in Christ. Let the Christian but think of three things, and it will promote his humility: what he was, what he is, and what he shall be.—He was a poor, blind, naked, filthy rebel; an enemy to God and an heir of hell. He is by grace a pardoned sinner and an adopted child; but O, what imperfections in all his graces! What defects in all his duties! What strength in his corruptions! What a disproportion between his obligations, and his returns to God; between his profession and his practice; between his privileges and his enjoyments. So that he can cordially unite with a better man than himself, in saying, "I am the chief of sinners, and less than the least of all saints."

Let him also consider What he shall be; he shall be with Christ, he shall be like Christ, he shall wear a crown of glory, he shall possess a heavenly inheritance, he shall be a king and priest to God. Amazing prospects! animating, yet humbling hopes; he will then with David sit down and say, "Who am I, O Lord God that thou hast brought me hitherto: and as if this were a small thing in thy sight, thou hast spoken of thy servant's house, for a great while yet to come; and is this the manner of men, O Lord? and what more can David say unto thee?"

Second, Piety. "Or the fear of God," or Godliness was an eminent branch of the mind, that was in the man Christ Jesus. These terms are nearly of the same import, and denote the habitual prevailing frame of mind in its regard to the blessed God. It is the character of the natural man, that he is ungodly; there is no fear of God before his eyes; he lives without God in the world; he is alienated from the life of God; he says to the Almighty, Depart from me.

The very reverse of all this is the temper of the Christian, as it was also of his Master. We learn from the Gospel, and more abundantly from the Psalms, what a spirit of devotion continually animated the human nature of Christ! What reverential fear, what supreme affections, what lively zeal, what fervent prayer! A portion of the same spirit pervades the heart of every real Christian.—The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," and the whole duty of man, his great duty, his first interest, his chief delight. And this divine principle, is implanted in every believer. "I will put my fear in their heart," is the grand covenant promise and is fulfilled to every elect soul, when called by grace. The new born soul turns naturally to God as flowers to the sun, or the needle to the pole; and though it may be disturbed or diverted for a time, the heavenly principle within, abides and prevails, and the Christian is constrained to say: "Return to thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee." The spirit of piety, will render those acts of religion which were intolerably burdensome to the unconverted man, natural and pleasant. Religion is no longer his medicine, but his food; not his task, but his delight. And the fear of God will certainly produce reverence for his name; the Christian cannot habitually take in vain, in the light manner of the world, the great and fearful name of the Lord his God. And this principle will insure his sacred regard to the holy Sabbath, the Bible, the house of God, the preached Gospel, the table of the Lord, and every means divinely appointed for his growth in grace.

Third. Spirituality is another essential part of the Christian temper. This is a necessary effect of regeneration; for as that which is born of the flesh is flesh, so that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit. Every nature generates its own likeness. We derive from our first parent the likeness of his apostate nature, earthly and sensual, not having the spirit; but if begotten again by the Holy Ghost, we derive from a nature that is spiritual. Natural men mind earthly things; they understand, pursue, and relish only things of a worldly nature, while the things of the Spirit of God are foolishness to them; but the believer, being born from above minds heavenly things, and sets his affections supremely on things above, and not on things below. This constitutes the grand difference between the children of this world, and the children of God, and our future distinction will be accordingly; for to be carnally minded is death, but to be Spiritually minded is life and peace. While we are in the world, a due regard must be paid to our worldly callings; for religion, so far from encouraging sloth and idleness, requires us to be diligent in business; but it requires us also to be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.

The things of this world, however great and important, in some views, will be considered in the light of eternity, as empty bubbles, insignificant trifles, and childish toys. The Christian weighs everything in the balance of eternity. He considers what their value be when he is on a dying bed, and judges how far they may be conducive to his everlasting interest, for he walks by faith, not by sight. Besides he is crucified to the world, and the world to him, by the cross of Christ. Our gracious Lord never discovered any taste or relish for the pomps and vanities of this world.—As Lord of all, he could have commanded everything that was noble and great. But it is evident that he poured contempt on worldly grandure. His whole life, death, and doctrine, tended to stain the pride of human glory, and to sanctify to his humble followers, that lovely state he intended for them. Luxury of living, gayety of dress, and conformity to the vain world, can plead no countenance from the example of Christ; but self-denial, plainness of living, and manners; deadness to the world, and heavenly mindedness, are the very mind that was in Christ, and will be in us if we are his genuine followers.

Fourth. Contentment is another feature of the Christian character.—And this will result in a happy degree from Spirituality and heavenly-mindedness. A proper view by faith of eternal things, and a good hope by grace of, and interest in them, will occasion a holy indifference about worldly matters, and render us content with our present lot. Of old times, those persons took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, who knew in themselves, that they had in heaven a better and more enduring substance. Heb. 10: 34. The way to be happy in this world, is not to elevate our station to our mind. The first is perhaps impossible; for the ambitious mind of the prosperous man continues to rise with his lot. So that he is never satisfied. The last may, by divine grace, be accomplished. The Christian believes that God reigns, that his providence is universal, that a sparrow does not fall to the ground without his observation, and that the very hairs of his head are numbered. and if so, he has reason to conclude that a special, and most gracious providence, presides over all his affairs. The believer, therefore, having committed all his concerns to the Lord's care, in the diligent and prudent use of means, will rest satisfied with the disposal of heaven. He will say, it is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good.

We are led to expect trouble in the world; man being born in sin, is born to trouble, and instead of wandering that things are so bad, we have reason to wonder that they are no worse. He who knows the evil of sin, and the plague of his own heart, will say at the worst of times, he hath not dealt with me according to my sins, nor rewarded me according to my iniquities. Besides there is generally some cause for praise.

> Here is mercy in every place!
> And mercy, encouraging thought,
> Give even affliction a grace,
> And reconciles man to his lot.

Thrice happy was the Apostle Paul who could say, I have learned in whatsoever state I am, there with to be content. I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound every where, and in all things, I am instructed, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. Should you think this is a difficult lesson, and that in certain cases you could not practice it, mark what follows: I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me. Phil. 4: 11—13. St. Paul, in himself, was as weak as another man; but he had learned to live upon Christ, and by faith to receive out of his fulness, grace for grace. Every believer may do the same. And let him remember this patient temper is the mind that was in Christ.—Through a whole life of poverty and sufferings here, we read not of a single murmur; and when in his agony the bitterest cup that ever was mingled, was put into his hands, he said: "The cup which my Father giveth me to drink, shall I not drink of it. Not my will but thine be done."

May God help us ever to conduct ourselves in the mind of Christ, is my prayer. Amen.

Jesus Wept.

Jesus wept over the woes of a single city, and do you think that he never wept over the woes of a world? He wept in public, where he would certainly restrain his feelings as much as possible and do you think he never wept in secret? Could we lift the sacred veil of his solitary hours; of his seasons of retirement, while an obscure workman of Nazareth; of his forty days' fasting and prayer in the wilderness; of his vigils on the mountain tops and in the deserts—what prayers, what intercessions, what tears, what tender and heavenly sympathies with the sorrows and woes of humanity, would come to light! His affections were not limited to Judea; he did not love those merely who loved him. He wept at the grave of Lazarus, and over the distress of Martha and Mary and why not over the great congregation of the dead of more than a hundred and thirty generations past, and over all the broken hearts of widows and starving orphans from the beginning of the world? Why not over the distress of all the sick, the delirium of the deranged, the agonies of the dying? Do you now see why he went about with restless assidity to console, to comfort, to bind up broken hearts, raising their dead, curing and cleansing and restoring men to the enjoyment of health, sight, hearing, and reason? How could he do otherwise, with a heart like his? He would have done so, though no man had believed it him on that account, or returned to him a grateful word or look.

It may be justly said that the pride that shapes humility is the most objectionable, as in addition to the bad qualities inherent in a false unfounded estimate of self, it supercedes that of hypocrisy—and no combination can be more odious than that of hypocrisy with pride.

—"That you believe you have a call to preach, is all very well, as far as it goes," said an old doctor of divinity to a theological student; "but," he added, "we must wait and see whether people think they have a call to hear you,

Remarks on Baptism.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—Matth. 28: 19.

Being but a babe in the cause of Jesus, I do not endeavor to expand all the ideas involved in the above subject; nor would I presume to teach those who are by far my superiors in the divine. I shall try, however, to give a brief synopsis of the subject; and should anything be written that is erroneous, or that does not harmonize with the teachings of Jesus, I am quite willing to be taught more perfectly.

The subject of Christian baptism is one that is greatly contested by many learned men of the world; and while it is so eloquently debated by learned men of other denominations in regard to its significations, we have come to the conclusion, that many of our friendly competitors have lost a little sight of the literal meaning of the language, as recorded in the 28th chapter of Matthew's Gospel, 15th verse.

Before I enter into an examination of the subject, I would entreat the reader not to pass over baptism without giving it a due weight of serious reflections. It is a subject that deeply concerns the everlasting welfare of our souls. Christian baptism being an ordinance of high heaven, is not to be treated with contempt. Greater honor and glory was never conferred on any rite, or any command of the infinite Jehovah, than was on this sacred ordinance, when the immaculate Son of the Most High was baptized in the pure crystal waters of the Jordon. There is no sight within the pale of creation, equal in grandeurous beauty and holiness, to that of baptizing him, who, in the majesty of his power, triumphed over the grave, death and hell, and is now set down at the right hand of the Father, there interceeding for the reconciliation of poor sinners. Yes, so great was the joy at the time of the Savior's baptism, that the very heavens could not hold their peace, but had to break forth in the soul cheering words "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Oh! what mode, the Father so willing to verify the baptism of his Son? was it because of sin or disobedience? No, no. I will tell you the secret of it all; it was because of implicit obedience that the Spirit hovered about in the "bodily shape of a dove." And depend upon it, my dear reader, that, if you wish to be emancipated from the bondage of sin, and become an adopted son of God, you must follow the eternal I AM, into the sparkling waters, to be buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead, even so we also should walk in newness of life. Rom. 5: 4.

The man who makes the profession of orthodoxy, and has the audacity and presumptuous arrogants to invalidate baptism, or any other of the divine behest, is threefold worse than an infidel; and will not alone incur the displeasure of the Almighty, but will ultimately became guilty of the fearful and condemning sin, as described in Revelation. Oh! how lost and undone will those poor ministers feel, who positively assert the nonessentiality of the divine commands, when they will be summonsed by the trump of God to come forth and hear the dreadful denunciation, "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity." Fearful valediction upon those who deviate from the Scriptures of divine truths! O ye ministers, you who are standing upon the walls of Zion to declare the glad tidings of salvation, be not afraid nor ashamed to declare the whole council of God; but go forward in the discharge of your official capacity.

The time when our Lord and Savior assigned to the disciples their appropriate duties, when they had communed in the mountain which he had appointed, and when he sent them forth to visit all nations with the day-spring from on high, and a knowledge of the everlasting Gospel, the following edict went forth: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

You will observe the above paragraph is addressed with an ellipsis.—This we shall endeavor to explain in a kind of home-like, practicable manner. It is evident, according to the scrutinizing principles of our language, that name can only belong to and be modified by Father; consequently it is an elliptical sentence.—The words Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, being joined by the conjunction copulations, accompanied with preposition "of" and the definite article "the," and name being placed in the singular number, can only belong to and be modified by Father. What is it, then, that belongs to, and is modified by Son? It is name in the singular, which must be supplied that belongs to, and is modified by Son, likewise, name also before Holy Ghost. Hence it is an elliptical sentence; and the believer to fill the holy injunction, should be baptized and in each separate name of the Holy Trinity. For an illustration see Luke 23: 38.

We will make a few remarks on the arrangement of the language of the apostolic commission. It must be acknowledged by all unbiased grammarians, that, according to the grammatical construction of this commission, it requires three actions; also it must be admitted to be elliptical; and if the ellipsis were supplied, it would read, "baptizing them in the name of the Father, and baptizing them in the name of the Son, and baptizing them in the name of the Holy Ghost."

Now reasoning from these premises, I would promise a few particulars relating to baptism. If we were commanded to be baptised in the name of the Father, not mentioning the Son or Holy Ghost, would it not require an action? And suppose we were commanded to be baptized in the name of the Son, not saying anything about the Father or Holy Ghost, would it not require an action? And if we were commanded to be baptized in the name of the Holy Ghost not meaning the Father or Son, would it not require an action? But we are commanded to be baptized in each of these names; and therefore does it not require three actions? Because being baptized into one of these names constitutes one; and being baptized into three, constitutes three actions. From the above phraseology we infer that it requires the candidate to be immersed taree times; for if once you must read the noun "name" in the commission names, which would ultimately destroy the ellipsis, and in that case according to the genius of the English Language, it would require but one action. But unfortunately for those who practice single immersion, we are compelled to say that it is wrong, utterly wrong, to baptize by immersion, but once in the Trinity.

Let us not be guilty of falsehood in which we dedicate ourselves to the heaven-born king. To baptize by less than three actions, while pronouncing the three names of the Holy Trinity, according to the formula in the commission, is to dissemble in the face of the omnipotent. Therefore in performing the sacred rite of baptism let us give to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost the honor due them.

It can plainly be demonstrated from the Scriptures of divine truths, that deity from eternity subsisted in three persons. For proof of this I will just refer the reader to the first chapter of Genesis, 26th verse: "and God said, let us make man in our own image, after our likeness." You will observe that the words "us" and "our" are in the plural number; this, no sane man will deny.

The inspired Apostle Paul, compared baptism to a burial; and all who are acquainted with language, must acknowledge, that bury means to conceal, or hide; so that the subject in baptism is concealed by trine, as well as by single immersion. And as baptism is an institution of heaven, and not after the traditions of men, it is an impenetrable difficulty for some minds to comprehend the mode of baptism. We claim that according to the construction of the Savior's language, it requires an emersion into each name of the Holy Trinity.—The revelation of the Father Son and Holy Spirit, is not more clear and distinct than are the offices performed by the glorious Three—one in the reconciliation of fallen humanity.—The Father originates all; the Son executes all; and the Holy Spirit consummates all. Eternal volition and design is the office of the Father; reconciliation, the office of the Son; and sanctification, the office of the Holy Spirit. This we have beautifully illustrated in 1st Peter 1: 2, "Elect according to the fore-knowledge of God the Father, through the sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience, and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." These three bear record in heaven, according to their official agencies, and are one according to the knowledge of God. Thus we are plainly taught in his sacred Word; and therefore we honor each alike by being immersed once in each name of the Holy Trinity by baptism.

But says one, "the apostle says, One Lord, one faith, and one baptism; and that baptism means one immersion, hence there is but one immersion, and not three. What preposterous ideas some men have in regard to Scripture! Jesus said: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me."—Hence you will perceive that they only believed in the one,—God,—which was contrary to his requisition, which is to believe in the one Lord also; and if they had believed in the one Lord also, they would still have had but one faith; for Paul says, there is but one faith. Therefore the all-perfect, did not require two faiths in asking them to believe on him, or on the two names. Christ says: "I and the Father are one;" and yet he so emphatically entreats them to believe also in him, as well as in the Father.
